A Preacher's Farewell.

A country minister in a certain location took permanent leave of his congregation in the following pathetic manner:

"Brothers and sisters, I have come to say good-bye. I don't think God loves this church, because none of you ever die. I don't think you love one another, because I never marry any of you. I don't think you love me, because you have not paid my salary; your donations are mouldy fruit and wormy apples and 'by their fruits ye shall know them.'

"Brothers, I am going away to a better place. I have been called to be chaplain of a penitentiary. Where I go ye cannot come, but I go to prepare a place for you, and may the Lord have mercy on your souls. Good-bye."—Exchange.

Shylock Up to Date.

An old Jew attended a meeting called to settle the affairs of a merchant who had failed for a large amount. The merchant stated the situation to his creditors—that his liabilities were $100,000 and his assets absolutely nothing.

"Who owns the house in which you live?" asked one creditor.

"My wife," was the reply.

"And that farm in the country?"

"My daughter."

"And the store over there on the corner?"

"My son owns that gentlemen, and I must reiterate, that I have nothing, nothing except my body, which you can divide among you."

"Vell, shentlemen," spoke up that thrifty son of Abraham, "if you do dot, I speaks right now for his gall."

Lawzeel the things that's on my mind,
To ponder an' debate!
I wonder if I'll ever find
The time to get them straight.
I hadn't more'n half-way got
The Philippines arranged
Than in a minute—like a shot—
The Asyun maps were changed.
I sometimes think
A fust-class plan
Is, let things run
The best they can.

The bold Bulgarrian an' Turk,
They quarreled an' they fit.
I'd only got my mind to work
When they—by jinks, they quit!
The English—I ain't figured out.
If they should drop free trade.
They need our goods, beyond a doubt—
An' they are foreign made.
I sometimes say
It's just as well
To let things run,
An' time will tell.

Then there's the Cuby question. Why,
Some say it means a loss—
This reciprocity—but I,
I say, let's recipross!
An' now we're mixed with Pannyma.
Where that canal's to be.
Some says it's all again' the law—
In fact, it puzzles me.
It's just as long
As it is wide.
It seems to me,
To let things slide.

There's Cuby, Chiny, Pannyma,
An' Turkey an' the rest—
I've got to take 'em—done or raw—
An' let my mind digest
These questions, till it's all made up—
An' when I say my say
Somebody's sure to interrupt
With, "What's eggs wuth to-day?"
I don't know but
The wisest plan
Is, let things run
The best they can.

A Queer Coasting-Party.

It was Evelyn's first visit to California. Uncle Fred lived near the Sierra Madre Mountains, and the ride from the station took them up and down some very steep hills. Evelyn was tucked into the back seat between her cousins, George and Alice.

"These are the foot-hills of the mountains," George explained, as the horses began climbing another long slope. Evelyn drew a deep breath as she looked off toward the high mountain range in the distance, and then at the sparkling stream of water that went dashing over a rocky bed not far from the road.

"It's beautiful," she exclaimed, and then after a moment she added, "but don't it seem queer to have it always summer? The greatest fun we have is coasting. I don't see how any boy or girl could get along without that!"

Then George and Alice both spoke at once. "But we do coast," they said. And then they laughed merrily at Evelyn's look of astonishment.

"I don't see how you can coast without snow!" she exclaimed.

"You shall see," said Uncle Fred, as he turned the horses and drove toward a rambling house.

After that Evelyn forgot all about the coasting in Aunt Fanny's greeting, and in all the interesting things the children began to show her about the place, to say nothing of the delicious supper, which was soon ready for them.

George was determined that Evelyn should not go back to Minnesota with the idea that there was anything in that state which was ahead of California. So one morning he suggested to Alice that they get up a coasting party for that afternoon. Evelyn listened with very wide-open eyes, and was inclined to think at first that they were joking her. But they finally persuaded her that they were in earnest, only they would not tell her how or where they were to coast, and you may imagine that she was about as curious a girl as could have been found in all California for the next four or five hours.

George had disappeared, "to drum up the coasting-party," as Alice explained, and he did not come back until noon.

"They'll be here by two o'clock," he announced upon his return. "I asked Will Baldwin and Mamie, and Ned and Esther Green. It's better not to have too many on the hill, and they can all come."

"Let's go out and get the sleds ready," said George, and off he ran to the shed, with two girls following close to his heels. Evelyn's wonder grew with every minute, and it was only when George came out of the shed dragging a real sled that she felt thoroughly sure that it was not a joke, after all.

The sled which George brought out was not quite like those she was used to, but it was so much like them that she would have called it a sled at once, even if she had come upon it unexpectedly here in California. The runners were twice as broad on the bottom as those on her sled at home, and they were made from smoothly polished wood without any steel. The top of the sled had several crosspieces instead of one board. The back piece was wide enough for a seat, and those in front were far enough from it for the feet to rest upon. At the side of the sled was a stick which George explained was used for a brake to check the speed of the sled when the hill was too steep.

"Now for the hill!" exclaimed George, when the others came; and taking the sleds under their arms, off they started.

A ten minutes' walk brought them to the top of a long hill, which sloped away as if it might have been made expressly for coasting, and down its entire length Evelyn could trace a shining path but little wider than the sleds which they carried. But it was not a path of ice or of snow; it was just grass, yellow and glistening in the sunlight, and it looked as smooth and as slippery as any ice could look. And then Evelyn began to comprehend.

Of course the track had not always been there on the hillside, because all about them the same glistening, yellow grass stood waving at them in the breeze. During the forenoon the boys had been out and "made the track."

George went down first, to "show Evelyn how," and then as soon as George's sled was well out of the way, she was spinning down the hill after him.

It was really wonderful how fast the sled could go, and Evelyn, who had had the use of the brake explained to her, found it necessary to use it.

"Just think of coasting, mamma," said Evelyn that night, "when it is so warm that even a sunbonnet is a burden!"—Julia Darrow Cowles, in Youth's Companion.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

I wrote to Bro. F. M. Rains, Sec. of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, Sec. the National Benevolent Ass'n of the Christian Church, asking each to tell us of some orphan whom we may be able to support. Bro. Rains writes from Cincinnati (I quote just enough for our purpose, so if it doesn't sound flowing, you will understand it is not his fault, but mine); "I have read 'With the Children' with much interest. I think the orphan plan of the Advance Society an admirable one. Miss Kate T. Johnson has just taken into her home a little girl whom she desires some one in America to support. The cost of supporting one of these girls is $35 a year. She has 10 or 12 in charge now. This is in Tokio, Japan. If you could not raise that much, why not adopt one of our orphans in Africa at $12 a year? Let us know what you wish, and we will procure the name, photo, and full particulars."

Mrs. Hansbrough writes of an orphan now in the Orphan Home of St. Louis. She says: "We have a dear little fellow whom I think would suit the Advance Society, exactly. About a year ago our matron was telephoned that there was a child at the Union Station for her. We were expecting an orphan on that train, so Mada, the girl, was sent after him. She brought him out to the Home, but had scarcely arrived when another message came that another child was waiting for us at the Union Station, and it was this second child who had been expected. The first child was a mystery, and no one knew why he had been sent. The matron examined his clothes, and pinned under his sailor collar was a piece of white cloth, on which was written, 'Joseph Adams, Age, four years.' There was no mention of parents, or place of birth. Inquiries were made. The matron of the Union Station said the conductor told her a man had put the child on the train, asking that it be sent to the Christian Orphans' Home at St. Louis. He had often brought orphans that way, so had asked no questions. He did not particularly notice the man, and could not even tell at what station the child had been put on the train. That is all we know of this orphan whom we call 'Little Joe.' He is a very lovable, bright child, and if the Advance Society could see him, they would fall in love with him. With kindest regards—Success to the Advance Society." (Which if not flowing as much as you think it should flow, remember I have condensed and omitted; and we thank both secretaries for their interest).

Last week I reported that we had $16.05, so we are safe on an African orphan, but I prefer a United Stateser—don't you? If we could just raise enough to support this little boy in St. Louis! Wonder if we could? It will cost lots more than we have raised. I have written for the very lowest figure, and if it can't be raised, we'll have to look elsewhere. All of you have not responded; and why don't you older people who read this, send us something? Try to want to and then do it.

Nannie D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky.: "I did not forget my verse this time, so send my report. Beryl Dinsmore, I appreciate your sympathy very much. I could have cried, too, but I just wouldn't, although I felt dreadfully at first. The plan about the orphan is splendid; Jean, Grandma and I send $2. I hope all will give; if each gives only 10 cents, it will make several hundred dollars." (Each never does a thing like that. Now we have $18.05).

Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo.: "I sent my report last quarter, but did not see my name on the Honor list. I am glad you make us keep strictly to the Advance Society rules; I find them a great help to me, but making out the report is hard. I was taken sick four years ago, and have not been able to attend school since. I hated to give it up. I like blue and old gold."

Earl Bundy, Madrid, Ia.: "I have been watching the Advance Society column for some time, and have decided to join. What are the rules? I intend to be at the Exposition." (Bible verse each day; and each week, 5pp. history, 30 lines poetry, quotation from a standard author; keep report in note book).

Emma S. Bland, Grayson, Mo.: "I am glad to write this time because I can ask you to put my name on the Honor list." (Put on last week). "The man that lived on our place lost all he had in a fire," (Emma S. lives on a farm) "so grandma, mamma, and my little cousin and I have been sewing carpet rags for the lady's carpet. It was very new to my cousin and myself so that made it very interesting." (When you have sewed carpet rags as long as I have—but there's no use discouraging anybody. Speaking of Grayson reminds me that the other day two Advance Society members from Grayson whom I had never seen, came to see me. You have all seen about them on this page—Grace and Evelyn Hord; and they brought a dollar for the orphan fund, too. We had a very pleasant conversation; they told how they kept house, and we compared notes on cooking, and I wouldn't have taken a dollar for the visit; that brings us $19.05).

Ada Miller, Sprague, Mo.: "I am working on my 3rd report, quarter. The history rule is the only hard one. I send 25 cents for the orphan, and should be glad to send more. I wish great success to this undertaking." ($19.30—watch it grow!)

Sarah Naylor, Parkville, Mo.: "I am ashamed to write without a report. I kept the rules 7 weeks and forgot my Bible verse; began again and hadn't missed a single rule for 5 weeks and forgot again. I haven't missed the verse reading since, but neglect some other rule from week to week. I'm going to school and have the best teacher you ever didn't see. Her name is Miss Vesta Kahn. I tried to get her to join our society, but she says she hasn't time." (Oh, tell her she Kahn find time). "Ethel Searcy is my seatmate; she is just as nice as ever, growing tall and better looking all the time. Inclosed find $1.00 from me and grandma for our orphan. I'll have a report to send in 12 weeks if nothing interferes." (Don't you interfere and we'll get the report. We are proud of your keeping on trying. And of the dollar. $20.30). "Old gold and blue are pretty society colors. You asked about the New Home Shaft. The mine is about 250 feet deep. The coal is 5 feet through. Quite a town is being built up now, consisting of 50 houses. The town is situated in a very pretty place." (Well, a town of that size, you could just put 'most anywhere). "A switch has been started from the shaft to the Frisco road; distance, about 3 miles. I am 15 and hardly have time for anything but my school work."

Nov. 13: "You kindly offer to outsiders the privilege of helping the Advance Society in the case of the orphan. Not being able to give much more than the nickel, and being very anxious to have a share in the work, four of us join together in sending a dollar, asking God's blessing upon it, though it is so little. We do not want any names in the paper, but just that the money be used for the orphan cause; or failing that for some other of Christ's work." (Fail? But we'll not fail! So said Lady Macbeth, and so says the Advance Society. Here are $21.30 toward our orphans and I hope by next week to be able to report more. Can't we make it at least $35? I believe we can. Let us all believe it. All you have to do is to exercise faith and pay your money.)

Sunday-schools should order their supplies early. If you are not using our supplies let us send you samples. We send free samples on receipt of request.

Sunday-school superintendents, it is time to begin preparing for your supplies for the coming year. Send your orders early to the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo.

Our Sunday-school supplies are prepared by editors who have had many years' experience as teachers in the Sunday-school. They know the needs of the Sunday-schools of to-day.

Remember this: If you are not familiar with our Sunday-school supplies we will send samples of our entire series on receipt of your request. We want to supply your school with its literature and will furnish samples free.

The mails are always crowded during the last few days of the year handling packages of all kinds. The crowded condition of mails sometimes delays our Sunday-school supplies. Orders should be sent in early so as to give ample time for mails to reach destination before beginning of next year.

Christian Lesson Commentary for 1904 is now ready. The Christian Lesson Commentary has appeared annually for many years past. It has aided thousands in the preparation and study of the Sunday-school lessons each year. The volumes for 1904 contains 407 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth binding, price $1.00 postpaid, or $9.00 per dozen not prepaid.

Our Sunday-school supplies are graded and are suitable for use by all grades in the school. The following is a list of our Sunday-school supplies:

The Round Table.
Young Evangelist.
The Little Ones.
Bible Lesson Leaves.
Our Young Folks.
Beginner's Quarterly.
Primary Quarterly.
Youth's Quarterly.
Scholar's Quarterly.
Bible Student.
Bible Lesson Picture Roll.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

The following auxiliaries are entitled to a place on last year's roll of honor: Montgomery, Slater, Lawson, West Plains, Lee's Summit, Central (St. Louis), Lamonte, Fourth (St. Louis), Lexington, Gower.

The conditions for place on roll of honor for 1903-04 are the same as last year.

1. Auxiliaries must report every quarter to state secretary.

2. Must observe C. W. B. M. day.

3. Must send at least 30 cents per member, each quarter to general fund.

4. Must send at least 15 cents per quarter to state treasurer for state work.

Let us have a longer list next year.

If the sisters want Missouri to go forward, they must send us money for state work. That is the fund which develops new workers and larger giving in old ones. At the Detroit Convention, the question of making the five cents per month for state work, a condition of membership in the auxiliary was discussed freely.

Some of us thought our auxiliary sisters ought to vote on the matter, and so the question will be before the auxiliaries soon. We know all of the progressive ones will be most heartily in favor of paying the 15 cents a month, in place of 10. Indeed a greater proportion of our sisters are doing so now.

A donation to state work of $5 from a brother at McGirk, Mo., is most acceptable.

The young ladies' missionary circle at Carrollton have sent $25 for Mattie Burgess' salary.

The "aid" at Cowgill have sent $5 for missions where most needed. C. W. B. M. day next. Send to Indianapolis for helps.

Every one who names the name of Christ, voluntarily accepts, not only the cup of salvation for himself, but the responsibility of doing his utmost to evangelize the world, or, he stands before the world, an "unworthy servant." Various other avenues are offered by the churches; the work of the local congregation, the Bible-school, the Home and Foreign societies, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions etc. Through the latter, the Master himself has placed upon every woman especially, the responsibility of doing something. First and best, give yourself, your presence, your purse, your prayers. Not one woman, able to give 15 cents a month is debarrd from doing this by identifying herself with the local auxiliary. A few may be unable to attend the monthly meeting, because of home and business duties. Even these can give their memory, and the influence of their names for this beautiful and well tried missionary effort.

From each one a money offering, according to her ability and love is expected, on C. W. B. M. day the first Sunday in December. We trust this will be a great year for the work of our young people. Our board have concluded that the small Junior Societies must have a chance to win a certificate as well as the large one. Heretofore, the society making the largest offering, received the certificate. The small bands had no hope of winning it. This year in the Young People's department, two certificates are offered. One to the society making the largest offering through the C. W. B. M. and one for the society making the largest offering per capita. All have a chance to win the latter, no matter how few in numbers they may be. These certificates are worth winning. We were very proud of last year's—won by the First Church Juniors of Kansas City—as it hung at the C. W. B. M. headquarters at Detroit, and was viewed by hundreds of people.

Every society that returns its report card promptly each quarter to Miss Mollie Hughes—will be placed on the "roll of honor," of Young People's department.

MRS. L. G. BANTZ.

The largest of this was the support of Bro. Alderman and family in Monterey. Immediately following came the news that, with him, life's sun had gone down at noon. For us the grief and loss; for him the eternal gain. He literally laid down his life for the cause, and speaks even more forcibly now than while yet with us. "Being dead he yet speaketh." The Mexico work will still be ours. Bro. Alderman's successor must be supported and the privilege of doing that is ours. May I urge faithfulness in all things? You have probably received Sister Bantz's letter asking for a general observance of C. W. B. M. day. It is a strong, earnest plea, full of excellent suggestions which I hope will not be disregarded. It also tells us news of Missouri's success in the work that should cause our hearts to sing for joy. Not as having already attained, but as going that way. It would gladden our hearts more than you know if every auxiliary in the state would observe C. W. B. M. day. Once more let me ask that you be faithful in this and all things.

$5,000 in the Jamaica Relief Fund!

I am glad to be able to announce that a little over $5,000 has been received to date, Nov. 18, for Jamaica Relief. And now the fund should be brought up to ten thousand dollars. Churches and individuals all over our broad land that have not yet contributed should do so—that this Jamaica Relief Fund may be added to week by week until the $10,000 is reached.

C. E. Randall, in a letter just received, writes of the destitution and suffering among our brethren on the island. And five or six months must yet elapse before they can expect return from the soil. We must tide them over the next few months, sustain, encourage and help them to start in life again. This is a work of mercy which cannot fail to appeal to all. And the chapels must be rebuilt. This work of building will soon be commenced and the people given work on these buildings, and hence relief.

Do not feel that because five thousand dollars has been reached that this work is done. There are hundreds of churches which have not yet contributed to this fund which will gladly raise and send an offering now, to the end that this Jamaica Relief Fund may be increased week by week until ten thousand dollars is reached. We should not raise a less fund than this.

Send contributions for Jamaica Relief to Helen E. Moses, Sec., 152 East Market St., Indianapolis, Ind.

MORNING PRAYER.

(A Hebrew Melody.)

O Lord! my life was known to Thee
Ere Thou hadst caused me yet to be,
Thy Spirit ever dwells in me.

Could I, cast down by Thee, have gained
A standing-place, or, if restrained
By Thee, go forth with feet unchained?

Hear me, Almighty, while I pray,
My thoughts are in Thy hand alway,
Be to my helplessness a stay.

O may this hour Thy favor yield,
And may I tread life's battle-field
Encompassed by Thy mercy's shield.

Wake me at dawn Thy name to bless,
And in Thy sanctuary's recess
To praise and laud Thy holiness.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

We Americans are so sure that the recent Alaskan boundary decision gave us only our just dues, that it is interesting to note the grounds of the almost unanimous Canadian protest. In the December issue of "The World To-day" an able Canadian writer gives what he calls "A Canadian View of the Alaskan Award." He gives three reasons why the Canadians are sure they are right: First, the fact that the United States declined to submit the question to arbitration before an impartial tribunal, but preferred to submit the original treaty for interpretation to a board representing the two parties to the controversy; second, the fact that men connected with the administration were selected to represent America on this board; third, the fact that, when the Americans had won over the Chief Justice of England to their view of the case, the two Canadian members still protested. One is surprised to note that, if this writer correctly represents the case, Canadians do not think Canada is entitled to the disputed territory because a reasonable interpretation of the treaty defining the boundary gives it to her, but base their protest solely upon the manner in which the United States and Great Britain have proceeded in settling the dispute. We do not for an instant doubt the good faith of our Canadian neighbors in making their claim to the disputed strip, but (from our point of view) the case looks so plain in our favor that we would be interested to hear the Canadian arguments on the merits of the question. In 1825 a treaty was drawn between Russia and Great Britain as the sovereign powers respectively of Alaska and Canada. This treaty defined the boundary between the two dominions in terms which were not at that time considered ambiguous. Only one interpretation was placed upon them by both parties, and the British and Russian maps agreed. Later, the United States bought Alaska and succeeded to whatever had been conveyed to Russia by the treaty of 1825. Still the maps were unchanged. Russia, Great Britain and the United States all agreed on the location of the boundary line, and upon that basis the purchase was made. But now after seventy-five years, Canada conceives the idea that the terms of the treaty of 1825 might be differently interpreted to her advantage. The case reminds one of the announcements which appear periodically in the newspapers, to the effect that the discovery of some land patent a century or two old shows that some family, which had never suspected its good fortune, is the rightful owner of several square miles in the heart of New York or Philadelphia or St. Louis. But somehow nothing ever comes of these belated discoveries.

It is not really a matter of much consequence, but the revolutionists in San Domingo have completed their successful campaign by capturing the capital after a siege and bombardment. President Wos y Gil and his cabinet have taken refuge on a German gunboat. Most of the foreign consulates are being guarded by marines. Minister Powell, representing the United States, has refused to recognize the provisional government—a somewhat striking contrast to the promptness of the administration in recognizing the new Republic of Panama. The cases, however, are widely different. The revolution in Panama had some meaning and value to the world. It was obviously to the advantage of world-wide commerce, since it seemed to be the only means of clearing the way for the construction of the canal. Even that minority of foreign opinion which criticizes the President for recognizing Panama is either secretly or openly glad that he did so. But as to San Domingo, nobody outside of the island cares whether it is ruled by one or another military dictator. Its republican form of government in any case is purely nominal. Every revolution, of course, raises its sonorous war-cry about liberty and honor, but neither of these has anything to do with the matter. It is all a grab for the spoils of office, so far as the leaders are concerned; for their followers, there is, perhaps, a succession of vain and broken hopes that the next administration will be a little better than the last. Why should the civilized powers take the side of one faction against another, further than to see that certain rules of the game are not too flagrantly disregarded? San Domingo narrowly escaped annexation to the United States in 1870, under General Grant. A treaty to that effect was negotiated and signed, but was killed in the Senate by a tie vote. The United States was, perhaps, more fortunate than San Domingo in that event, but some day the civilized powers will grow tired of watching these children play their game of government so roughly and will make them stop breaking their toys.

The Cuban Senate has approved a bill for the establishment of a lottery to be controlled by the government for the raising of public revenue. Such things as this remind one very forcibly that Cuba is an infant republic in more senses than one. Its government is new among the family of nations, and its people are new in civilization. If they were not, they would not talk about enriching themselves with a lottery. Setting aside the moral phase of the question—and everyone knows that a lottery is a demoralizing institution because it fosters the gambling spirit and is a foe to sober industry—the thing is so foolish, so utterly puerile, that the approval of it by the Senate comes as an unpleasant reminder of Cuba's moral and intellectual puerility. A lottery is, of course, tremendously profitable. That simply means that the price of the tickets is not adjusted to the amount of the prizes in true proportion to the chance of winning. If, for example, the prize were equal to a thousand times the cost of a ticket, and each ticket-holder had one chance in a thousand of winning the prize, then it would be fair to the patrons, but there would be no profit in it for managers of the lottery. It would be gambling even then, but fair gambling according to the mathematical theory of probabilities. But that is not what is proposed. It is proposed to establish a lottery for profit—that is, one in which the chances will be against the patrons. The Cuban people, through their representatives, agree to establish—and, of course, to patronize—a concern which will cheat them out of a great quantity of money and will then turn back a part of this money into the public treasury. And this is their idea of finance! Well, we must not be too hard on them. It is not very long since our infamous Louisiana lottery was doing a flourishing business protected by law. A century ago the most enlightened people considered the lottery a legitimate and effective scheme for raising money

It is not surprising that Cuba, under Spanish Catholic control, has not enjoyed the same development of moral ideas which has been witnessed in more favored regions. To this day, the Catholic element, even in this country, is the chief defender of lotteries and raffles. But Cuba will learn.

The report of Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Bristow, who has been investigating the scandals in the post-office department, was made public last Sunday, together with a comment on it by the President. Mr. Bristow's report is an exhaustive document. The chief facts of the report are summarized by the President in these words: "The investigation made by Mr. Bristow discloses a condition of gross corruption in the office of the first assistant postmaster general, and in that of the assistant attorney-general for the post office department. In the case of the superintendent of free delivery, Machen, the evidence shows that his misconduct began immediately after his appointment in September, 1893. In the case of the general superintendent of salaries and allowances, Beavers, it began soon after he was appointed to that place, in 1897. In the case of Assistant Attorney-General Tyner, it has gone on for a number of years, but it is impossible to say exactly when it began. A melancholy feature of the case is that, with one exception, all the offenders have been for a number of years in the government service." During the ten years through which these frauds have been running, there have been repeated investigations by order of Congress, but so well did the guilty parties conceal the evidences of their crime that each time they escaped detection. One striking fact is that the amount realized by the corrupt officials as the price of their treachery was only a small per cent of the amount lost by the government. The outside parties who paid the bribes took most of the profits. For example, Machen realized $26,000 from the Groff letter-box fastener which cost the government $130,000 and was of no use whatever. Beavers received less than $20,000 for introducing the automatic cashier, which caused the department a dead loss of $74,000. Barrett received $6,000 from Arnold for the protection of his get-rich-quick scheme, and Arnold swindled the public out of $3,000,000. The corrupt officials realized in all less than $400,000, while the loss to the government must have been millions.

President Roosevelt's note commenting on Mr. Bristow's report is a vigorous document. It will be remembered that he received little encouragement from Postmaster General Payne in beginning this investigation, and that Mr. Payne made merry over the subject even after all disinterested persons were convinced that there were grave irregularities in the department. Mr. Payne's course at that time was about as wise as that of the engineer who sat on the safety-valve to prevent an explosion. But the President did not allow the Postmaster General to sit on the safety-valve. He opened it wide by the Bristow investigation. Here are some of the President's words which are particularly significant, coming at the end of a strict investigation of a department of his own administration:

"The immediate reformation of the service by the turning out of the offenders is not in itself enough to meet the demands of justice. The cases against both those within and those without the post office department, who by their acts have brought themselves within the grasp of the law, will be pushed with the utmost vigor. Every effort must be made to see that both the delinquent official and the outsider who shares his guilt are punished to the limit of the law. In pursuance of this policy the individuals enumerated have been indicted.

"In no case has the indictment been sought save where the officials of the government were convinced of the man's guilt; and in every case the government will exhaust every expedient in its power in the effort to see that justice is meted out to the offenders.

"On this question, and on all others like it, we can afford to have no division among good citizens. In the last resort good laws and good administration alike must rest upon the broad basis of sound public opinion. A dull public conscience, an easy-going acquiescence in corruption, infallibly means debasement in public life, and such debasement in the end means the ruin of free institutions. Self-government becomes a farce if the representatives of the people corrupt others or are themselves corrupted. Freedom is not a gift which will tarry long in the hands of the dishonest or of those so foolish or so incompetent as to tolerate dishonesty in their public servants. Under our system all power comes from the people, and all punishment rests ultimately with the people.

"The toleration of the wrong, not the exposure of the wrong, is the real offense."

The immediate result has been the indictment of thirty-one persons, ten of whom are officials in the post office department. Another result of the publication of so exhaustive a report will probably be to render unnecessary a congressional investigation. It is to the credit of the administration that it has conducted its own investigation with convincing thoroughness. The political results will be far less than they would have been if the administration had shown any reluctance to have an investigation. Mr. Payne's attitude must be charged against himself and not against the administration. We think, however, that the country at large and the Republican party in particular would not be overwhelmed with regret if Mr. Payne should discover that pressing private duties rendered it impossible for him to remain longer in the public service. Perry Heath, who retired from the office of First Assistant Postmaster-General in July, 1900, is charged with having received $20,000 in stock for his influence in having a certain cancelling machine adopted by the department. He is now secretary of the Republican National Committee. His resignation from that office ought to be promptly accepted, whether he offers it or not. If the Republican national organization does not make haste to rid itself of the spoilsmen, its credit will be seriously affected.

Lieut. Hobson has prepared a bill which he wishes to have submitted to Congress, authorizing a vast scheme of naval construction. He proposes an expenditure of $2,750,000,000 for new vessels during a period of eighteen years. His idea is to make our navy the strongest in the world. Very good. But what would England and Germany be doing while we were carrying out this beautiful scheme? The trouble about this project is, that it is a game which more than one can play, and when everybody plays it nobody wins.

Brevities.

Speaker Cannon has made an important departure from precedent, and a very proper one, in allowing the minority leader of the House, Mr. Williams, of Mississippi, to name the Democratic members of the standing committees.

Senator Morgan has been making one of his famous long-distance speeches on the canal question. His unswerving fidelity to the Nicaragua route is about the only remaining obstacle in the way of constructing the canal across Panama.

The Chicago street car strike has been settled. In most points the settlement is favorable to the company. The wage scale is to be arbitrated if the men wish, and they are offered their choice between two time schedules, neither of which is considered bad. The old employees who struck will be taken back, except those who used violence during the strike.

For several years there has been a stream of emigration from the central and northwestern states to the western provinces of Canada. The volume of this emigration is constantly increasing, and while it is taking from the United States thousands of its most valuable class of citizens—namely, the sturdy and enterprising farmers of the middle west—a corresponding advantage is noted by some in the inevitable Americanization of this part of Canada. We are not nearly so anxious about Canadian annexation as some of our fellow countrymen are, but those who are interested in it can find some satisfaction in the increase of the American element in Canada.

Elements of New Testament Evangelism.

In the last analysis it is not a question of old or new evangelism, of wide or deep evangelism, but of true evangelism, which, of course, is the evangel of the New Testament—the story of Christ—told with the illuminating and life-giving power of the Holy Spirit, by men who themselves had experienced its regenerating influence. Let us inquire as to the nature of this evangelism as we see it in actual operation in the New Testament. What are some of its essential elements?

The first and most important element of New Testament evangelism is the wonderful gospel story. There is nothing like it in all the literature of the world, and there is nothing that equals it in winning the attention and in melting the hearts of men. There is no substitute for it. It is the best news human ears ever heard. It is the sweetest song that angels or mortals ever sung. Whoever tells that story, with a tongue on fire with love, wields an omnipotent power. It is the story of the heavenly Father's love, pouring itself out on a sinful world by the sacrifice of an only-begotten Son. It is the story of One who existed in the form of God, clothed with a dignity and glory and majesty which entitled him to the worship of angels, but yet counted not this being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped and held as the chiefest good, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant and being found in fashion as a man, that he might better reveal the father-heart of God, and open up the way of salvation for a sinning and perishing race. Being rich, he became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be rich.

What other facts possess so much significance, so much dynamic power? They revolutionize one's views of God and of human life. They point out infinite possibilities for the human soul. There can be no true evangelism without much emphasis upon these great fundamental facts to which the apostles and first preachers of the gospel attached so much value.

It may be a question whether there is not a lack, in this respect, in much of our modern evangelism. It may be said that these facts are old and familiar to the people, and that they are weary of them and demand something new. On the contrary, the human heart is crying out to-day, as it always has,

"Tell me the old, old story
Of Jesus and his love."

It is never wearisome except when repeated without force or fervor.

Of course it is not a mere recital of these facts that constitute the preaching of the gospel in New Testament sense. These facts have their interpretation in the New Testament, and it is this interpretation which gives them their vital importance. Not simply the fact of Christ's birth must be stated, but its significance, as God coming into humanity; Emanuel, or God with us. There is the fact of his sinless life and his wonderful works. How are these to be accounted for? There are the transcendent facts of his death and his resurrection from the dead. What do these facts mean for mankind, as touching the question of remission of sins and their bearing on the future life? His ascension—why was it "expedient" and what is its bearing on the gift of the Holy Spirit and on the future church? The apostles, guided by the Holy Spirit, interpreted these facts both in their preaching and in their letters to the churches. What grander themes for human thought, for the noblest eloquence, than those we find here?

These facts, interpreted in the light of the New Testament, imply certain duties and obligations on the part of the man who accepts them as facts. These commands and duties are of two kinds—those which are necessary in leading an alien sinner from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's Son, and those which relate to his duties, privileges and obligations as a citizen of the kingdom of God. All this is a part of the gospel. In the New Testament there is no uncertain sound in either one of these departments of duty. There was no emphasis upon one single command to the neglect of others. Men were required everywhere, in the light of these gospel facts, to believe on the Lord Jesus, to turn away from their sins, to make open confession of their faith and penitence, both with the mouth and in the transitional and initiatory act of baptism. They were then to deny themselves all ungodliness and to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world, growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, and bringing forth the fruit of the Spirit in their lives. They were not only required, through prayer and study of the Scriptures, to perfect themselves in godliness, but to co-operate, to the fullest extent of their ability, in carrying this gospel to the ends of the earth.

So much as to the message which constitutes the core of New Testament evangelism. In other articles we shall point out some other elements which enter into the evangelism of the New Testament.

We are in receipt of very frequent inquiries from preachers seeking churches and churches seeking preachers. Sometimes we are at a loss to determine, from the language used, whether a personal answer is desired or an announcement in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. In such cases, where no stamp is enclosed for reply, we usually assume that an announcement in the paper is desired. Our Ministerial Exchange is freely open to preachers and churches seeking pastorates and pastors.

An Associate Membership.

Recent events have brought into prominence the subject of "associate membership" in our churches, and the question has been raised as to whether the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST favors it. For answer, we reprint here the leading editorial of our issue of Jan. 23, 1902. Our position on this point has been a consistent one. We are in favor of any practical plan of holding under our influence those who differ with us on the question of baptism, and of bringing them into co-operation with us so far as the common elements of our faith afford a basis for a common work. Such a plan as that of "fraternal associates" involves no surrender of our plea, and is already in use in more than one church among us. But we are opposed to "associate membership" or any other sort of membership except the one only and original sort into which a penitent sinner enters through faith, repentance and baptism. The two things are distinctly different.

[Editorial on "An Associate Membership," Jan. 23, 1902.]

"What shall be our attitude toward the pious unimmersed?" is a question which demands frequent answer. It would be easy to say, if we believed in baptismal regeneration, that the unimmersed will be unconditionally damned. But we do not believe it. It is easy to put the question aside by saying that God in his mercy may find some way of saving those who have honestly tried to do his will, even though they may not have obeyed him in baptism as we understand it. But this reliance on the uncovenanted mercies is really an evasion. We can, to be sure, leave to God the question as to what will be his attitude toward the pious unimmersed, but we cannot evade the question as to what should be our attitude toward them.

At a recent meeting of a group of ministers, it was suggested that the best solution for the problem presented by the pious unimmersed, would be to receive them as "associate members" of the church on a profession of their faith in Christ. The chief reasons urged in favor of this procedure were that it would afford a means of keeping in touch with those who would unite with the church were it not that they cannot accept our view of baptism; that it would keep such persons under the influence of our teaching and enlist them in active Christian work under our leadership; that it would be an expression of the recognition which Christian character demands and receives from all of us; and that it would ultimately result in most of these associate members accepting our position fully and coming into regular membership.

It was gratifying to note that in the discussion which this suggestion called forth, there was no disposition manifested to minimize the importance of baptism or to apologize for our insistence upon it. Two questions were raised with regard to the suggested "associate membership." First, would the plan be out of harmony with the New Testament authority upon which we depend absolutely for the model of the church? Second, if not in conflict with authority, would it be expedient?

First, is it contrary to the New Testament? Of course the New Testament contains no suggestion of anything like an associate membership—any more than it does of an Endeavor Society or a Christian Woman's Board of Missions. In New Testament times the class did not exist which the associate membership is designed to reach—viz., those whose Christian character and faith in Christ are unquestionable but who are handicapped by the inheritance of several centuries of teaching that infant sprinkling is Christian baptism. The fact that this class has come into existence since apostolic days, certainly warrants the use of special efforts to reach it. But an associate membership? We think not. We do not see how there can legitimately be more than one kind of members in a church. Persons who have complied with the New Testament conditions can and should be full and complete members. Others cannot be members of any sort, if we are to continue our plea along the old lines. We do not in the slightest degree doubt the entire loyalty of the brother who suggested the associate membership plan, and we are with him in his desire to have more fraternal relations with those devout but erring ones who are not of our fold. But it occurs to us that this ought to be done in some way which will not even appear to disregard any of the authorized conditions of church membership—faith, repentance and baptism.

Second, is it expedient? If contrary to authority, the question of expediency is, of course, ruled out. But in any case the plan could not be approved as expedient until its probable results in two directions have been considered. Would it have the effect of winning the associate members generally into full membership? Perhaps. It would depend on circumstances too numerous to discuss here. But, would not the announcement of this plan create general confusion, alarm the brethren in many quarters, precipitate strife and produce much misunderstanding of our position? Such results would not improbably follow, and they are to be considered as a part of the total result in deciding whether the plan would be expedient.

On the whole, it appears to us that the establishment of an associate membership for the pious unimmersed would be an unwarrantable tampering with the authorized conditions of membership, and would produce more discord than harmony. But why could not some of these objections be removed—and perhaps all of them—by avoiding the term "membership?" Since it is not proposed to make the unimmersed real members, why call them members, even with a qualifying adjective? Certainly, no one would object to having them as regular attendants at all services, as contributors, as workers in many departments of church work. The work itself would keep them interested. If the need of closer organization is felt, form a league or guild or club and make them members of that. In that way all the desired results of associate membership in the church would be achieved, and the misunderstandings and entangling alliances growing out of it would be escaped.

The "fraternal associate" plan which we once proposed is totally different from associate membership if the latter means the reception of the unimmersed into all the privileges of the church. We are willing to give everybody all the privileges to which they are entitled, but the privilege of membership in Christ's Church is not ours to give.

The Joplin Meeting.

In another place will be found a report by the pastor, W. F. Turner, and the evangelist, W. E. Harlow, of the great meeting which has just been completed at the First Christian Church in that city. The statements of these two men are characteristically modest, and furnish at once a clue to the success of the meeting. In addition to these reports we have received a copy of the Joplin Daily Globe for Tuesday, Nov. 24, containing a four-column article giving account of the meeting, with pictures of the church building, the evangelist and his singer and the pastor. All this shows how profoundly the entire community has been stirred by this meeting.

The evangelist and pastor have told the secret of the success of this meeting. The ground was prepared, the way of the Lord had been made ready. The personal life and teaching of the pastor had been such as to command the approval and win the respect of the people of the city. Little can be done for a cause, no matter how good it is, that has been trampled in the mire by wicked or unwise men. It is a long and slow process, disabusing the mind of the public in such a case. But here the soil was ready; the church already held a place of honor in the community. It had erected a building worthy of the cause it represented, and it had invited and entertained a state convention of Christian workers of the same body, which impressed the community with its vigorous, aggressive power and its evangelical character. Then comes the evangelist. If the pastor had been wise in preparing the way for the meeting, he was no less wise in selecting his evangelist. He was a man who had labored in that part of the state; he knew the people, and he, having himself been a toiling man, was in perfect sympathy with "the common people" and their needs. He is a man of kindly nature, of strong sympathy with, and love for, humanity, a clear knowledge of the gospel and its adaptation to the needs of men, and a winning personality, that makes the gospel winsome. He was accompanied and assisted by a singer whose gospel songs found their way to the hearts of the people. Is it a wonder that such a combination of men and of conditions should result in a great ingathering?

The problem which presents itself at the close of such a meeting is, how shall this large number of young converts be kept interested and developed into strong, active Christian workers? As an indication that this matter has received and is receiving due consideration, from both pastor and evangelist, we take the liberty of quoting from a letter received from Brother Turner:

We are overwhelmed with emotion at the victory. It was all accomplished so quietly and with such good will that we can hardly realize what has happened. No undue pressure was used at all. We simply opened the church, preached the gospel and the people came. Let me thank you for your good letter suggesting special care of the new members. I have thought and prayed over this much. Brother Harlow and I have talked it over by the hour. We have arranged for two great midweek services. One will be a new converts' meeting on Monday night of each week, where they will be drilled in a knowledge of the Bible and taught how to pray and take part in the public activities of the church. The other will be on Thursday night, and will be conducted along similar lines for all. God has given us these people, and with his help we will care for them. I may say that they have been already well grounded in the faith by Brother Harlow. You know his style of preaching. He is a teacher. This church now numbers nearly 1,300. But letters will shortly be granted to quite a number who will unite at South Joplin. The church by unanimous vote has called me indefinitely and increased my salary $300.

We are sure that the information contained in the foregoing extract will give unalloyed satisfaction to the brethren everywhere. We trust it will do more than that—that it will inspire other churches and other pastors to make similar provisions for the care and edification of young converts. It is the failure to do this that has brought meetings with large ingatherings into some disrepute. There may be lack, in some cases, of proper instruction on the part of the evangelist, but we dare say the fault is quite as often in the lack of any adequate plans for pastoral and religious instruction after the meeting. It is a comfort to know that in this case the evangelist did his work faithfully, and that it is to be supplemented by systematic efforts to train the young converts in Christian life and work. We shall watch the results with interest.

We congratulate the pastor, the evangelists and the church at Joplin on this wonderful manifestation of His grace and the saving power of the gospel.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The varied circumstances under which this department is written often make its title, "Easy Chair," amusingly inapplicable. Here we are, for instance, waiting at a railroad station for a train, and writing against time. We have been on the wing for nearly a week, and there is another week's winging ahead of us. But no matter. The "Editor's Easy Chair" must appear on schedule time, whether the train is late or not. Else what would they do who say, "I always turn to the 'Easy Chair' the first thing?" That may be done on the principle that many people act upon, that when you have an unpleasant duty to perform, do it at once and have it over. At any rate, the "Easy Chair" would be missed, and our readers would wonder where the editor was, and what he was doing to pass away the time, if it did not appear. A good sister told us recently that we wrote so well in the "Easy Chair" she wondered we did n't write more for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST! So this department must appear, if the editor is to receive any credit marks at all, whether the "Chair" be the Easy Morris, in the cosy den at "Rose Hill," or the, soft side of a bench at a country railway station.

But this is no country railway station, but the "Queen City" on the O-hi-o, which, an evangelist said, should be spelled and pronounced "Sin-sin-naughty!" But, as for that matter, the name of every great city in the country might be spelled in the same way. Now, when it is remembered that we are in Cincinnati, our readers can appreciate what self-denial we are practicing, sitting here writing these notes and other matter for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST instead of going up and having a delightful time with some of the chief brethren of the city. We might have a pow-wow with Brother Lord about how to save the reformation from the men who would side-track it on a denominational switch, or from those who pull it back into the ditch of anti-progressive, anti-society and ante-diluvian do-nothing-but-debate-ism, or who would steer it into the arid and unfruitful region of speculative rationalism. Then we might caucus with Brothers McLean and Rains about world-wide evangelism, and with Brothers Smith and Ranshaw about getting "Home Missions to the Front," and with that other Smith, the "Colored" one (C? C?), about the "Race Problem." We realize what a loss it is to all these brethren to be deprived of this interview, but we fear they do not! They are probably busy writing, just as we are, fearing the interruption of some caller, just as we are! As soon as we get this copy off we may "hello!" some of the brethren over the 'phone, to let them know how much they have missed by this inexorable demand upon our time, and to exchange fraternal greetings.

This town of Cincinnati held a much more prominent place, relatively, in our reformatory movement a third of a century ago than it does to-day. Our national conventions were held here as a matter of course, because few cities were able to entertain them. Well do we remember attending our first national convention in this city, and looking for the first time, with something of awe and veneration, upon the leading men of that period, who were gathered here in council. Nearly all of the distinguished men among us then have closed their earthly labors and passed on to their reward. Their names, their heroic deeds and sacrifices are unknown even now to thousands who are growing up in our churches enjoying the fruits of their labors. This is contrary to the scriptural injunction: "Remember them that had the rule over you, that spake unto you the word of God; and considering the issue of their life, imitate their faith." Let us not be so afraid of "man-worship" as to fail to hold in memory the great and good men through whom God has spoken to us the words of life. Let us not permit the now almost obsolete nickname of "Campbellite" to make us hesitate to honor and perpetuate the memory of that great and heroic reformer who, amid obliquy and persecution, wrought mightily for God, and to whom we all owe so much for our conceptions of the Bible, of Christ and Christianity. The fear of "St. Campbell" is a childish one, unworthy of a great and free people who are not in bondage to any man, much less to our enemies.

But if Cincinnati does not hold the same prominence in our movement it once did, it is because other cities have vastly increased in their membership, churches and general benevolences, and our cause has "gone west" at a rapid rate. Still, here are located the headquarters of our home and foreign missionary societies, and two of our most conservative [or radical—which?] religious journals. There is a point at which extreme conservatism becomes intense radicalism, and some of our journals have long since passed this limit. As to those referred to above it is still a question how they are to be classified. Their conservatism, if that be the right name, differs not so much in degree as in kind. So long as papers remain truly conservative they have their use and function in the church. We have no quarrel with conservatism until it reaches the point of obstructiveness to essential progress. So, with two staunch defenders of the faith in the way of religious journals, and with the headquarters of our missionary operations, Cincinnati is likely to remain on the map of our Zion for many years to come. And may peace dwell within her walls and prosperity within her palaces! Here is the hour-hand pointing to train time, and we are off for the east without the time to even "hello" our Cincinnati friends.

Notes and Comments.

The evangelistic season is now in full swing and the reports from the field are most gratifying. Already there have been some wonderful meetings with throngs of converts. Not less encouraging is the steady stream of additions by ones and twos at regular services. We especially request that ministers will send in reports of additions as promptly and accurately as possible, and that they will take particular pains to specify whether additions are by letter or by confession and baptism. Additions by letter mean only an increase in the forces of the local church. Additions by confession and baptism indicate a growth of the church universal. At any rate, send the news. Get the postal-card habit!

The American issue, of Columbus, Ohio devoted to the Anti-Saloon League movement, warns the politicians of Ohio that the Anti-Saloon people control more votes now than the saloons of that state. It claims that this has been demonstrated in the recent election. It will be a happy state of things, and a great gain to the cause of temperance, when this becomes true in every state in the Union, and when politicians and platform-makers shall fear the temperance, and moral sentiment of the people, more than they fear the opposition of the saloon element. Just as soon as this comes to be true, opponents of saloons will have no trouble in securing a recognition of their cause in party platforms.

We have received the annual report of the city mission committee of Kansas City, Mo. The churches of that city unite in the employment of Bro. F. L. Bowen as city evangelist, and he gives his entire time to a most efficient work with the six missions which the committee sustains. The Jackson Avenue Mission recently completed an $8,000 building, which was dedicated Oct. 4. The Ivanhoe Park Mission has a building in process of erection. The Budd Park Mission occupies a tabernacle on a leased lot. An interesting part of the city work, though not under the direction of this city mission committee, is "Bethany Commons," a social settlement, where from six to ten young people live at their own expense and let the light of practical Christianity shine out in a needy neighborhood. The city mission work in Kansas City is a commendable example of an efficient and successful handling of the pressing problems that confront us in the cities.

Man's Place in the Universe

By William Durban

A few months ago, great excitement was created in religious and literary circles by the appearance of an article on "Man's Place in the Universe," simultaneously in the London "Nineteenth Century" magazine and the New York Independent, from the pen of that eminent English scientist, Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace. It turns out that the article was a stormy petrel, for it has been followed by a wonderful volume, which has by no means allayed the excitement. The author is a notable personality. He is the man who rendered himself famous by discovering "Darwinism" simultaneously with Darwin himself, so that he shares with that great biologist the laurels of what some claim to be the greatest scientific theory of recent times. Dr. Wallace resides in the remote and picturesque village of Broadstone, in the county of Dorsetshire, which is identical with the ancient Wessex, so graphically described in Mr. Thomas Hardy's novels. Here he has a charming house laid out to his own designs. As the world knows, Dr. Wallace is first and foremost a spiritualist in the highest sense of that term. He asserts that he believes from supernatural evidence in an after life. He is 84 years of age, and though patriarchal in appearance, looks younger than he really is. Despite the large amount of time he devotes to writing and the study of science, more especially astronomy and spiritualism, he takes great interest in his beautiful garden. This extraordinary man has a remarkable personal resemblance to Ruskin. The sage is always ready to pass a cheery word or converse on topics that interest him. Unassuming in his manner, he is loved and revered by all who come into contact with him.

Glorifying Our Earth.

The object of Dr. Wallace in his new and sensational volume is to show that the whole universe exists simply to produce this central world of ours for human occupancy. He brings forward a marvelously well-arranged sequence of facts to demonstrate that our little world is practically the center of the universe, and that man is the highest form of created life. In support of this first point, a long and absorbing astronomical argument is developed, to show that we are situated very near the center of the vast system of which the Milky Way is the great encircling girdle, and probably revolving round that central point. Now the strange thing is that this belief is simply a revival of the idea which prevailed in early ages. It is found in all religious systems, the most primitive as well as the most advanced. The notion that the sun, moon and stars had been created as satellites of this earth, and that the universe was called into being to serve mankind, was entirely in sympathy with the Ptolemaic system of astronomy.

When, however, the discoveries of Copernicus, Tycho Brahe, Kepler and Galileo brought within our knowledge the vast extent of the universe and the insignificance of the earth, when compared with other great planets, this seemed to degrade man by removing his dwelling place, the earth, from the commanding central position it had always before occupied. Then the idea arose that these shining worlds were inhabited, and this belief soon gained as great a hold on the popular mind as its opposite had formerly done.

The Planetary Duel.

In the middle of the last century an animated controversy arose over the problem of inhabited or uninhabited stars and planets. In 1853, Dr. Whewell, the famous master of Trinity College, Cambridge University, published an epoch-making book, entitled "The Plurality of Worlds," in which he brought forward strong scientific arguments to prove that, "the earth's orbit being the temperate zone of the solar system," it was the only part of the universe where life was possible. But Dr. Whewell soon encountered formidable opposition. His chief antagonist was the equally eminent Sir David Brewster, who put forth an answer in his book, entitled "More Worlds than One, the Creed of the Philosopher and the Hope of the Christian."

The Brewster-Whewell debate lasted a considerable time. It cropped up in all sorts of strange directions. Even "Punch" took up arms against Brewster, and the following epigram might have been aptly quoted by Dr. Wallace, had he known about it:

Says Brewster to Whewell, "Let's fight a star duel,"

Though you're very cruel to raise such a strife;

What! Nature made worlds for mere lanterns or fuel!

I tell you, all planets are swarming with life."

Says Whewell to Brewster, "You old cock o' rooster,

Why will you anew stir the question with me?

Excepting our planet, creation's whole cluster,

Is as empty as you and your volume, Sir D."

The New Astronomy.

Of late years a new science of the stars, denominated astrophysics, has sprung up to reinforce the older science of astronomy. The new system is founded on the wonderful discoveries achieved by means of the spectroscope. In proving his contention, Dr. Wallace recounts in a lucid manner the principal astronomical discoveries since 1850, which was the date of the birth of the new astronomy. I may here mention that the late Richard Proctor, the popular astronomical lecturer who was so well known on both sides of the Atlantic, was prepossessed with the notion that the planets were the homes of departed spirits. This has been a very favorite idea with many of Dr. Proctor's followers. But strange to say, though Dr. Wallace is an ardent spiritualist, he dogmatically and elaborately argues that no sphere at all except this little earth is habitable, and he maintains that the new astronomy and all its professors support the doctrine that the earth is the abode of the highest created intelligence.

A Difficulty.

One result of spectroscopy is that the number and densities of the stars are known, and that the elements in the solar and stellar systems can be detected by means of the spectrum analysis. The laws that govern the other worlds seem to be identical with those that rule this planet, and therefore it might be supposed that there is nothing to hinder living organisms from inhabiting them. But it is at this point that Dr. Wallace raises his main contention. He lays down a category of the physical conditions essential to life, connected with heat, light, atmosphere and water. Then he occupies many of his pages in proving that the earth alone among the planets is constructed so as to fulfill these conditions. Taking in succession the typical planets of Mercury, Mars and Venus, he shows how far they are deficient in the essentials for the continuance of life. Thus, Mercury presents only one face to the sun, and it is therefore intensely hot on one side, and intensely cold on the other. Poor old planets! There is something the matter with each one, which renders it incapable of sustaining life. Dr. Wallace's conclusions are thus summed up: "That no other planet in the solar system than our earth is inhabited or habitable, that the probabilities are almost as great against any other sun possessing inhabited planets. That the nearly central position of our sun is probably a permanent one, and has been specially favorable, perhaps absolutely essential, to life development on the earth." Furthermore, Dr. Wallace does not believe the number of stars to be practically infinite. Indeed, he says the number of them is pretty definitely ascertained to be about 1,400,000,000.

A Disappointment.

Speaking for myself as an intensely interested student, I must express a mingled feeling of admiration and disappointment after carefully going through this singular volume. Early in my life, indeed while still a boy, I was profoundly impressed by reading a beautiful anonymous work, entitled, "Other Worlds than Ours." I have never been able to shake off the conviction produced in my mind by the author of that book, that this universe is so conditioned as to admit of universal life in every sphere contained in God's universe. I have carefully but vainly sought through the pages of Dr. Wallace's book for some admission that other orders of beings, suited to the varied environments constituted in different worlds, may be assumed to have been brought into life by the Deity who created man on this earth. There is surely something repellent to the ordinary mind in the idea of incalculably vast deserts in space, unoccupied by any races of beings able to worship the Creator. If the new astronomy is to exclude this possibility, then it will supersede political economy altogether, as a "dismal science." There is certainly nothing fascinating about this novel system of astrophysics. Already Dr. Wallace is meeting with strenuous opposition to his theory. For instance, while able astronomical scholars admit that the sun is near the central plane of the galaxy, they declare there is no reason for supposing it is nearer the center than innumerable other stars. Professor Turner, in his discussion of Dr. Wallace's paper in the "Fortnightly Review," points out that our solar system is not in a position of rest relative to the other stars. It is moving with enormous velocity. If, for instance, it were moving toward such a binary system as that of Sirius—and Sirius is about a million times farther from us than is the sun—the collision would take place in the relatively short period of a hundred thousand years. So that if there be a center of the visible universe, and if we occupy it to-day, we certainly did not do so yesterday and shall not do so to-morrow. It is difficult to see how this consideration can be evaded. We can not reject the sun's proper motion among the stars, nor can we hold that we are moving in an orbit of some kind around the center of gravity of a vast cluster. Every unprejudiced reader of Dr. Wallace's astonishing book must surely feel that he creates far more difficulties than he removes.

De Profundis.

By Thomas J. Clark.

Out of the depths my soul doth cry,
Whilst threat'ning clouds o'er me bend low.
Alone, unblest, I seem to tread
My rugged path, no helper nigh
To give me cheer; to make me know
To what meet end my feet are led.

The clouds roll by, the sunlight breaks,
My way more even grows. My soul,
Now calmed, by inward vision learns
Of conscious strength new gain'd; awakes
To duty's call; with brighter goal
Now brought to view, to toil returns.

The Blessed Man

BY G. F. ASSITER

(Psalm 32:1-2.)

A literal translation of this passage might read, "Oh the blessedness of the man whose transgression is forgiven," etc. The favors of which he is the recipient at God's hands, are many; hence the plural form of the word blessed. In this rendering, too, is indicated the source of these varied blessings: transgressions forgiven. The idea cannot be too strongly emphasized that all spiritual gifts and graces are subsequent to pardon. This will be seen also in the 103rd Psalm: "Bless the Lord, oh my soul, and forget not all his benefits; who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diseases, who redeemeth thy life from destruction and crowneth thee with loving kindness." What a catalogue of blessings: forgiveness, healing, redemption and crowning! But pardon stands first, and is the open sesame to all the others. No wonder that the Psalmist in wrapt contemplation of God's goodness, burst forth with loud exclamation: "Oh the blessedness of the man!" The first two verses of Psalm 32 point out with much force and clearness the completeness of Christ's work in the interests of the believer. His transgression is forgiven; his sin is covered; his iniquity is not imputed. This must not be regarded in the light of Hebrew parallelism, nor as mere tautology. Transgression is the crossing of a boundary; sin is the missing of a mark, and iniquity is that which is distorted. Each of these phases of moral evil needs to be dealt with. Transgression must be forgiven, sin must be covered while iniquity must not be imputed.

All this is effected in the interests of the blessed man, and the contemplation of his glorious condition may well inspire him to exclaim with holy rapture

"Who is a pardoning God like thee
And who hath grace so rich and free."

But who is this man? is the question of vital interest to us. Can such a condition of blessedness be ours, or was it something peculiar to the Psalmist. Beloved, it is yours if you are a Christian; for "David describeth the blessedness of the man unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works," Rom. 4:6. It is something that works cannot merit nor money purchase. It is the product of God's grace.

Dr. Garrison, in his incomparable little book, "A Modern Plea," complains of the shyness with which so many preachers speak of salvation by faith. I fear it is as nothing compared to the loud silence in respect of God's grace. The undue emphasis upon the manward side of justification is fast creating a large body of legalists whose harsh slogan has drowned the sweet melody of the Savior's "Come unto me and I will give you rest." An interesting study in grace is found in Eph. 1, where the subject seems to grow upon the apostolic vision, as he speaks of "grace" in verse 2, "glory of grace" in verse 6, "riches of grace" verse 7, and "exceeding riches of grace" in chap. 2, verse 7.

Thus far we have noticed the standing of the blessed man, let us consider briefly his state: "In whose spirit there is no guile." Rightly dividing the word of truth is of the utmost importance, not to the exegete only, but also to every child of God who seeks the mind of Christ made known in his word. The order of the divine truth is as important as the facts of the truth. It is therefore worthy of note that the guileless spirit with which the good man is endowed is the result and not the cause of his justification. He is saved not because he has a right spirit; he develops the latter only as he is conscious of his acceptance in the beloved. The believers standing is in Christ; his state is governed by the spirit dwelling in him, or in other words the work of Christ for him secures salvation, and the work of the spirit in him creates a guileless life, and makes of him a man full of good works, the fruit and the consequence of saving faith. Now per contra. In Psalm 1 is seen the picture of the man who is not blessed. And here again I must regretfully dissent from a recent note in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST which ascribes the words sinner and ungodly in verse 1 as instances of Hebrew parallelism.

The ungodly man is referred to, but so is the sinner and the scornful. Here is the picture of a man the reverse of that describing the good man. He is taking his degrees in vice. He walks in the counsel of the ungodly, stands in the way of sinners, sits on the seat of the scornful.

He begins in walking and ends sitting. He first counsels with the ungodly and finishes up his awful career by occupying the seat of the scornful. Note the terrible gradation as regards his conduct and his companions.

The term ungodly is of a purely negative character, but sinners and scornful tell of characters that are positively wicked. As regards conduct, he simply walks with ungodly companions at the outset, but ends his miserable career by sitting, implying permanence of character, the friend, too, of the scornful.

Oh the blessedness of that man whose transgression is forgiveness. Mark him, for the end of that man is peace.

Our Best Church Hymns By W. E. M. Hackleman

Considerable has been written concerning the history and characteristics of hymns that are worthy of a place in our present hymnody. Little has been written, however, that has been of any particular value, because each writer has set up his own peculiar opinions as a standard by which he then proceeds to select what he supposes to be the best hymns. Consequently there are as many different standards by which to judge hymns as there have been writers upon this subject, and the selections made by these standards are just as variant. This has always been true in the history of hymnody and it may easily be proven that it is true to-day.

If the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST would each select those hymns which they consider to be the best, no doubt the selections would range from that grand and ancient hymn, "Te Deum Laudamus," down to "Scatter Sunshine," or,

"I should like to die, said Willie,
If dear papa could die too."

Augustine defined a hymn as follows: "It is a song with praise to God. If thou praisest God and singest not, thou utterest no hymn. If thou singest and praisest not God, thou utterest no hymn." (This is remarkably true of some singers and choirs that we have even in this day.) "A hymn, therefore," says Augustine, "containeth these three things, song, and praise and that of God." This definition is too narrow, and if rigidly applied would more than decimate the hymnals of to-day. Another definition has been given which we think is better, and which is as follows: "A hymn is the uplifting of the soul to God in terms of song." However, this definition is too general, and is not specific to aid us in selecting the best church hymns, hence we see that all previous standards and definitions cannot be relied upon in the task before us and we must seek further enlightenment elsewhere.

After considerable study of church hymnody and its interesting history, we have found what we think to be a much higher and safer tribunal, viz., the Church Universal. We will, therefore, not put forth our own personal opinions and private judgment lest we err like many others. We think it, therefore, wise to ask, What has the Church Universal done in hymnody?

A few words of history will help us to answer this question: The early church sang psalms, hymns and spiritual songs. That is, the psalms of the Hebrews; hymns, like the "Magnificat" (Luke 1:4, 6:55); "The Benedictus" (Luke 1:68-79); "Gloria in Excelsis Deo" (Luke 2:14); "Nunc Dimittis" (Luke 2:29-32), and other portions of New Testament Scripture such as Acts 4:24-30, Eph. 5:14, 1 Tim. 3:16, 6:15, 16, and spiritual songs which were extemporaneous outbursts of songs of praise, the result of sudden emotion or inspiration. Little by little, however, the privilege of song was monopolized by the priests, and, in 363 A. D., the laity was forbidden to sing in public worship. This was done by the council of Laodicea. For nearly 1,200 years the singing in public worship was confined to the antiphonal chanting of priests in an unknown tongue.

During this "eclipse of the faith" many of the early hymns were lost. Some, however, were incorporated in the New Testament, and will be found in the American revision in the form of poetry. Others have been preserved in ancient manuscripts in the Syriac and Greek and Latin languages, but have not as yet been translated.

Modern hymnody dates from the reformation. Luther not only gave us the Bible, but our hymn book. It was he who restored to the people the privilege of sacred song in public worship. He wrote many hymns and compiled a hymn book. He also wrote many of the tunes for his hymns. One priest said, "Luther was damning more souls with his hymns than with his sermons." Calvin soon followed with the publication of the "Genevan Psalter," which was "a version of thirty of the psalms of David in French rhymes," by one Clemment Marot, a valet to King Francis I of France, and who was at that time the favorite poet of France. He dedicated his book to the "ladies of France," and it was only for their entertainment and the enhancement of his own popularity that this ballad singer had ventured into the psalmody of the Hebrews. No evidence appears that Marot intended to revolutionize the ballads of the nation by infusing into them religious themes, nor did he endeavor to aid in the dissemination of the principles of the reformation. However, his contributions to the polite and classic literature of the day were forgotten in the enthusiasm with which his "Saintes Chansonnettes" (as he termed his version from the Psalter) were accepted by the Court of Francis and the people of France. They were being sung everywhere, where the French language was current, but not for religious purposes.

Calvin, like Luther, had determined upon the elimination from the public worship of the antiphonal chanting, in which the people had no part. He seized upon the opportunity now before him and published the "Rhymes of Marot," with a preface by himself and introduced them as a "Psalm-book" into his church at Geneva. On a certain Lord's day in 1540 might have been heard, the noble ladies and lords of the court of his most Catholic majesty, and the humble congregation of the Heresiarch of Geneva, singing the same words from the new Psalm-book. These versified psalms were soon translated into the German, Dutch, Bohemian, and other languages and dialects. Luther used them all. Many others were written, until it is estimated that over 400,000 versifications of different psalms were written. A very large per cent of these, however, were so entirely different from the psalms on which they were founded, that they would to-day be considered hymns instead, and probably would have been so considered in that day, if it had not been for the prejudice that existed against any uninspired hymn.

It was not long until the Catholic church began to look askance upon the practice of allowing the people to sing the Word of God in their own tongue. Consequently all Catholics were forbidden under severe penalties to use Marot's or any similar versions, which now began to appear in great numbers. Psalm-singing and heresy were regarded as synonymous terms, and any one who used the psalms was designated at once as a Protestant. Marot was ordered to cease the publication of his book, and though he declared again and again his allegiance to Rome, he was compelled to leave France.

In the course of time the prejudice against uninspired hymns had passed away. Germany was first, through the instrumentality of Luther to make use of hymns. The reformation spread into England in a few years, and Psalm-singing accompanied it. England, however, did not make use of uninspired hymns for over 100 years after Germany had accepted them, and not until after considerable bitter strife and division. Although Isaac Watts did not write the first English hymns, he was the first one who succeeded in having his hymns used by the church, hence he is known as "The Father of English Hymnody." Previous to this uninspired hymns had been used in private worship and occasionally a clergyman here and there would dare to repeat a hymn at the close of his sermon. Especially was this true of those clergymen who wrote the hymns that are familiar to us to-day.

Since the reformation, over 500,000 hymns have been written. This does not include gospel songs, nearly all of which are by American authors, and written within the last fifty years.

William B. Bradbury was the first publisher of gospel songs. At first they consisted largely of standard hymns set to new tunes of light character, to which was added a chorus or refrain. Bradbury was the first writer of this class of tunes, and he patterned after the popular songs of Stephen A. Foster, whose "Down on the Swaunee River" and others of like character are considered musically, in a class by themselves and purely American. These gospel songs were intended for use in Sunday-school only, but it was not long until they were used in church services as well. However, the Church Universal has not thought them worthy of a place in its permanent hymnody, and with a very few exceptions, they are not to be found in our modern hymnals.

An examination of the hymn books of the Church Universal reveals the fact that out of the one-half million hymns that have been written, fully 95 per cent have been allowed to pass into "innocuous desuetude," and only a small part of one per cent of that number has been universally accepted. We have examined over 100 modern hymnals published by the different English-speaking religious bodies of this country and Europe, and we find that less than fifty hymns are common to all. Some of the most renowned and prolific hymnologists, many of whom wrote hundreds and some thousands of hymns, are represented by one hymn only; none are represented by more than twelve, unless it be Isaac Watts, who wrote over 3,000 hymns, and Charles Wesley, "the poet of Methodism," who wrote over 6,000 hymns. These hymns were written in the third, fourth, sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and the first-half of the last century, and are, as a rule, void of all theology. A partial list of these hymns follows, and it will be noticed that nearly all religious bodies whether Greek, Roman, or Protestant, are represented by one or more hymns.

A close study of these hymns will reveal certain characteristics which will enable us to ascertain the standard by which the Church Universal has selected them. These characteristics may be designated as follows:

(1) Lyrical quality. They are rhythmical and fitted for expression in song. They are penetrated with emotion, adoration and experience.

(2) Literary excellence. The language is refined and beautiful, and is marked by vigor and catholicity of thought. The figures of speech are aptly chosen.

(3) Liturgical appropriateness. They are suitable for use by the church in public worship and consist mainly of prayer and praise, which are the two chief elements of public worship.

(4) Reverence. This is fundamental in their conception and expression, and in the effect produced on those who sing or hear them. The hymns above are unusually strong in this respect, and it is this quality that gives them their especial fitness for use in the Church's worship.

(5) Spiritual reality. This element has two sides. One is turned outward toward the world—the side of truth. Facts must not be ignored. The other side is turned inward toward one's self—the side of sincerity. Indeed, God will be worshiped in sincerity and truth. A good hymn, therefore, must be true to facts and must be sincerely spoken by the singer.

(6) Scripturalness. They are scriptural in sentiment and expression. They are founded, largely, on scriptural passages.

(7) Simplicity. The thought is clearly expressed and no one can be in doubt as to the meaning.

(8) Unity. Each hymn contains some great central truth. Each stanza clings closely to that truth and gives emphasis to it.

With this standard given us by the Church, we are enabled to judge, to a certain extent, which of the newer hymns will prove to be acceptable and come into universal use for, while the verdict of the Church is conclusive, it covers only the hymns old enough to have secured a full and wide trial. If we would not err in judgment in dealing with the great body of more recent hymns, we must measure them by the standard given us by the Church Universal. It will not do to say that "Because a hymn does good, it is good enough to receive a place in a hymnal," for, while it may have done good, it may be one of those songs that will soon be worn threadbare and laid aside. How true this is of many of the songs of the last few years, as it has been true of the hymns of the past. There is a widespread desire in our brotherhood for a hymnal that will measure up to this standard. Many of our churches are buying denominational hymnals. We trust the day is not far distant when such a hymnal will be presented to the brotherhood for universal approval and acceptance.

"CLEANING HOUSE."

A Change of Food Cleans the Soul's House.

When the body is clogged up by the use of improper food and sickness sets in there is nothing so good as a "house cleaning" and the right way to do this is to change the food, for although taking medicines may afford temporary relief a complete change of food is much the surest and safest way.

The highest medical authority in the world, "The Lancet" of London, says of Grape-Nuts: "Our analysis shows it is a nutritive of a high order since it contains the constituents of a complete food in very satisfactory and rich proportion and in an easily assimilable state." "About two years ago," says a resident of Springville, Ind., "I had terrible stomach trouble and although I tried all kinds of medicines none of them cured me. I was so run down I could not eat, got very little sleep, and was dizzy-headed and miserable all of the time. About that time a friend told me that the only way to cure my trouble was to change my food and recommended Grape-Nuts.

"From my very first meal of Grape-Nuts my stomach began to get better and all the improvements that come from a healthy stomach in place of an unhealthy one soon followed, and this was not all, for just as great an improvement came in my brain. All of the dizziness is gone and my brain is now clear and active. I can eat anything I want, sleep well and am altogether a new man mentally and physically.

"At the time I commenced to use this food I was nothing but a skeleton weighing 130 pounds, but now I have got back my normal weight of nearly 200." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

A Notable Centennial By F. D. Power

It was during Buchanan's administration. The Disciples in Washington City were meeting in an obscure place, Temperance Hall on E Street near Ninth. Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, then attorney general, and Mrs. Black attended these services. Peter, their colored coachman, was sensitive for the honor of the family, and more so for his carriage, and one day said to Mrs. Black.

"Mrs. Black, dat ain't a very fine church you and the Judge go to."

"No Peter, I can't say it is."

"Do you 'spects to tend dat church every Sunday, marm?"

"Yes, until we get a better one Peter."

"Well, marm, I want to ax you somethin' and I don't much like to ax you."

"What is it Peter?"

"Well, Mrs. Black, I want to ax you if you hadn't no objection, to let me drive down to dat fine Presbyterian church where de other big men go, and stand there till meetin' is out, and then drive back for you and de Judge, 'case de drivers of de other members of de cabinet kind o' makes fun o' me for standin' before dat meetin' house."

"All right, Peter" said the lady, "if you'll be on time." And Peter satisfied his mind that he saved the credit of the family and of his horses and carriage by standing regularly with the fine turnouts of the other cabinet ministers.

The church where Peter delighted to stand has just observed its centennial. It is known in Washington as the New York Avenue Church. It began its career at the time Jefferson made the Louisiana Purchase, when New York had but 60,000 people and Washington only a few groups of huts and one tavern. It was the year after Tom Paine's Age of Reason was published when there was great anxiety lest men should swing away from the old faith and even the president was thought to be tainted with the current unbelief of the time. The capital then was a region of malarial swamps, where mosquitoes swarmed, and respecting neither the courtesy of the senate nor the etiquette of diplomacy, inoculated president and pauper. Still it was a time of iron piety and strict orthodoxy. Extracts from the minutes of the session show how it tried members for intemperance, profane swearing, non-payment of debts and even for non-attendance upon divine services, and for these infractions suspension and excommunication were dealt out with a liberal hand. One gentleman, who attended the races and retailed liquor thereat was tried for the offense, but readmitted to fellowship "because of many palliating circumstances and upon his earnest and solemn promises he would do so no more." Another charged with intemperance assured the session he had only been overcome, so far as he could remember, upon occasion when those with whom he had been drinking had deceived him as to the strength of the liquor."

The church has been the worshiping place of many distinguished people. It has been called the "Church of the Presidents." Among the modern pews is a black bench which was the seat of Abraham Lincoln and bears a plain brass plate with the inscription, "Abraham Lincoln, 1861-1865." A feature of the centennial was the occupation of this pew by President Roosevelt, and Secretary Hay, who as Mr. Lincoln's private secretary had often sat with him there, and the speeches of these gentlemen from the pew. "If ever there lived a president," said Mr. Roosevelt, "who during his time of service needed all the consolation and strength that he could draw from the unseen powers above, it was Abraham Lincoln—sad, patient, mighty Lincoln, who worked and suffered for the people and when he had lived for them to good end, gave his life at the end. If ever there was a man who practically applied what is taught in our churches, it was Abraham Lincoln." Then he quoted Lincoln's words at the close of the struggle, "a thoroughly Lincoln-like phrase, 'I have not willingly planted a thorn in the breast of any man.'"

Among the famous men who have worshiped here was John Quincy Adams, who was one of the trustees and at one time drew his check for $1,200 to meet church emergencies, and at another, advanced the pastor the same amount to purchase a home, and later, when the pastor desired to sell, bought the house at its increased value. Andrew Jackson and his entire cabinet were members of the congregation in 1830. Jackson withdrew from the church as a result of the turmoil over the famous "Peggy O'Neill." She was the daughter of a famous boniface in Washington's younger days and at the O'Neil hostelry, Jackson, then Senator from Tennessee met Margaret, or "Peggy," as she was known. She was a great beauty, married at sixteen, was soon a widow, and married again. Jackson admired the dashing Irish belle and through her his cabinet was broken up and his withdrawal from the church was one of the incidents of the time. So goes the gossip. Martin Van Buren sometimes visited the church, and William Henry Harrison, Polk, Pierce, Buchanan and Andrew Johnson were regular attendants, Pierce coming morning and evening, which is, as far as I know, the only instance where the chief magistrate has honored the evening services by his presence. Vice-presidents Breckinridge, Wheeler, Colfax, Stevenson and Hendricks worshiped here; Justices of the Supreme Court McLean, Campbell, Bradley, Matthews and Harlan; and such noted statesmen as Webster, Cass, Simon Cameron, Zack Chandler, Hoke Smith, Daniel Lamont, Trumbull, Frelinghuysen, and others of days gone by, and later notables like Alger, Benj. Harrison, Elkins, Gorman, McMillan and Burrows.

Dr. James Laurie was the first pastor and served fifty years. Then came Dr. P. D. Gurley from 1853-1868, then Dr. Samuel S. Mitchell, Dr. John R. Paxton, Dr. W. A. Bartlett, and Dr. Wallace Radcliffe since 1895. In this church was held the celebrated Briggs trial at the general assembly, and many of the most noted religious conventions and conferences have met here. It has been a gathering place, not only for Presbyterians, but for all evangelical people. One of the features of the present celebration was an evening of greetings from the sister churches, which was full of the spirit of the hymn, "Blessed be the Tie that Binds."

The centennial sermon by the pastor and reminiscences by some of the leaders were accompanied by hymns "lined out" in the old style, and the musical instruments were flute, violin and violincello as in the olden time. One of the addresses was by John Bach Masters, the author of the History of the American People, who spoke upon "The American of 1803." Another was by President Patton, of Princeton, on "A Century of Presbyterian Doctrine."

The masculine character of the faith of other days was contrasted with the new Christianity which drops dogma and doctrine and gives marked attention to the social side of religion. Professor Konig, of the University of Bonn, describes the "diseases" of modern biblical criticism; Professor Patton calls our modern Christianity a "disease." How shall we deal with the microbe?

A very interesting "museum" was arranged in connection with this celebration. An exhibit of curious relics associated with the church and its pastors and leading men was brought together in the Sunday-school room, which was of great value. Pulpits, Bibles, hymn books, sermons, chairs, photographs, desks, China—a thousand things illustrating the history of this congregation were exhibited, and throngs visited them. A thought here for our centennial in 1909. If we are to make a proper showing of our history as a religious body, it is time we were considering this collection and the place of its exhibition. Such a collection our Historical Society aims to bring together, and it can be made large and instructive and invaluable if timely and diligent effort is made to make it worthy of our cause.

Some Neglected First Principles.

By Harry Granison Hill,
General Secretary of American Christian Education Society.

The Detroit Convention is history, it shall become historic. The future will point to it as inaugurating many important movements. It was while the hosts were assembled in our last convention that they heard of the first large donation toward our college in India; they were not surprised when the name of the donor was Gen. F. M. Drake, the benefactor of so many great works. It was at Detroit during the convention that one man gave $25,000 for the erection of a Christian Hospital. At the same time and place a movement was set on foot destined, we believe, to figure largely in our future, namely, the Evangelistic Board. Here also the American Christian Education Society announced the election of a General Secretary and the selection of the third Lord's day in January as a National Educational Day.

One prominent preacher stated the case in about these words: "We are a pyramid standing on its point. We must be careful or we shall topple." We have been enthusiastic for souls, but have at best a disjointed and unorganized method of evangelism. We have exalted Christ, but have failed to emulate him in his example of going about doing good. Conscious that it is the Church's duty to minister to the needy, our brethren have been so busy keeping up with our wonderful growth that they have failed, or almost failed, in their duty to the unfortunate in body or worldly goods.

We have missionary money, missionary methods and organization, but we lack missionary men, willing to be sent. Plenty to send, few to go. We have a plea to saints and sinners. We consider the denominations a field for missionary effort. We have a plea that aims at the intelligent and rational acceptance of the Christ. We must have educated missionaries, educated ministers, educated evangelists. It is no disrespect to those able men who now and in time past have honored our cause with the best fruits of mind and heart, to say that we have sadly neglected our educational work. We have rested in blissful ignorance or happy indifference to the few institutions of higher learning we are pleased to call "ours." Ours because they have ministered to us rather than of any great support we have given them. Our neglect has been almost criminal, our indifference is astonishing, our delusion that we are supporting our schools seems to be complete.

When our missionary societies ask for more men and none respond, when hundreds of our pulpits are vacant, when our harvest of souls is measured by the handful of capable reapers we send out as evangelists, is it not high time that we arouse from our ease in Zion and give to our colleges the support and patronage they need?

We have faith in our people. When the need is apparent, we believe they will respond. If our schools are properly endorsed and properly patronized, we will touch the root of many weaknesses in the propagation of our plea. Ponder this subject and you will find it lies deeper than you will at first imagine. Education, Christian education, is the next great subject for the consideration of our brotherhood. May God give us grace and means and power to respond to the cry of Christian education.

Japan's Singular Experiment.

By Fred E. Hagin,
Missionary of the Foreign Society.

A visitor to the Omaha Convention asked the missionaries from Japan if the Japanese worshiped such idols as he was shown. When told that they did, he replied, "I do not believe it." I recently asked a clerk of a large importing house where he took foreign friends when he showed them the sights of Tokyo, wondering if the great Asakusa temple was in the list. But it was not. It is not strange that intelligent people at a distance lose sight of the fact that Japan is a land of idolatry. Ninety-three per cent of her boys are in the public schools. She submitted the tax question to the Hague tribunal. She has appropriated several hundred thousand yen for the St. Louis Exposition. Night or day, one can traverse alone any city or any mountain fastness and valuables and person will be secure. Her foreign policy bears favorable comparison with the most exalted nation, while externally and internally the principles of the central government are becoming more and more Christian in character. Yet Japan has merely tied the fruits of Christianity to the sterile vine of idolatry.

During the first three centuries Christianity met a power which felt its force. This power drew the sword and contested bitterly the irresistible spread of the kingdom. A century ago a European nation rejected Christianity wholesale and reveled in its license, with known results. In Japan the national attitude is not that of a persecutor or a scoffer, but that of a slighter. As a nation it feels partly superior, partly indifferent to the gospel. It is tolerated as a wornout dogma of friends across the seas. Her attitude is singular and unique. History furnishes no parallel. She would have the civilization that is the outcome of a heaven-given religion, but disregard the Christ. She is putting new wine into old wine-skins. The future holds in store, therefore, some interesting changes. What will it be? Can the old bottle hold the new wine? Will the nation bow voluntarily to the Saviour of the world? Or will the present folly bring its own chastening, and by various experiences—some severe—will the fact be accepted, that except they eat His flesh they can have no life in them? Forty-five thousand have accepted Christ; 44,000,000 are idolaters. The balance, the upper classes, are skeptical. To them all religion is superstition. They are under the delusion that civilization is a matter subject to importation, just as a Singer sewing-machine; that the essence of Christianity is a formal thing that can be put on as easily as an evening dress; that Christ is simply one among many moralists, and that His real person is magnified by myth and hidden in obscurity. Of this class is Marquis Ito, who was foremost in urging the new appropriation of one hundred million yen for the navy. He said, however, "I regard religion itself as quite unnecessary for a nation's life."

Again, Prof. Hozumi, of the Imperial University, "Taima is distributed from the temple of Ise to every house in the empire at the end of each year and is worshiped by every loyal Japanese as the representative of the First Imperial Ancestor," and also of ancestor worship—"The influence of European civilization has done nothing to shake the firm-rooted custom." Jules Verne wrote of a steam elephant which pulled a party through the jungles of India. This nation has taken the merely objective from western nations, ivory, bone, etc., and constructed an elephant. The steam is the old idolatrous ideals. A steam elephant is interesting, but expensive and unserviceable. After the nation wanders a little more, it will hear the voice of the true Shepherd.

"JUST RUN ACROSS"

Some People are Lucky.

Some people make an intelligent study of food and get on the right track (pure food) others are lucky enough to stumble upon the right way out of the difficulty just as a Philadelphia young woman did.

She says: "I had suffered terribly from nervous indigestion, everything seemed to disagree with me and I was on the point of starvation when one day I happened to run across a demonstration of Postum Food Coffee at one of the big stores here."

"I took a sample home and a sample of Grape-Nuts as well and there tried them again and found they agreed with me perfectly. For months I made them my main diet and as the result I am restored to my former perfect health and can eat everything I want to."

"When I spoke to my physician about Grape-Nuts he said 'It is a most excellent food.'" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Look for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville," in every package of both Postum and Grape-Nuts.

News From Many Fields

Indiana.

Bro. George Scoville, brother to Charles Reign Scoville of the Metropolitan Church, Chicago, was accidentally scalded to death, while in the discharge of his duties as locomotive engineer on the Wabash railway on Saturday, Nov. 21. His immediate family reside at Ashley, where he was a beloved and consistent member of the Christian Church. His parents and sister reside at Butler, the old family home of the Scovilles. They will all have the Christian sympathy of their multitude of friends everywhere.

Orders for envelopes for the November offering are still coming in, also for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. Evidently the churches and preachers do not intend to let the day pass this year, without its proper observance. It is not so much a question now as to who will, as to who will not observe the day. Seventeen calls for meetings by last Thursday's mail. The money is surely needed. T. J. LEGG.

Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia.

The evangelistic campaign is on in our territory. J. O. Shelburne was holding his own meeting in Baltimore at last report with five confessions.

W. S. Hoyer is in his own meeting at Downsville, two weeks; 10 accessions.

W. J. Wright with P. P. Hasselvander is at Martinsburg, W. Va.; nine confessions.

The writer closed the first week of the meeting at Boonsboro with no additions. W. L. Harris, of Washington, D. C. joins him tonight for two weeks more. Brother Harris reports confessions at prayer-meeting of twin sisters, aged 24 years. He had three other baptisms last night; also the Sunday-school at his church, Whitney Ave., gave Boys' and Girls' Rally Day program last night to a crowded house, and has $23 in their offering. Let other schools imitate his good example. One-half the net proceeds comes back to our state work. We must push state work forward this year. How many churches observed State Day?

As the echoes of the great convention at Detroit have not all died away, your correspondent would like to note one thing that impressed him most forcibly in the convention, and that was the great opportunity in China as presented by W. P. Bentley. As China is in a great crisis politically, intellectually and religiously, some of the best professors and preachers ought to go there and seize the opportunity in the crisis. The Master taught his disciples to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest. Why should not the missionary leaders and church papers in the brotherhood call for a day of prayer and fasting and consecration for laborers for this great work and all the great fields at home and abroad that need strong hands and brave hearts to do and dare for Christ and for humanity? Is not that scriptural?

The church at Alma gave their pastor, Bro. Oscar Sweeney, a surprise donation party recently, causing the preacher to forget the grocer for many weeks to come.

Bro. F. S. White has been called for full time by the Arapahoe Church.

E. B. Widger, of LaPorte, Ind., will preach at York on Nov. 29. The secretary spent Lord's day morning, Nov. 22, at Pawnee City, representing state missions. Full apportionment was pledged. J. W. Paine, of Kansas, will occupy the pulpit there Nov. 29. Full apportionment came from Humboldt Church on the same date, Bert Wilson preacher.

The secretary was called to Ulysses to be present at the funeral of Mrs. Helen Cameron, an aged and beloved sister in the church there. She had been a member of the Christian Church for 43 years and had for more than forty of them provided the emblems for the Lord's Supper. She went home with gladness.

Brother and Sister Maxwell are happily situated in their home at Ulysses. The church is taking on new activities under his ministries.

L. P. Bush preached at York on Nov. 22, and A. G. Smith at Rising City on the same date.

Three added in Brother Austin's meeting at Northside, Omaha.

O. A. Adams began a meeting at Dunning, Blaine county, Tuesday evening, Nov. 24. We hope to organize a church there, as there is not a church building in the town. The secretary will preach at Valparaiso on Nov. 29.

The four secretaries of Kansas, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska will have a conference on state missions at St. Joseph, Mo., on the first day of December. One was held last summer and found to be so helpful that they will be continued. These states have a population today of 8,000,000, and the Disciples number 300,000 in round numbers. Of these Missouri has over half, or 175,000; Iowa, 56,000; Kansas, 50,000, and Nebraska 18,000. In these states there are 2,700 churches, 1,500 preachers. Last year the state organization did missionary work as follows: Employed 88 men, added 4,320 to the churches, 2,523 by baptism. Organized 28 new churches, raising for missionary purposes within the state $22,600. It will be seen from the foregoing that we have practically two congregations for each preacher. That a good many of these have a preacher all the time, and that some of the preachers are not giving much time to preaching, indicates what is true, that too many of our congregations are without preaching. For this cause many are weakly and some practically dead. For this cause if for no other, it is imperative that we give state missions a prominent place in the calendar of the churches' benevolences. More than this: we need a vigorous campaign among our young men for the purpose of filling the ranks of the ministry of the word. Such questions as are brought up by these figures and conditions are the subjects that are considered by our secretaries when they meet. W. A. BALDWIN.

A. L. Crim, whose work at Everett has been blessed of the Lord, has decided to return to the east and has resigned. Brother Hawkins from Kentucky has been secured to succeed him.

A. J. Adams, who has been with the church at Ballard about six months, intends to leave that field. Brother Adams is commended by many of the members of the Ballard Church, and it is to be hoped that he may be retained in this part of the state.

David Husband, pastor at Sumner, has been assisted by State Evangelist Morris in a meeting which at last report had 19 additions and the meeting continues.

The meeting at Olympia, W. S. Crockett pastor, J. T. Eshelman evangelist, added 28 to the church. The quartet of the First Church, Tacoma, went over and assisted in the music a few nights. It is said to have been the best meeting in the history of the church.

E. R. Moon had six additions at Kelso, Oct. 25, at the regular services. Brother Moon is doing a good work at Kelso and Castle Rock.

It is reported that C. F. Stevens, of Trenton, Mo., has located at Walla Walla.

Ralph Sargent is well liked by the people in his new field—Pullman.

Home again. Convention echoes reverberating even to the Pacific Coast. We now say, "St. Louis, 1904," and "Portland, 1905."

Good pulpit supply was provided during my absence in the following: John Shackelford, W. S. Crockett, N. S. McCallum of our own ministers, and Mrs. Club and Paul Rader of the M. E. Church. Very cordial words of appreciation for them all have been spoken, and the praise is worthily bestowed. The welcome given me on my return suggests, "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love."

The meeting at Sumner closed with 24 additions—a good meeting. Brother Morris is now holding forth at Aberdeen, a city of several thousand people and an important milling and shipping town.

J. T. Eshelman is closing a meeting in Centerville, with 8 additions when last heard from.

Brother Harrold, of the Central Church of San Jose, Cal., was a recent visitor in Tacoma as he was returning from a trip to Alaska. The writer acknowledges a pleasant call.

I baptized 6 at the First Church, Tacoma, last Thursday evening. They had been led to confess Christ in a series of meetings being conducted in the Christian Gospel Mission on Jefferson Avenue, where Brother Westbrook is conducting a mission and shelter home. Booker Smith is the evangelist now holding services there, and several more have made the confession who will be baptized soon. Nearly all of these will unite with the First Church.

The sixth annual meeting of the Tacoma Social Missionary Union was held last week in the First Christian Church. The writer had the privilege of giving one of the addresses on the subject, "Missions, the Business of the Church." The principal address was by Miss Hatch, a returned missionary from northern China. There are now 16 of the city churches in this union. Meetings are held twice a year. Reports, addresses and good music make up the programs, and refreshments discussed in the social hour, make them of growing interest.

New England.

Dr. J. H. Hardin has recently closed a successful meeting at Everett, Mass. There were in all fourteen additions and the church was greatly edified. Bro. R. F. Whiston is the pastor of the Everett church and since his advent there has been a steady growth. The present membership is about 150.

Brother Hardin is now in a meeting at Springfield, Mass. The prospects for success are good. The congregations thus far have been large, and interest excellent.

Bro. J. H. Mohorter left Boston for Pueblo, Colorado, on November 17. Before leaving his people gave him a farewell reception and presented him with a purse of $125. He left with best wishes for himself and family from the whole New England brotherhood.

Dr. J. M. Van Horn, pastor of the First Church, Worcester, Mass., began a series of evangelistic services on Lord's day November 22. He will do his own preaching and illustrate his sermons with the stereopticon.

The Highland Street Church, Worcester, Mass., is rapidly raising money to pay off the indebtedness on their lot. They aim to secure the whole amount by May 1, 1904, after which they will commence to build. This church is a little over a year old and has a membership of 127.

The church at West Rupert, Vermont, is still pastorless. Bro. I. Y. Wilson, a graduate of the School of Evangelists, an earnest Christian and a good preacher, is supplying the pulpit at present.

Brother Charles Forster, the young pastor at West Pawlet, Vermont, is stirring up things at a lively rate. The church is doing better work than it has done for years.

Our energetic pastor at Brockton, Mass., J. Mc. D. Horne is in a meeting with home forces, assisted by Charles L. Estey, singing evangelist. The church is also trying to raise its church debt of $900. After this is accomplished, they hope to enlarge their building, which is necessary to meet the demand of their growing work.

Tremont Temple (Baptist) of Boston, after two years of diligent search has finally secured a pastor. Dr. Henson is the man. He came to Boston from the Hanson Place Baptist Church, Brooklyn. He is 72 years of age, yet is not too old to occupy the most famous Baptist church in America. "The Christian Endeavor World" says of him: "Dr. Henson is an ideal pastor for this (Tremont Temple) great church. . . . Crowds flock to hear him. His discourses are scintillant with wit, warm with human interest, and rich with Christian truth. 'It is no new gospel I bring you,' he said in his first sermon from his new pulpit. 'It is old—yet ever new. What the world wants, what Boston wants is not the truth as it is in Darwin, Huxley, Emerson nor any noted man, but the truth as it is in Jesus.' That truth Dr. Henson will proclaim and not to empty pews."

As long as ministers preach that truth, backed up by earnest, studious, consecrated lives, they will never reach the dead line nor lack men and women to listen to them.

Virginia.

Lynchburg has a $30,000 church in course of erection. The congregation is worshipping at present in the Y. M. C. A. rooms. F. F. Bulard is pastor.

The Virginia Christian College, which has just opened here, has about 125 students in attendance. J. Hopwood is president, late of Milligan, Tenn.

Roanoke has cleared itself of debt. W. G. Johnson ministers here. He is about to enter on his second year. He is now in a meeting at Chilhowie. I am supplying for him here.

P. A. Cave, Third Church, Richmond, withdraws his resignation.

Professor Forrest, of Charlottesville, preaches for Seventh Street Church until a successor is found.

On a recent Lord's day in Richmond I heard Bishop Hendrix, of the M. E. Church, South, in the morning, and "Bishop" H. C. Combs, of the Disciples of Christ, at night. They both seemed "broad" yet "sound," and they were both certainly "sweet."

B. H. Melton celebrated his first anniversary at the Marshall Street Church recently. Brother and Sister Melton have both endeared themselves to the brotherhood and sisterhood of Virginia and have proven themselves very useful additions to the working forces of the state. Under his ministry a German Lutheran minister of no small ability has united with us of late.

The "Juliette Fowler Orphans' and Widows' Home" will be opened about Dec. 20, with A. J. Bush as superintendent and financial agent. This home will be located some ten miles west of Dallas on the Interurban Railway between Dallas and Fort Worth, in which orphans, destitute of means of support, will be received who are under the age of 13 years, and widows having small children to care for who are unable to support them. For years the Texas brotherhood have been talking of the establishment of a widows' and orphans' home, but never until the last state convention did the matter take any definite shape. The beginning will be small both in resources and in buildings, but with strong faith in a generous and charitable brotherhood the enterprise will grow, and within a few years we hope to have a home and a school that will rejoice the heart of every Disciple in the state.

This writer has just closed a meeting of two weeks with the church at Midland, with an immediate result of thirty-one baptisms, two reclaimed, one from the Baptists and three by relation giving a total of thirty-seven. The Midland Church has Brother Volney Johnston as her pastor, who is very much beloved by the entire membership, and the people of the town. He is a young man of fine ability and great usefulness, and ranks as one of our best preachers and pastors.

The church at Merkel, where L. A. Dale ministers, will soon have a new house of worship. The money has been raised and they think by Feb. 1, 1904 the house will have been completed.

Itching Skin

Distress by day and night—

That's the complaint of those who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with Eczema or Salt Rheum—and outward applications do not cure. They can't.

The source of the trouble is in the blood—make that pure and this scaling, burning, itching skin disease will disappear.

"I was taken with an itching on my arms which proved very disagreeable. I concluded it was salt rheum and bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. In two days after I began taking it I felt better and it was not long before I was cured. Have never had any skin disease since." MRS. IDA E. WARD, Cove Point, Md.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

rid the blood of all impurities and cure all eruptions.

The new church house at Smithville will be dedicated the last Sunday in November, Chalmers McPherson, of Waxahachie, preaching the dedication sermon. Ernest J. Bradley an alumni of Texas Christian University, is the pastor of this church, who has certainly done a splendid work since he accepted the pastorate, and is proving himself "a workman that needeth not be ashamed."

L. A. Bretcher, formerly the pastor of the church at Mineola, has accepted the pastorate of the church at Orange, whither he has gone. The light of this church had about gone out when our state board sent one of their evangelists, B. J. Waugh, then who held a very successful meeting, adding about 100 to their membership, reviving the church and locating the pastor, and we can now hope that soon the Orange Church will be ranked among the best.

Georgia Convention.

The twenty-fourth annual convention of the Christian Churches of Georgia met in Macon, Nov. 16 to 19, and was pronounced by all the greatest convention of our history. The proceedings were characterized throughout by a deep spirit of unanimity and harmony. S. B. Moore, pastor of the First Church, Atlanta, presided.

The convention was opened by a praise service conducted by J. H. Wood. Welcome address by W. H. Roper, and response by Wm. Shaw.

A. B. Phillippis, Augusta, followed with a masterful presentation of the claims of Church Extension, saying in part: "The child Church Extension is now fifteen years of age. We have in the fund $395,342.26. We will have half a million in 1905. Over 706 prosperous young churches have received assistance. More than $225,795 has been returned and reloaned. Five hundred churches have received aid that compels respect for the other 2,700 that need it. About 5,600 of our congregations own their own buildings. We are increasing at the rate of 300 churches a year; on an average 200 of these call for assistance. Over $305,000 in our treasury is the earnest of a round million by 1909."

Tuesday forenoon was an interesting and enthusiastic session, devoted to C. W. B. M. work. Mrs. Henry Lewis, of Atlanta, presided. Fine papers were read and excellent reports made.

Tuesday afternoon was given to W. S. G. M. work. Mrs. A. C. Smith, of Atlanta, acting president. Much praiseworthy work reported as done under their auspices.

W. P. Bentley, missionary to China, reached the climax of the day in what was unanimously pronounced the best discourse of the conditions in China ever heard. He said in part: "There is a threefold crisis in China: one pertains to her intellectual life, one to her educational, and one to her religious life. This does not take into account the political crisis which as truly exists, but which does not so concern us as Christian workers.

"Now to meet this threefold crisis we need a threefold ministry. For the intellectual crisis we need a Christian literature. For the educational crisis we must have a Christian education. For the religious crisis we must have the gospel of Christ."

"The great obstacles to the progress of Christianity in China are prejudice, conservatism and ancestral worship. Among the physical obstacles are the languages, primitive means of transportation and disease."

"The work has many encouraging features. Among these we mention the general awakening among the people. It is said by wise men the intellectual awakening of China is the most momentous event of modern times. Lord Woolsley, of the English army, says the Chinese are the most wonderful race of the earth to-day, and the natural leaders of mankind."

"Then we must note the growth of influence of Christianity in China. There are only 120,000 church members, but these Christians with their 200,000 friends exert a powerful influence already. So much so that the government was compelled to issue an imperial decree of religious toleration. This was issued in 1901, and is the magna charter of religious liberty in China and marks an important epoch in the progress of Christianity."

"The Chinese are generally misunderstood and underestimated in America. China has ruled and dominated nearly half the human race for two thousand years. China is awakening as fast as possible with so vast a body of strong, conservative men."

W. A. Chastain opened the session Wednesday with a fine Bible study, after which Evangelists Cave and Coche made splendid reports, followed by treasurer's report by H. M. Patterson. All debts have been paid, with more than $100 in the treasury.

An excellent symposium of Sunday-school work, led by A. B. Reeves, was the principal feature of the afternoon.

B. L. Smith, corresponding secretary of home missions, illumined the problem of home missions in what was generally considered the best of all his past grand addresses. W. J. Coche delivered a learned discourse on "What is Conversion?" Gallant R. Lin Cave captivated the large audience when he eloquently spoke on "The Magnetism of the Cross." He said: "Every truth, intellectual, moral and spiritual, is invested by the Lord of truth with an influence of power in proportion to its own peculiar nature and importance. The cross stands in the forefront of truth. In the family of truths it is the heir of all the age. In the language of the poet, 'All the light of ancient story gathers round its head sublime.'"

Thursday, the last day, was the best. A. R. Miller, of Savannah, gave one of those deeply spiritual, love-inspiring, pathetic sermons. Wm. Shaw, of Winder, led the Endeavor bands to the sublime heights to enjoy a miniature transfiguration scene of spiritual acquirement.

Frank L. Adams, of Atlanta, touched with magic colors the yet unfinished scene, and presented in clear outline a picture of the best convention ever held in Georgia by the Disciples.

Convention Notes.

Everybody joined in one unanimous chorus of praise for the great hospitality of the good people of Macon.

THE DEDICATION OF THE TEMPLE.— 1 Kings 8:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the house of the Lord.—Ps. 122:1.

The Preparations for Building.

David himself, though not permitted to build the Temple, planned the edifice and prepared much of the material for its erection (1 Chron. 22:2-5). The profitable commerce, which Solomon soon established throughout the enlarged borders of his kingdom and even beyond, supplied the funds for the enormously expensive building enterprises which he undertook. The Temple was only one of these, and perhaps not the greatest. Something of the scope of Solomon's ambitions and achievements as a builder, and something also of his method of getting workmen by levies, are indicated by the catalogue of his works in 1 Kings 9:15-19. "This is the reason of the levy which King Solomon raised, to build the house of Jehovah, and his own house, and Millo, and the wall of Jerusalem, and Hazor, and Megiddo, and Gezer. . . . And Solomon built Gezer, and Beth-horon the nether, and Baalath, and Tamar in the wilderness, and all the store-cities that Solomon had, and the cities for his chariots, and the cities for his horsemen, and that which Solomon desired to build for his pleasure in Jerusalem and in Lebanon and in all the land of his dominion."

The Friendship of Hiram.

A significant feature of Solomon's administration was the changed relation toward neighboring governments. David had, to be sure, been on the friendliest terms with Hiram, King of Tyre, but in general he had made more wars than alliances with his neighbors. Solomon's policy was to form alliances. The King of Egypt became his ally and gave him his daughter in marriage, and his harem was filled with the daughters of lesser potentates with whom he contracted similar alliances. The friendship with Hiram was turned to practical account, for Hiram controlled the cedar forests of Lebanon which must supply the fine timber for all of Solomon's great buildings. These rafts of cedar which Hiram sent were by no means gifts, for Solomon paid for them in grain and oil. It was a profitable exchange, for the Israelites were an agricultural people, while Hiram's Phoenician subjects were not farmers but traders.

The Building of the Temple.

The Temple was not a large building, as we count buildings to-day. There was no reason why it should be large. It was not intended to seat a great audience. It was a place of safe keeping for the ark of the covenant and the special dwelling place of Jehovah. Certain priestly functions were to be performed in the Temple, but the place of worship for the people was on the outside of the house. But, though its size was not great, it was a magnificent building, both in the richness of its materials and in the beauty of its highly-wrought ornamentation. Seven years were occupied in the erection of the building, as against thirteen years which were required for the building of Solomon's palace.

The Dedication.

It was a day of great festivity when, in the presence of a great assembly of Israel, the ark was brought up from the tabernacle, where it had been housed since David brought it to Jerusalem, and placed in the Holy of Holies in the Temple. There were sacrifices on a vast scale and doubtless the thousands of animals sacrificed furnished food for the assembled multitude as well as for the priests. When all was in order and the ark and the holy vessels were in place, it is said that "the cloud filled the house" and "the glory of Jehovah filled the house of Jehovah." The house had been built as a habitation for Jehovah and the worshipers were given assurance that they had not built in vain.

The Meaning of the Temple.

Man has a natural tendency to use visible and tangible objects to make more vivid and real the sense of the presence and power of deity. The use of images is an outgrowth of this tendency. But in attempting to represent God Himself in bodily form, the conception of God is inevitably debased. There cannot possibly be much likeness between an inanimate material object and a spiritual and personal God. The history of all attempts to make the thought of God's presence vivid by the use of images is a history of religious deterioration. In Israel's history this universal need was met in a unique way. Instead of an image of Jehovah, they were authorized to make a dwelling-place for Him. The ark was to be the symbol of His presence, as an idol might have been to a heathen the symbol of his god's presence. But the obvious advantage was that, in using the ark, there was less danger of confusing the reality with the symbol. After the Temple was built there was perhaps more danger of thinking that Jehovah dwelt only there, though Solomon said: "Heaven and earth cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded." In later and corrupt days the idea became prevalent that Jehovah's honor, if not His very existence, depended upon the preservation of the Temple. It became the duty of the prophets to stand for a more spiritual thought of God and to call the people back to this idea which Solomon voiced in his prayer of dedication. And at last it became necessary for the Temple to be destroyed, as a proof that God is greater than all temples and altars.

AN ANTI-WORRY MEETING.—
John 14:1-31.

Worry means weakness. It is caused by weakness; it causes weakness. The strong person never worries. Why should he? He is adequate to the performance of his tasks. He feels the joy of achievement, the glow of success. And these things drive out worry.

The big, strong steam-engine, which has horse-power enough and to spare for all the work that is put upon it, runs smoothly and quietly. It is the little leaky, rusty donkey-engine that puffs and sputters and strains and groans, because it is too weak for its work.

But to avoid worry it is not enough that we be strong in our own strength. If this were so, there would be times when, under stress of great needs or dangers or sorrows, the strongest would find that his strength was but weakness and would throw up his hands in surrender. At such times it is the strong faith that counts.

Faith is the act of laying hold upon unseen realities and using them as realities. If God is an abstraction, a mere name, if we do not feel toward Him and rely upon Him as a present and potent reality, then our faith is not of a quality to save us from worry or to bring us any blessing whatever. But if our faith is such that it makes God real to us and brings Him into our lives as an efficient factor in the control of events, then we have the best of reasons for putting away all worry from our hearts.

"Let not your heart be troubled," said Jesus. He was speaking of anxiety about death and the future life, but the words apply with equal force to all troubles, and the same reason holds good which he gave. "Let not your heart be troubled. Ye believe in God, believe also in me." Belief in God is a sufficient reason to cease from troubling, for genuine belief in God includes belief in His power, which guarantees His ability to help us; His wisdom, which guarantees His acquaintance of our needs; and His goodness, which guarantees His willingness to help.

Christ promises peace. "Come unto me all ye who labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." His method of giving rest is not to take away all troubles and difficulties from our path, but to fortify us within, that we may be able to meet and overcome them. Above all, He frees us from disagreeable qualities of mind and heart which do more toward disturbing our own peace and giving us occasion for worry than any amount of external annoyances could. False pride, selfishness, morbid eagerness for honor and recognition among men, the desire of sinful things—these are the disturbers of our peace and the real source of most of our worries. These evil spirits of unrest He casts out and gives us peace by helping us to develop peaceful characters.

PHILEMON: OR CHRISTIAN URBANITY.—
Philemon, 1:25.

It is said there is a letter of the younger Pliny extant, written to a friend whose servant had deserted him, in which he intercedes for the runaway, who was anxious to return to his master, but dreaded the effects of his anger. This celebrated letter has been compared with Paul's to Philemon, written under the same circumstances; and scholars do not hesitate to say that, not only in the spirit of Christian love, of which Pliny was ignorant, but in dignity of thought, argument, pathos, eloquence and beauty of style, the letter of the Apostle is vastly superior to that of the polished Roman.

Paul begins with his usual gracious salutation; then he declares his deep personal regard for Philemon—"making mention of thee in my prayers"—and dwells gratefully upon the service Philemon has rendered to the saints. Paul was tactful, as well as courteous. Not only so, he was kind and wise. He knew the subtle art of appreciation, and its power over men.

There is a touch of pathos in his reference to himself—"Paul the aged, and now a prisoner also of Christ Jesus." He had been full of strength; he alludes to the halcyon days, when he was the happy and self-sacrificing servant of such as Philemon, for Christ sake. He could enjoin, or command what is fitting, but he prefers to entreat. Before he writes down the name of the prodigal, he describes him as "my child, whom I have begotten in my bonds;" Philemon must at once be interested, and kindly disposed. Any convert of the aged Apostle would have the open sesame to his heart, of course.

Although Paul would like to keep the converted slave as a personal helper, he will not do so, without his master's consent. The business side of the transaction is settled with the utmost fairness and delicacy, when Paul says if the slave owes the master anything, or has wronged him at all, he himself will repay it. And he suggests that perhaps for the good of all concerned, more especially for the slave's good, and that the master might have him in the bonds of brotherly love forever, he was parted from Philemon for a time.

How could Philemon read that closing paragraph, and not be constrained to receive the letter and its bearer, the returned slave, with all Christian courtesy? Paul expresses the utmost confidence in Philemon's kindness of heart, declaring that he is confident the master will do more than he suggests. And, hopeful for the future, he asks that a lodging be prepared for him, as he expects to pay Philemon a visit after his release.

This letter is a beautiful example of Christian urbanity, and it is also a fine illustration of the way Christianity wrought upon society. Here was the institution of slavery, lawful, popular, unquestioned. Christianity immediately begins to leaven it. There is no vitriolic denunciation. The subject did not demand it, nor would it have been in any measure effectual. The fact is, a man can be a Christian in any conceivable condition. He may starve to death, and die with a triumphant faith in Christ. The condition of the body, or of anything else exterior to a man, doesn't count with determinative force.

The epistle shows the fine sense of honor which Paul had. He would not appropriate a day's time of the man who legally belonged to another. Neither would he encourage him to run away. He sends him back to the master. But he writes a letter which introduces the slave to the master in a new light, and uses all his power and influence to modify the human relation by the gentle ethics of the gospel.

THOUSANDS HAVE KIDNEY TROUBLE AND NEVER SUSPECT IT.

Mrs. E. Austin.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 9th, 1902.

A little over a year ago I was taken with severe pains in my kidneys and bladder. They continued to give me trouble for over two months and I suffered untold misery. I became weak, emaciated and very much run down. I had great difficulty in retaining my urine, and was obliged to pass water very often night and day. After I had used a sample bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, which you so kindly sent me on my request, I experienced great relief. I immediately bought of my druggist two large bottles and continued taking it regularly. I am pleased to say that Swamp-Root cured me entirely. I can now stand on my feet all day without having any bad symptoms whatever. You are at liberty to use this testimonial letter if you wish.

Gratefully yours,

Mrs. E. Austin.

The mild and prompt effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Recommended and taken by physicians, used in hospitals and endorsed by people of prominence everywhere. To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you, a sample bottle will be sent absolutely free, by mail, also a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

tian love. Enlighten our minds; awaken our consciences; give us discretion and tact, and the wisdom of love in all life's relations, for Christ's sake. Amen.

Our Budget

—T. J. Legg is in a meeting at Darlington, Ind.

—A. L. Zink, of Long Grove, Iowa, has accepted a unanimous call from the Prairie City church and is on the ground for business.

—The Oacoma, S. D., Church was dedicated Nov. 22, with the debt all provided for by pledges, amid great rejoicing.—W. J. DODGE.

—J. W. Shepherd, of the Gospel Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., preached at the Sarah Street Mission, 1324 N. Sarah St., St. Louis, Nov. 22.

—The new Christian church at Sheridan, Wyo., was dedicated Nov. 8. The debt was almost entirely provided for. F. E. Blanchard is the pastor.

—W. M. Taylor, who recently returned from San Juan, P. R., has an interesting lecture on Porto Rico which he recently delivered at Columbia, S. C.

—Bro. R. A. Omer writes from Camp Point, Ill., of the death of his mother. After months of suffering, she has entered into rest, full of faith and good works.

—J. Sharratt, of Burton, Kans., preached the sermon at the union thanksgiving service at the Presbyterian Church. He began a revival at Sterling, Kan., Nov. 29.

—The South Broadway Christian Church, Denver, Colo., B. B. Tyler pastor, will hold special Thanksgiving services Sunday Dec. 6, morning, afternoon and evening.

—Last week the Foreign Society received two gifts of $500 each and one of $900 on the annuity plan. Others are expected soon. For full information address F. M. Rains, corresponding secretary, Cincinnati, O.

—The church at Herington, Kan., that was destroyed by fire August 8, is being rapidly rebuilt. It is being enlarged, and when finished will be the largest and handsomest church in the city. It will be dedicated some time in January.

—During the week of Dec. 13-18, Mr. Herbert L. Willett will deliver a course of six lectures at the Christian Church, Liberty, Mo., where Robert Graham Frank is pastor. Liberty is one of the educational centers of Missouri, and will give Dr. Willett a large and appreciative audience. The lectures will be followed by a meeting with home forces.

—O. D. Maple has resigned at Lawton, O. T., and is now evangelizing in the new country. Thus far two new churches organized. He is giving a course of lectures in the Presbyterian church at Walter, O. T., preparatory to the revival which the Christian Church is to hold. He received a unanimous call from Central Christian Church, Marion, O.

—The church at Bethlehem gave a reception for the new members received in Bro. J. F. Adair's meeting last Wednesday evening. O. L. Adams preached the union Thanksgiving sermon at Bethlehem in the Baptist church and will also give the same address Sunday morning in a union service at New York, Iowa, in the Christian church.

—J. J. Handsaker, of Coquille, Oregon, says that after being refused the use of any of three churches of the city, the brethren at Myrtle Point, Oregon, have secured a well-located lot upon which they will erect a tent at once for use this winter. They plan to have a house erected not later than Sept. 7, '04. The Sunday-school of one hundred is growing rapidly.

—A misplaced decimal point in a notice of Wilbur J. Chapman's "Present Day Evangelism" in our issue of Nov. 19, made the price of that volume appear as sixty dollars. In reality it is only sixty cents. It is a good book, but the former figure would doubtless seriously handicap its sale among those who need it most. The publishers are Baker & Taylor Co.

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

—The Christian Woman's Board of Missions received $1,000 on the annuity plan on Nov. 21. The following verse of Scripture accompanied the gift: "But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? for all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee."

—W. B. Golden, who has been in the employ of the Iowa Sunday-school Board since Nov. 1, when he resigned at Bagley, is reviving the church at Seeley Township, Guthrie Co. He is holding a meeting which promises to result in a reorganization of the church, which had ceased to meet. A Sunday-school was organized last Sunday.

—Geo. L. Snively, of our National Benevolent Association, reports the following recent benefactions: R. A. Long, gift, $100; J. Breckenridge Ellis, annuity, $100; Elizabeth Cayton, annuity, $500. Three hundred old brethren and sisters and children and friendless sick, depend on such help for daily bread and raiment and care. We all should foster this sacred ministry.

—According to the Pittsburg Times, W. J. Russell, pastor of the East End Christian Church, has been drawing some lessons from Samson's riddle, "Out of the eater came forth food, and out of the strong one came forth sweetness." After a very vivid recital of the biblical story, he draws the pregnant lesson that it is out of difficulties overcome and victories gained that the honey of our civilization is procured. Every lion of temptation overcome brings both food and sweetness to the soul.

—J. A. Berry, of Moberly Mo., writes: "In a recent number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST I read that Bro. T. P. Haley had passed his fiftieth year as a preacher. I had supposed he had been a preacher longer than myself. But I am a little ahead of him. My ordination dates first Sunday in January 1853, in Columbia, signed by James Shannon and A. Douglas. I still have all the work I can do, but will be out of work Jan. 1." God bless the veterans! May there always be work for them to do.

—Bro. J. S. Hughes, who has given so much time and study to the writings of the Apostle John, is conducting an institute of correspondence on that subject. It is believed by many Bible scholars who have heard Bro. Hughes' lectures on this subject, that he has gained a real clue to the interpretation of the book, and that his lectures are wonderfully helpful to the churches where they are held. There is no doubt but what we are entering upon what may be called the Johannine period of Christianity, and that there remains much yet to be done in attaining his profound view of the Gospel. We hope Bro. Hughes will be kept busy in this work, and that many may share in the benefits of his investigation of this sacred writing. His address is 1203 Chamber of Commerce Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

—The editor was not able to attend the funeral services of General Drake, but sent a message of sympathy to Bro. F. L. Moffett, pastor of the church at Centerville, Iowa. We are in receipt of the following response from Bro. Moffett: "All appreciate your message of sympathy. A great man has fallen. We mourn as those bereft." The whole brotherhood shares in the sorrow of the bereaved church at Centerville.

—H. A. Northcutt has resigned at Kirksville, Mo., to take effect Jan. 1. He says: "My reason for resigning is, I am very much worked down, and feel that a change of work is necessary. The work here is very hard on the account of there being so many students here. The American School of Osteopathy is located here and one of the normal schools. I have been here four years and a half. During that time we have taken into the church at our regular Sunday services over 800 members; many of those were students and have gone away to other fields of labor. I will go into the evangelistic field the first of January."

—Last week we mentioned the call which the Brookfield (Mo.) Church has extended to Bro. R. E. L. Prunty for an indefinite time, accompanied with a raise in salary. We learn from a subsequent communication that the church is engaged in erecting a new building, and that the walls of the basement are about complete. Brother Prunty is putting the profits of his paper, the Brookfield Messenger, into this enterprise, and also the proceeds of his popular lecture, "Sunshine and Shade," which he is giving the churches for a collection at the close. Such liberality on the part of the preacher deserves hearty response from the people.

—J. Sharratt, of Burton, Kan., writes: "We have had the pleasure of having with us Bro. H. C. Shipley, of Jewell, Kan., giving us a week's lectures on his trip around the world. These lectures have been in the interest of foreign and C. W. B. M. work, and are the best ever given in our city. They were illustrated by stereopticon views of our mission stations and missionaries, also of the idols, heathen temples, manners and customs of the people in India, China, Japan and Hawaiian Islands, and were very fine. One of these lectures will do more to educate our people along the lines of missionary work than a hundred sermons. I trust our churches will try and secure him, for his terms are easy and his work is substantial. His permanent address is Jewell, Kan."

—Dr. Goodson, of St. Louis, recently preached a sermon in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church on King's Highway, in this city, which was printed in the St. Louis Republic. Bro. Louis S. Cupp, of Platte City, Mo., has made the following extracts from the sermon:

"The world has long since outgrown present-day organized church systems."

"The primitive church was the ideal church. Christ's prayer, 'That they may all be one,' etc. (quoted in full) . . . was the passion of his life . . . This was realized in the early church."

"Present-day methods and sects are to become a thing of history."

"A federation of churches is the next forward move."

"Verily this is no dream of a dreamer who dreams that be dreams."

"Let the movements already begun among denominations be hastened. Let there be not thirteen Presbyterian bodies in the United States, but one great Presbyterian Church, one national Methodist Church, and one universal Baptist Church. Let there be no effort to put 10 or 12 different churches in a small town of 2,000, but only one church."

"Personally I am ready to make any sacrifice to help such a union of churches."

We have asked Dr. Goodson for a copy of his sermon for our columns.

—The Joplin Daily Globe says: "Rev. Dr. Turner has performed a wonderful work in Joplin. He came here five years ago to a disorganized church. He went to work in earnest and soon perfect harmony was had among the members. Then he sought to erect a new building, and now the Christian Church has one of the finest edifices in the city. Dr. Turner commands the respect of every man, woman and child who knows him. . . . The meetings were brought to a close Sunday night. There was no sign of lost interest in the meetings and it is believed that had they continued until the first of the year new members could have been added daily. . . . For five years Evangelist Harlow was a fireman and engineer on the Missouri Pacific, and while thus employed he studied his Bible. He now has in his possession the Bible which he studied during the time he was employed in heaping coal into the firebox. He has been a close student of the Bible for a number of years, and some of his admirers have said they thought him capable of repeating from memory every verse in the New Testament. Probably the most impressive service of this day was the one Sunday afternoon. When the hundreds of new converts sat together, from the little boys and girls to the ones with gray hairs and bending forms, whole families united in the church, with their happy faces singing the praises of God it would have touched a heart of stone. Before this sight the scoffer would be silent. What this means for higher living and happier homes and a better city and community no one can measure. As the evangelist talked of their new duties and exhorted them to be faithful and closed expressing the hope that he would meet them all in the church triumphant, the people were melted to tears."

Eureka College.

There are about forty young men in the Bible department, sixteen of them supplying twenty-eight churches with regular preaching. Their work for the four months from July 1 to Nov. 1, shows over four hundred sermons preached, $200 for missions and sixty-five accessions, two-thirds of them by baptism. This is an excellent record for summer and early autumn.

President Hieronymus and an excellent faculty of sixteen are doing work of as high grade as any college among us.

Sec. J. G. Waggoner's first six months' work in the field brings to the college $10,000 in cash and pledges. To this the Swisher bequest is to be added. It will amount to between $8,000 and $10,000. Let the good work go on. A loyal observance of Education Day, on the third Sunday in January, will do more than aught else to help. Give Eureka $250,000 and 400 students.

E. L. Powell, of Louisville, has just closed a series of seven sermons with the church here. On Nov. 17 and 18 a number of the pastors from towns and cities gathered by invitation, and a most interesting and helpful series of conferences were held on evangelism, education and missions. A McLean was present at the last and gave one of his never-to-be-forgotten addresses on "Giving."

WORLD'S FAIR MARCH 1904.

Mr. John C. Weber, director of Weber's Military Band of Cincinnati, known as the "Prize Band of America," has composed the St. Louis World's Fair March 1904—and dedicated it to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. It will be distributed through the passenger department of the B. & O. S.-W. R. R., World's Fair Route, at 10 cents per copy.

The music is in sheet form, arranged for the piano, being very handsomely gotten up, with highly illuminated title cover. Mr. John C. Weber is not only a great Musical Director, but he has written some very catchy and popular marches. The St. Louis World's Fair March is his latest success, and will add further to his fame.

Mr. Weber and his great organization of artists has twice defeated all comers in national contests at Elks' Reunions. The last triumph was at Baltimore, Md., on the 21st of last July, when, in a notable contest, composed of the leading bands of America, won the first prize of $1000.00. It is confidently expected that Mr. Weber's World's Fair March will become a popular air during the next year, and every household should have a copy of this music.

Send 10 cents in silver to the undersigned, and copy of the World's Fair March will be mailed to your address.

The Joplin Meeting.

We have just closed in the First Church of this city, in point of the number brought to Christ, the greatest meeting ever recorded in the history of this restoration movement. Including a lecture at the close the meetings lasted 52 days, the time that Nehemiah used in restoring the walls of Jerusalem. Here, as then, we had opposition. Here also the people had a mind to work. In this time 675 people were received into the Church—474 were baptized, 116 were from the denominations, 50 of these being baptized, 25 by letter and 116 were by statement or restored from backsliding. Some of the latter had been out of fellowship for a quarter of a century and were practically conversions; 66 came forward the last Sunday. Not one invitation was given from start to finish without a response. We only stopped because the house was full of members. The last two weeks members in good numbers remained at home to give the unconverted a chance to hear. This is not all. This work was preceded by a meeting in South Joplin conducted by W. A. Moore with 117 additions, which with those received at regular services in the meantime, makes 809 additions to the two churches in this one campaign. Nor is this all. Brother Harlow will continue the work for some time on the south side, and we can not tell where it will yet end. Of how the people were turned away by the hundreds, of the possibilities had we been in a large tabernacle, of how the whole city and surrounding country is stirred, of the joy and the new hope of the church, of the many heart thrilling experiences of the services, we can not now speak in detail. By request of the evangelist a few words will be said for the encouragement of the brethren. The organization of a Board of Evangelism at our last national convention is one of the most significant things of our recent history. The work here ought not to be exceptional. Let us hope that a new day has dawned when we shall see people brought to Christ and the plea for unity in greater numbers than ever before in our history. I desire to mention three things:

1. The Preaching.

1. The equipment of the evangelist. He has a thorough knowledge of three things: human nature, the Bible and the modern pseudo philosophies. For ten years he has made a special study of psychology and he knows the workings of the mind. He knows man's sins, temptations and troubles and how to present the gospel in a way to most powerfully appeal to the will. The Bible is at his tongue's end. For over seven weeks he answered from one to thirty questions the same hour they were handed to him. These covered almost every phase of Bible knowledge, and never once did he hesitate for an appropriate answer. Many were brought to Christ in this way, and many who could not defend their religious position surrendered it for the position we occupy. The whole plan of redemption from Genesis to Revelation was set forth, illustrated and applied so that children could understand. His insight into the deep things of the Book is remarkable. And when he takes up the modern cults, Christian Science, Spiritism, Faith Healing and all the rest melt away before the merciless fire of his logic and reason. He does not denounce these things. He gives them credit for the good they have and then explains their achievements on scientific grounds, leaving their errors clearly exposed to view. His lecture on the New Thought ought to be heard by every church in the land.

3. His equipoise. He is not disconcerted or sidetracked by either censure and praise. No amount of opposition can draw him into a heat of temper or retaliation. He pursues his way, knowing that truth will triumph.

3. The preaching itself. The style is simple. No effort is made at oratorical display. People remember the message rather than the messenger. He is not tied down with notes. The sermon is in the mind and heart, burning to be delivered. The message is plain. No compromise is made with any form of sin or sectarianism. Yet the truth is spoken in love. People sometimes go away gnashing their teeth, but often return to unite with the church. It is doctrinal in the finest meaning of the word. Not only first principles, but all the great doctrines of the Word are expounded; not occasionally, but in every sermon. It was positive. He speaks as one having the authority of the truth. His statements seem to be an end to all controversy. No doubts or opinions are brought forth. The appeal is to the Word of God that liveth and abideth forever. The sermons are short but his language comes like a torrent. The appeal is always to the gospel as the power of God to save. No death bed stories are used to work up the emotions. Conscience and intellect are appealed to rather than feeling. People are urged to walk by faith and not by feeling. Last, he is powerful in exhortation. While the people sang a stirring hymn his clear voice could be heard warning, inviting, rebuking, pleading and persuading the ones convicted to accept the gospel. Sometimes a second appeal was made. These exhortations were simply irresistible. Men had either to surrender or remain away. This is one feature of New Testament evangelism not yet restored, it seems to me.

4. Best of all, the preacher lives his message. His life is pure and clean. For ten years he has lived in 75 miles of this place, and there is no crooked life to be apologized for. He preaches in a way that not only do the converts stay, but is so modest and retiring in manner that the pastor can stay also. With a most successful record both as pastor and evangelist for ten years past and yet young in years he will yet win many notable victories in the ministry. We pray that this meeting, his first as he re-enters the evangelistic field, may be the prophecy of his greatest life work.

2. The Music.

Bro. V. E. Ridenour, of Topeka, Kan., conducted the music. His solos not only appeal to the cultivated ear but always reach the heart. Each song is a sermon. While he sings there is a hush over the audience, and frequently the people are in tears. When thought best he sings illustrated songs. On the eleventh night of the meeting, there had been 99 additions. He then sang "The Ninety and Nine," and Brother Harlow asked for the one that was lost to come to the Good Shepherd. Twelve came and the church rejoiced with the angels. As a chorus leader he is a master. Such congregational singing has never been heard in this church. This feature of our meeting was a success.

3. The Church at Work.

The organization was thorough and every man did his duty with joy and alacrity. There were volunteers for every suggested duty. Thousands of invitation cards in the homes, cards in the store windows, daily bulletins on the street corners, full reports in the daily papers, etc., were a part of the work that never lagged till the last song had been sung. The spontaneity and initiative of the workers were the finest I have ever seen. In keeping with the work is the joy of every member and a happier church does not exist to-day. It is proper here to say that one factor of our success has been the work of J. W. Baker, pastor of the South Joplin Church. His work as superintendent of the Sunday-school of the First Church for four years helped greatly to prepare the harvest among the young people. His splendid liberality not only made the building of the First Church possible, but he also gave the building occupied by the South Side Church. His splendid executive ability has been a power in the work at all times. His whole heart and soul have been in this campaign from beginning to end. Honor to whom honor is due.

Of course there was opposition. Every church in town, including the Catholics, felt the need of revivals. There were two so-called union meetings conducted. Many false rumors as to our teachings were afloat. The

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles, and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate, people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

spirit of sectarianism is the same everywhere. Error never dies without a struggle. But these things seemed to help rather than to hinder. The people came to hear for themselves. The simple gospel was preached. The plea for unity was urged. The victory was won. Let the glory and the dominion be unto Him who hath redeemed us with His own precious blood!

W. F. TURNER.

As our great brotherhood will doubtless be anxious to know the secret of our success in this, the greatest meeting ever held by our people, and as modesty will forbid others stating all the facts, I desire to state what, in my judgment, were the principal factors.

First, the church as a whole, and especially the working force, is well respected and had the confidence of the entire city.

Second, great plans and preparations were made long in advance, and a spirit of faith and expectation permeated not only the whole church, but the community as well. The pastor preached for months, and special prayer-meetings in the church and throughout the city were held, with only one thought in mind—to save souls. The pastor visited me in my home months before the meeting and we laid plans carefully, every one of which was carried out in letter and spirit to the end of the meeting. The people had a mind to work, and a great deal of personal work was done. Everybody kept sweet and I heard not one criticism on either pastor, evangelist or singer during the entire meeting.

Third, the greatest single factor in it all is the high esteem in which the pastor, Brother Turner, is held not only by the church but by the whole city. He has been in and out before this people for five years and he is universally loved by all. His unswerving fidelity, his tireless energy, his sweet spirit, his loyalty to the truth and his courage to second every effort and statement is the great secret of our success. May the good Lord give us more Turners and we will have more just such victories. Don't worry, brethren, about what he will do with all these babes. He is equal to the occasion and will faithfully feed and care for this great flock to the glory of our God. W. E. HARLOW.

Springfield, Mo.

My Ebenezer.

We are closing a pleasant and profitable year with the Christian Church here. Have baptized fifteen at regular services, and had twenty added otherwise during the year thus far.

We hope very soon to have a protracted effort and to have my son assist. One confession last Lord's day.

When the time came to aid church extension I discovered that we had no insurance on the church house against fire. My theory is to let the secretaries write on till we have things right at home. After a liberal five year's insurance had been secured, we sent Brother Muckley an offering, and a good one.

Our call to continue during 1904, D. V., was unanimous, and at an increase of salary wife and I have started on the fortieth year of married life. We used to say if God spared us to see all of our nine children over twenty-one years of age, we ought to be ready and even willing to have the Lord call us hence at his own time. He has granted that blessing, and the time finds us in good health, although approaching the ages of 65 and 63. We have heard of but one complaint at Lamar. One dear consecrated sister has been "almost mad at the shortness of my sermons." I did not promise to reform.

The elder Thomas Bronston with whom I labored some in my earliest ministry, once gave me this homely but very practical illustration, "The churches are by preachers like hunters are by dogs. The dog that catches the game, rides home. This the winning dog greatly enjoys for a season. But by and by the young dog whom the old one has taught, all he knows, turns down the old dog, and catches the game. Then the young dog rides and the old dog walks and growls. I'm walking but not growling. Glad to see you young fellows in easier places than the old preachers ever had."

May God give us elderly men the grace not to growl if we are compelled to give place to the younger men. There are two classes of preachers that we have always tried to be good to when they have come our way—the old and the young, feeling that the middle-aged ought to be able to take care of themselves.

It is perhaps more difficult to descend than to ascend a hill, but I hope to be able to keep sweet and cheerful and tell a good story now and then till the descent is made. God has been on my side all the time, however poorly I have served him, and after all this sunshine, after all these blessings, I would be ungrateful not to bear bravely and patiently what dark hours may come as we close this pilgrimage here. I could stand to hear "this is your second wife," but to be asked if "tis not your daughter" is quite a thrust. So much for having or not having gray hairs. With a hearty goodwill for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST I close. S. W. CRUTCHER.

Hiram College News.

Jay Elwood Lynn, of Springfield, Ill., and a member of the class of '95, recently held us a meeting resulting in about forty additions.

We are adding seven hundred dollars' worth of new books to our library this term.

The college has received a gift of $2,000 from Mrs. Parmlee, the proceeds of which are to constitute a prize for the best thesis submitted by ministerial students of the senior class.

Our present term is very prosperous under the administration of Prof. Wakefield. Our enrollment is 294. A hopeful and enthusiastic spirit pervades faculty and student body.

A Special Appeal.

One of the hardest of hard things is to break away from old habits and contract new ones. For years we have taken our state mission offering in January, and the effort to change to the first Lord's day in November is proving disastrous to our treasury. Few, very few, of the churches have as yet taken the offering; they are going to take it, yes, but for some reason or another, they are not taking it now.

We had fully expected that, as it would be such an obvious benefit, the change of day would affect us very little, if any, and our work was pushed right along, the board making such arrangements as were necessary to meet the demands. This, too, in face of the fact that, in place of having a goodly sum in the treasury, we had nothing at all. But a crisis has been reached; we have gone as far as we can; the treasury must be relieved at once.

It would seem that there were enough churches in the state to whom the time of taking the offering is practically immaterial, to furnish the needed relief. Is this not your case? Can you not do this? Please don't be indifferent, the matter is too serious. We ask for immediate action on the part of both preachers and churches. Your instant, hearty, enthusiastic co-operation is needed. Let not one wait for another, but let all who can act immediately. We have planned to do the greatest year's work in all our history; by your co-operation we can succeed; without we shall fail. Help now. Help willingly. Help all you can.

W. F. RICHARDSON,
Chairman State Board.

THIS TESTIMONY

Will surely interest many readers of the Christian-Evangelist.

James G. Gray, Gibson, Mo., writes about Drake's Palmetto Wine as follows: I live in the Missouri swamps in Dunklin County and have been sick with Malarial fever and for fifteen months a walking skeleton. One bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine has done me more good than all the medicine I have taken in that fifteen months. I am buying two more bottles to stay cured. Drake's Palmetto Wine is the best medicine and tonic for Malarial, Kidney and Liver ailments I ever used or heard of. I feel well now after using one bottle.

A. A. Felding, Knoxville, Tenn., writes: I had a bad case of sour Stomach and Indigestion. I could eat so little that I was "falling to bones" and could not sleep nor attend to my business. I used the trial bottle and two large seventy-five cent bottles and can truthfully say I am entirely cured. I have advised many to write for a free trial bottle.

J. W. Moore, Monticello, Mo., makes the following statement about himself and a neighbor. He says: Four bottles of Drake's Palmetto Wine has cured me of catarrh of Bladder and Kidney trouble. I suffered ten years and spent hundreds of dollars with best doctors and specialists without benefit. Drake's Palmetto Wine has made me a well man. A young woman here was given up to die by a Minneapolis specialist and he and our local doctors said they could do no more for her. She has been taking Drake's Palmetto Wine one week and is rapidly recovering.

The Drake Formula Company, Drake Bldg., Chicago, Ill., will send a trial bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine free and prepaid to any reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. A letter or postal card is the only expense to get this free bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine.

RHEUMATISM Cured Without Medicine

The Success of Magic Foot Drafts in curing all kinds and conditions of rheumatism has been so great that the makers have decided to send them to all who write.

FREE—On Approval

We want everyone who has rheumatism to send us his or her name. We will send by return mail a pair of Magic Foot Drafts, the wonderful external cure which has brought more comfort into the United States than any internal remedy ever made. If they give relief, send us One Dollar; if not, don't send us a cent. You decide.

Magic Foot Drafts are worn on the soles of the feet and cure by absorbing the poisonous acids in the blood through the large pores. They cure rheumatism in every part of the body. It must be evident to you that we couldn't afford to send the drafts on approval if they didn't cure. Write today to the Magic Foot Draft Co., 515 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich., for a trial pair of drafts on approval. We send also a valuable booklet on Rheumatism.

The Growth and Character of Our Churches in Australasia.

G. A. Hoffman.

Your statistical secretary recently received a report from Wren J. Grinstead, Adelaide, South Australia, which is so gratifying to your secretary and indicates such rapid growth that we feel that it should be published through our religious press for the encouragement of our American brotherhood. The report is quite full and we can only give the important parts of it here. This is for the fiscal year closing 1903.

	Churches	Members	Baptisms	Gain	Bible School Scholars Enrolled
New South Wales	16	1911	196	172	1681
Queensland	24	850	288	200	700
South Australia	30	3749	506	361	2888
Tasmania	14	439	17	29	147
Victoria	99	6550	1203	774	6743
Western Australia	12	1100	400	392	806
Auckland District	19	862	228	144	700
Dweedon District	11	1108	133	109	839
Wellington District	10	729	61	30	823
Total	235	17,298	3,032	1,923	15,329

The report indicates that they have 85 ministers or evangelists, and what is especially gratifying, they gave to home and foreign missions the sum of $20,184.90, or $1.16 per member. This almost doubles our gifts proportionately in America. Another very comforting and cheering result is that the 17,298 members led 3,032 to the Christ, and the net gain was 1,923. That is for every six members, an additional one was baptized, and of the whole number baptized, 63 per cent is net gain, and there is a net of 11 per cent to the whole membership. In America we think we do well if we have a net gain of 33 per cent of those baptized, and a net gain of 3 per cent on the whole membership.

Accompanying this report we have the following statement from the same brother. I ask my brethren to carefully read and seriously think on these differences. Are there not some things in them that would be helpful to us?

The Churches of Christ in Australasia.

The movement for primitive Christianity in Australasia had its origin about the middle of the last century, by the banding together of various brethren from the English churches of Christ, and some from Baptist churches. After a few years of struggle against sectarianism, some American evangelists came to their aid, and in their many years of labor in the colonies, left a strong impress upon the movement, although the English temperament and origin of the Australian churches, together with the close political, social and commercial connection with the mother country, largely determine the character of the movement. They thus occupy a mean between the characteristics of the English and American Churches of Christ; having the conservatism, the compactness of organization, and perhaps some of the exclusiveness of the English brethren, with a large measure of the aggressive evangelism of the American.

Between the American and Australasian churches, there are some points of difference worthy of note. The preachers are all called evangelists, whether located or not, the terms "pastor" and "minister" being both generally rejected as unscriptural. The Lord's day morning service is based upon the mutual principle—that is, the different items, as reading, presiding, praying, speaking, etc.—are assigned to individual brethren, and the preacher is not in charge of the service. The contribution box and the Lord's Supper are usually extended only to immersed believers. The church hymnals and the Scripture lessons for the Lord's Day morning service are practically uniform throughout Australasia.

In organization the Australasian churches are active and aggressive. Endeavor Societies, Sunday-schools, mission bands, mutual improvement, temperance and Dorcas Societies are to be found everywhere. Each state has an evangelistic committee, corresponding to the state mission boards in America; and usually a foreign mission committee and a Sunday-school union. These are generally appointed at the annual state meeting, which is termed a conference. Representation at the conferences is by churches. There is no central organization for the whole of Australasia as yet, but it is hoped that a general conference will be organized in 1905.

The movement is represented in every one of the six states of the commonwealth of Australia, in New Zealand, and among the Kanakas of the South Sea Islands. We are unrepresented only in the Northern Territory and in British New Guinea. A congregation recently formed at Johannesburg, South Africa, reports to the Australian Christian, but definite statistics from it are not available. We have one weekly paper. There is no endowed college of the Bible among us, but training classes are conducted by local evangelists in Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide.

In the absence of a federal organization, the preparation of these statistics has been purely voluntary, and there will no doubt be many imperfections found in them. It is hoped that a regular statistical secretary will be appointed before next year, and that all changes required in the statistics will be reported to him.

WREN J. GRINSTEAD,

Adelaide, South Australia.

It is certainly possible that if some of the things practiced by our far-away brethren were inaugurated in our American churches, it would be a great help and blessing to us. Think of many of our country churches where an evangelist preaches once a month and the church building stands idle the other three Lord's days. Think of our many churches who are constantly working on the outside community for help to support their work instead of developing their own membership in the grace of giving. May not the above report and statement have its lessons for us, and may there not be some things in it which are more nearly in accord with the Scriptures, as well as more successful in securing the attention and conversion of men?

Sure of Its Victims.

Dr. D. M. Bye, of Indianapolis, Ind., the great cancer specialist, who has cured over six thousand cases of cancer within the last ten years with soothing, balmy oils, says that one time he selected a list of five hundred names of persons who had written to him relative to taking treatment, but who, from some cause, had neglected to do so, and wrote to them several months later inquiring after their condition. To his surprise and grief he learned that nearly twenty per cent had died within five months from the time they had written their letters of inquiry. If left to itself cancer is always sure of its victim. Book sent free, giving particulars and prices of Oils. Address Dr. D. M. BYE Co., Drawer 505 Indianapolis, Ind.

CURES DEAFNESS AND CATARRH.

ONLY ONE REMEDY IS CERTAIN,
AND THAT IS "ACTINA."

Deafness is the direct result, in 95 out of every hundred cases, of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The effect of catarrh is to fill up and clog the air passages with deposits, these in a short time stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Deafness ensues, and the hearing cannot be restored until these deposits are removed. It is impossible to reach the inner ear by probing or spraying, and that is the reason why the greatest aurists and physicians find their skill baffled. But science has discovered a way to reach these heretofore inaccessible portions of the head. This discovery has been named "Actina." It is a vapor current which, passing through the Eustachian tubes, attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhal deposits, so that they pass away, and at the same time loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, so that they immediately respond to the slightest sound vibration. Ringing noises in the head are also caused by catarrh, and are the premonitory signs of deafness. "Actina" never fails to cure this distressing affliction; we have known cases of years' standing to be cured in three weeks. "Actina" is also a certain specific for asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headaches, all of which are either directly or indirectly caused by catarrh. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case; we give advice free, and positive proof of cures. Prof. Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease also sent free. Address New York & London Electric Ass'n, Dept. 203D, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

A Year's Missionary Record.

New Castle, (Ind.,) church has not been anti-missionary but O-missionary. For several years nearly all money sent to this worthy cause came from the C. W. B. M. But during the year 1903, although $500 was spent on improvements of the church property, the following offerings were made for missions: To foreign missions, $75. The C. E. and pastor each have their own native missionary in India. To Home missions, $113. To state missions, $110. Both the Endeavor and S. S. assisted in this offering. To various benevolences, including help to neighboring churches, the poor and ministerial relief, $80. The Junior Endeavor sent $62.50, being the banner society of the state. The C. W. B. M. offerings for the year were $213.50. The total for missions was $664, not including an individual offering of $200 to the C. W. B. M. These offerings were gifts, not money raised (!) by suppers, etc. According to the estimate of our secretaries these offerings to foreign, home and state work represent the saving of 125 souls. What a rich field for labor! And we have done so little in proportion to our ability! The church that spends $2,000 on itself ought to give at least $1,000 to missions. Missions is the cure for selfishness, and selfishness is the present greatest enemy of the church.

College Men for the Orient.

John R. Mott, senior college secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, has just announced that several prominent college and university men are ready to sail for the Orient to become secretaries of the Young Men's Christian Association in Shanghai, Hongkong and Nagasaki. Gailey, the big Princeton half back, is now in Tientsin, where he has been conducting an association among the sons of the mandarins. Carter, of Harvard, who was on the winning hockey team, is traveling secretary for all the associations in the Indian empire. Robertson, the Purdue athlete, who was instructor in engineering, is now at Nanking, the head center of the Chinese examination system. C. C. Rutledge, of Philadelphia, who was one of the crack baseball and football men of the Ohio Wesleyan University, will sail in November for Hongkong. For two years he was in the Naval Academy. He was a volunteer in the Spanish war and rose from private to first lieutenant. For the past two years he has been the secretary of the associations in the medical, law and dental schools of Philadelphia. The great association of over a thousand members in the foreign concession in Shanghai will have reinforcements this year from America. It has separate departments from Chinese and Europeans. Plans are on foot for a building on the American model for each of these branches. Notable achievements in cricket and track athletics have made this association respected even among the numerous nationalities of the foreign settlement. Arthur Rugh, a former college baseball captain, will go to Shanghai to help Robert E. Lewis, the author of "Educational Conquest of the Far East," in developing the association there. W. W. Lockwood, of Omaha, another college man, will also go to Shanghai. A member of the Princeton faculty, N. Wilbur Helm, will become the first American secretary in Southern Japan. His headquarters will be at the port of Nagasaki, the metropolis of the island of Kiushui. Buenos Ayres in Argentine already has a flourishing association that has grown in two years to 450 members, with 100 men in the night school. In the capital of Brazil similar progress has been made.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $9.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washer Co., of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 12 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men.

CALIFORNIA.—Los Angeles.—Began a meeting with Broadway Christian Church on Sunday evening. Brothers Coulter and Swindle are splendid Christian men and ministers.—R. P. SHEPHERD.

COLORADO.—Boulder, Nov. 23.—Our meeting closed last night with 108 additions. We had a grand meeting.—WM. DALE.

ILLINOIS.—Girard, Nov. 23.—We have just closed one of the most successful meetings ever held in this city. Brother Harold E. Monser has, in the fear and the love of the Master, been preaching the gospel. The results are as follows: by primary obedience, 31, by letter 1, statement 3, reclaimed 2, Adventists 2, Episcopalians 2, Methodists 1, Dunkards 1, making a total of 43. Of these 19 are males and six are heads of families. I wish to speak a word of commendation regarding the work of Brother Monser. He has conducted this meeting without engendering prejudices or bitterness. Our denominational friends have listened to the Christ story without having their peculiarities ridiculed. There has been no excitement or play upon the emotions. The gospel has been preached by a man who knows and loves it. The blessing of the Girard church is upon him and his good wife as they leave for Atlanta, Ill.—MEADE E. DUTT.

Danville, Nov. 23.—Second Church, four added at regular services yesterday. This makes 34 additions since the middle of July. All of these adults and helpful members—LEWIS P. KOPP, minister.

Girard, Nov. 28.—Our meeting in Girard closed on Nov. 23 with 43 additions, as follows: 31 by primary obedience, 1 from Methodists, 2 from Episcopalians, 1 from German Baptists, 2 from First Day Adventists, 2 reclaimed, 1 by letter and 3 by statement. It is a pleasure to hold a meeting for the church at Girard. Am now at Atlanta, Ill. I have been engaged for the first six months of next year by the First District Board of Illinois, in co-operation with the State Board. I will endeavor to organize churches in four cities in northern Illinois. Bro. Meade E. Dutt, the pastor at Girard, will have charge of the singing for me.—HAROLD E. MONSER.

Murphysboro, Nov. 28.—Twenty-three added to date. We begin a meeting at Washburn, Ill., Dec. 6. We have an open date for February.—LAWRENCE WRIGHT and L. R. SMITH.

East St. Louis, Nov. 30.—The church was rededicated yesterday by L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind. Two thousand three hundred dollars has been spent in a thorough remodeling of the building, and the church was reopened free from debt. There have been 7 additions in the past five weeks.—F. D. FILLMORE, Pastor.

West Point.—Geo. W. Buckner, of Macomb, Ill., has just closed a meeting here with 18 additions.

TWO KINDS OF CHILDREN

Children that grow too fast and those that seem hardly to grow at all, both need Scott's Emulsion.

It gives that rich vital nourishment which is the secret of all healthy growth. It rounds out the long limbs, and helps children to grow without using up all their strength in growing.

Mothers ought to know more about the wonderful help which Scott's Emulsion would give their children.

We'll send you a sample free upon request.

SCOTT & BOWNE, 409 Pearl Street, New York.

INDIANA.—Knightstown, Nov. 23.—G. L. Wharton was with us yesterday and inspired us all. A good offering for the Bible College in India was taken in the morning and Boys' and Girls' Rally Day was observed in the evening and another good offering received. The day marked the best mission day in the history of the church. All missions to the front; is my motto.—ALLEN T. SHAW, pastor.

Cayuga, Nov. 24.—Our meeting at Knox, Ind., which lasted three weeks, closed last Friday night with 16 added to the church—13 by confession and baptism; two by letter and statement, one from Methodists. Began here last night.—J. J. TAYLOR.

Marion, Nov. 22.—Our meeting at the Tabernacle Church at Marion closed its fourth week Nov. 21. Best hearing ever had here: 350 extra seats and at times turning people away. To this date 3 baptized, 15 others received. Meeting continues.—E. L. FRAZIER.

Madison, Nov. 23.—One by letter yesterday from Baptists. Boys' and Girls' Rally Day was observed in splendid shape; large audience, good program and a good offering. This is one of the best services we have.—J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

Huntington, Nov. 23.—We were overrun at all our services yesterday—Sunday-school, Endeavor and church services. Six persons were received into the membership of the church—four by confession and obedience and two by letter. We are in a series of sermons on "The Ascent of Man," and so far the audiences have taxed the capacity of our building. Our work is encouraging.—CEPHAS SHELburne.

Manville.—The church at Manville has recently enjoyed the labors of Bro. J. Murray Taylor, of Madison, in a series of meetings. Bro. Taylor preached for about three weeks, generally twice a day, and his labors resulted in thirty additions. The church and community were greatly pleased, not only with the plain and scriptural teaching of Bro. Taylor, but with his kind and courteous demeanor in social circles. He made many friends who will long remember his persistent efforts for the salvation of souls. The writer of these lines, having preached for the Manville Church just fifty years, now desires to hand over the pastorate to other hands. Indeed, such has been his desire for several years. At seventy-two, although his eyes are somewhat dim, his natural strength is but little abated. The church at Vevay, Ind., has recently extended to him a unanimous call to serve it half the time. He has accepted this call and entered upon his work, still preaching at Manville one-fourth of the time, but not acting as pastor.—J. W. LANHAM.

Marion, Nov. 28.—The fifth week of the S. M. Martin meeting with the Tabernacle Church at this place brought us 19 additions. We have 36 to date. Meeting continues.—E. L. FRAZIER.

New Albany, Nov. 25.—Just closed a meeting at Austin, Ind., during which 11 were added—7 by confession, 2 Baptists, 1 Methodist, 1 Dunkard. The best result was manifested in the church. The congregation is in the best condition during its thirty-five years of existence. My next meeting will be at Courtland, Ind.—U. G. SUTHERLIN, Evangelist, 206 McLean Ave., New Albany Ind.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Wagoner, Nov. 23.—Two additions yesterday; one the Sunday before and one the Sunday preceding that date also, making four recently.—J. B. ASKEW.

IOWA.—Montezuma, Nov. 23.—Three accessions yesterday: one by statement, one restored, one by baptism. We are now in our beautiful new parsonage.—J. H. STARK.

Seymour, Nov. 23.—One added by statement and two by letter yesterday. We expect to begin a series of meetings with the year, and desire a leader of song—one who can lead and drill our forces.—S. B. ROSS.

Dean, Nov. 27.—Bro. W. R. Gill, of New Market, Iowa, commenced a meeting with the Hilltown Christian Church, Sunday, Nov. 22; has preached six sermons to date. Result, one reclaimed, fourteen by confession, crowded house and interest increasing. Will report again later.—G. W. PATRICK.

KANSAS.—Cherryvale, Nov. 23.—We are in a glorious meeting here with 21 accessions in eight days, 13 yesterday; nearly all by baptism, a majority are males. Brother C. A. Shive is the zealous pastor.—E. W. BRICKERT, Evangelist.

Herington, Nov. 24.—One baptism since last report.—F. M. McHALL.

Wellington, Nov. 24.—Two additions here Sunday: one by letter and one by baptism.—H. M. BARNETT.

Glasgow, Nov. 26.—The work in these parts is doing well. Four added since last report.—J. M. BEAVER.

Dodge City, Nov. 25.—Am well begun in a meeting here with Bro. S. S. McGill and people. Two added and interest increasing nicely. I have calls for meetings in four states and two territories.—T. L. NOBLITT.

Chetopa, Nov. 25.—The church at Chetopa has just closed a meeting with home forces. Eleven additions: 9 by confession and baptism and 2 reclaimed. Bro. R. H. Tanksley, of Oswego, preached for us the last week. We are rejoiced.—O. M. PENNOCK.

Melvorn, Nov. 24.—Three additions last Lord's day at regular services, two by confession and one by statement.—J. F. POWERS, Ottawa.

MISSOURI.—Butler Nov. 23.—Miles Horn, a prominent attorney, made the good confession yesterday. Contribution in Bible-school $16.92, and 150 present.—E. H. WILLIAMSON.

Mountain Grove, Nov. 23.—Just closed a short meeting at Fairview Church, five miles from here with five additions. I start to-day for Nebraska to hold a meeting at Liberty Ridge. Can hold another meeting in Nebraska at close of that meeting. Address me for the next two weeks at Gilead, Neb. Permanent address Mountain Grove.—E. W. YOCUM.

Weaubleau, Nov. 23.—We had two added here yesterday from the Methodist. We have a good little band of workers here. I will close my year's work here in December. They have called me for another year.—S. E. HENDRICKSON.

Carrollton, Nov. 11.—We closed a two weeks' meeting with Narceline congregation last Sunday evening. Seven by letter and relation, two by baptism. We would like to correspond with congregations near Carrollton wanting preachers next year.—J. J. LIMERICK.

Kirksville, Nov. 24.—Three young men came into the church here last Sunday.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Kingston, Nov. 22.—We are in the midst of a glorious meeting: 18 additions, 13 by confession, 7 added to-day; more to follow; house packed; interest intense. Bro. F. F. Wyatt and wife are doing splendid work. Their next meeting will be at Horton, Kan., with L. H. Barnum.—HAROLD BALDWIN.

Fulton, Nov. 23.—I have recently held a very delightful and successful meeting with the Mexico Church. Brother Kokendoffer is one of our noblest and grandest men. He is doing a great and good work. When the proposed new building is completed, even better work will be possible.—MADISON A. HART.

Windsor, Nov. 24.—Just closed a short meeting at Liberty Church in Jasper Co., one addition by primary obedience, and Bro. O. W. Jones, of Jasper, will give them one fourth the coming year. I begin meeting at Belle, Nov. 28.—R. B. HAVENER.

Paynesville, Nov. 24.—Just closed a four weeks' meeting here with 22 additions and the church greatly revived. Eld. W. A. Meloan did the preaching. He gave us the strongest, clearest and most effecting teaching and preaching that our church has had for years. This is Brother Meloan's birthplace, and it was a great delight to him to come after his 31 years of ministerial work, back to his old home and among his friends and kinsfolk, and to lead them in spiritual things. Brother Meloan will always have a royal welcome to the hearts and homes of the people of Paynesville.—M. D. DUDLEY.

Springfield, Nov. 29.—We are nearing the close of the third week, with 91 additions. Close to night.—BROOKS BROS., evangelists, D. W. MOORE, pastor.

Shelbyville, Nov. 25.—I have accepted the work at this place. The outlook for good work is splendid. Had two additions last Lord's day: one from the Methodists.—CLARENCE E. WAGNER.

Bethany, Nov. 24.—A two weeks' meeting at New Castle, Mo., with five additions by confession.—ENOS OATMAN.

Odessa, Nov. 27.—Five weeks' meeting, with J. J. Lockhart, closed; 65 additions, 30 heads of families; 34 baptisms. The greatest meeting in every respect that has been held in any church in Odessa for many years. Bible-school doubled and Christian Endeavor will be doubled.—DAVID LYON.

Clinton, Nov. 28.—We have had one of the best meetings of my experience here. While at every service we have sought men for Christ, and many have accepted him, our chief purpose was to build up the church and deepen the spiritual life. I never saw a better opportunity to make a good, strong church than here and now. The additions so far have been among the very best people in the city. My wife is with me conducting the music. We go to Hillsboro, Tex., Dec. 1, January at Ft. Collins, Colo., February and possibly March at Syracuse, N. Y.—F. O. FANNON.

Lockwood, Nov. 26.—Bro. A. J. Williams has just closed a very successful meeting at this place of six weeks. Our little town was stirred up as never before. We had 21 additions, 9 confessions, 12 by commendation, 2 from the Methodists and 2 from the Baptists and 8 took membership. Brother Williams is an all-around evangelist.—D. E. PALMER.

MICHIGAN.—Saginaw, Nov. 23.—Began here yesterday: two added at the morning service. Large and enthusiastic audiences at all services. Outlook encouraging; Brother Cowperthwait left work in splendid condition.—I. S. RAUM.

NEBRASKA.—Edgar, Nov. 23.—I have been called to the leadership of the church at this place for next year, taking the place of my uncle, who was a worthy, energetic and consecrated worker in the vineyard of the Lord, he having removed to and taken work at Hartsville, Mo. I baptized a young man and a young woman yesterday after service.—A. C. YOCUM.

NEW YORK.—First Church, Elmira, Oct. 30.—Just closed what was, in many respects, the best meeting in the history of this church. Bro. Stephen J. Corey, state evangelist of New York, did the preaching. Thirteen persons were added to the membership, but this does not, by any means, measure the amount of good done. It was pre-eminently a meeting for the members. The church has just launched a building project which we hope to carry out in the spring.—C. C. CRAWFORD, Pastor.

Buffalo, Nov. 24.—Two more added here at Jefferson St. last Lord's day. I find this a most responsive people.—B. S. FERRALL.

Gloversville, Nov. 24.—Nov. 8 was a great day for the Disciples of Christ. After much work and great sacrifice we completed our church home and formally dedicated it free from debt to the work of the Master. This was made possible by a promised loan from the Board of Church Extension to purchase a centrally located lot. Following the dedication, Stephen J. Corey, state evangelist, began a series of gospel meetings. Under the faithful preaching of the word, 37 responded to the invitation of the gospel, making about 70 added to the church in six months. This suggests at least the fact that New York is a responsive mission field, our mission points gaining over 39 per cent last year, with the prospects of reaching a much higher per cent this year. Nov. 28 closed my work here. Bro. C. T. Fredenburgh has been called to succeed me. Nov. 29 I enter upon my work with the Second Church of Christ, Brooklyn, N. Y.—JOS. KEEVIL.

OHIO.—Lockland, Nov. 24.—On the last two Lord's days we have had seven added in the mission here: four by confession, two by letter, one by statement. The outlook is very hopeful.—WILL G. LOUCKS.

Cleveland, Nov. 23.—Franklin Circle's offering for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day is $100. Five confessions at yesterday morning's service and five recently by letter.—EDGAR D. JONES.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.—Norman, Nov. 23.—At the close of our services last night I baptized a young man 22 years old.—J. G. CREASON.

Newkirk, Nov. 23.—Splendid services last Lord's day: increased audiences. One accession since last report. Had a fine Rally Day program: raised more than our apportionment.—F. D. WHARTON.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Pleasantville, Nov. 23.—The meeting at Shamburg still increasing in interest. Three confessions Sunday night making fifteen up to date and many more expected this week. Good attendance and unusual attention make the prospect very encouraging.—W. H. H. MONROE.

Turtle Creek, Nov. 19.—Closed a four weeks' meeting with the church here last night. It has been a blessed fellowship. There were 17 added; 10 baptisms and 7 by statement. One baptism at Rowan Avenue, Pittsburg, in a short meeting before the Turtle Creek meeting. Begin at Knoxville, Pittsburg, Nov. 22.—F. A. BRIGHT, Evangelist.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—Columbia, Nov. 23.—W. M. Taylor closed a two weeks' meeting here yesterday. Three confessions, but only one was baptized. The indifference among the church members here is heart-sickening, and Brother Taylor, who is an earnest, consecrated worker, was much grieved thereat. He told the congregation yesterday that they had not the work at heart or they would have at least attended the meetings more regularly. We need a pastor badly, one who is sensible, earnest and energetic. We have no use for a builder of air castles, but a man who is impressed with the greatness of his message and its adaptation to the needs of all men, will be able to do a great work; he will get very little encouragement, however, except the knowledge that he is doing his duty.—EDWARD EVERETT HOLLINGWORTH.

TEXAS.—Walnut Springs.—Closed a meeting of 12 days with Walnut Springs Church, resulting in 13 accessions, 12 by baptism and one reclaimed. This is the seventh meeting I have held for this congregation during my nine years' stay here.—W. L. DUDLEY.

WASHINGTON.—Everett, Nov. 25.—The 15th of November was the last day of Bro. A. L. Crim's acceptable service of a little over one year with us. Not one voice was raised against him, but he thought it duty to go, so we paid him up in full, bid him God speed, and another hope went down and another niche was made for happy memories. The last night witnessed ten additions, seven by immersion, so that it was a time for mingled joy and sadness, for smiles and tears. We are waiting with great anxiety to hear from our mother, the C. W. B. M., as to whom we may expect to come to the work here. There was never a more united congregation than this,

FORGET YOU EVER HAD IT.

Catarrh, the Most Odious of All Diseases Stamped Out, Root and Branch.

Catarrh is the most foul and offensive disease that afflicts the human race. Any one with social ambitions had better renounce them if he has a bad case of catarrh, for his presence, if tolerated at all, will be endured under protest. The foul and sickening breath, the watery eyes, the hawking and spitting and fetid discharge at the nose make the unfortunate sufferer the most avoided of human beings.

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are the hope and relief of catarrh victims all over the world. They go direct to the root of the disease and thoroughly eradicate it from the human system. They cleanse and purify the blood of all catarrhal poisons and under their influence all impurities are carried off. The blood becomes pure, the eye brightens, the head is cleared, the breath becomes sweet, the lost sense of smell is restored, the discharges cease and the sufferer again feels that he has something to live for. He is again a man among men and can meet his fellow-beings with satisfaction and pleasure.

"I suffered from catarrh for 15 years. It would be worse at certain seasons than others, but never failed to annoy me and cause me more or less misery during that period. About a year ago I got so bad that I thought of abandoning my practice. I was a nuisance to myself and all who came near me. My condition was very humiliating and especially so in the court room. I had tried, I thought, every known remedy: all kinds of balms, ointments, inhalers, sprays, etc., till I thought I had completed the list. I was finally told of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets by a friend who took pity on me and, as a drowning man will catch at a straw, I got some and began taking them. I began to improve from the first day and I kept up the good work you may rest assured. In six weeks I was as free from catarrh as the day I was born, but to make assurance doubly sure, I continued the treatment for six weeks longer.

"I have had no trace of catarrh in my system since. I am entirely free from the odious disease and feel like a new man. I write this letter unsolicited for the benefit of fellow-sufferers and you may give it as widespread publicity as you wish."

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50cts. a box and it would be well nigh impossible to find a field of so great promise.—G. S. JUDD.

WISCONSIN.—Milwaukee, Nov. 23.—Nine added since last report. Work prospers.—C. M. KINDLER.

WYOMING.—Sheridan.—Two additions to the church here at regular services last Lord's day, one by letter and one from the Baptists.—F. E. BLANCHARD.

An Old and Well-tried Remedy

Current Literature

BACKGROUNDS OF LITERATURE. By Hamilton Wright Mabie. Illustrated. (The Outlook Co., New York. $2 net).

Most of the writers who have gotten an enduring hold upon the hearts and minds of men have had their feet firmly planted upon some particular spot of earth and have drawn from it much of the inspiration and strength for their achievements. Burns is not less but more a poet of mankind because he was in a special sense the poet of Ayr. Wordsworth's dependence upon the English lake district blindly sympathetic, and filled with the charm of an English style that is both rich and pure, would be mere repetition. We have already said that Mr. Mabie wrote them.

HIS PA'S ROMANCE. By James Whitcomb Riley. (The Bobbs-Merrill Co. $1 net).

Riley once more, and a hearty welcome to him! And it is Riley at his best. The fifty poems in this volume (with a very few exceptions) have not been printed before. Among them are good specimens of Mr. Riley's various styles: poems of the corner grocery and the wholesome philosophy of rural Hoosierdom; poems of childhood; poems of nature and sentiment in English (not dialect); tender and beautiful tributes to friends, Maurice Thompson, "Bill Nye" and Benjamin Harrison. We do not remember that Mr. Riley ever wrote anything more delectably foolish than "The Toy Balloon." When he takes a turn at Irish dialect in "Chairley Burke" the result is much better than it usually is when he gets out of the relatively narrow field in which he is supreme. In "The Old Man of the Sea," the author assumes the role of moralist or preacher more distinctly than he usually cares to, but his little sermon on the power of habit is embodied in a lyric form that almost sets itself to music. The poem which gives its title to the book is one of the best of Mr. Riley's longer narrative poems.

GETTING ONE'S BEARINGS — OBSERVATIONS FOR DIRECTION AND DISTANCE. By Alexander McKenzie, D.D. (Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago. $1.25.)

The reader's first impressions are tinged with disappointment. It is of the same sort of work as the old favorites—Mathews Getting On In the World, and the Character Building Series by Samuel Smiles. It lacks the brilliant rhetorical embellishments of the one, and the charming quaintness of the other, and yet produces the conviction that it exceeds both in actual value. It is truer to life than the former, and deals with more modern conditions than the latter. It consists of "Talks to College Men." These "talks" are richly freighted with practical aid for the youth seeking to make the most of his life. They abound in beautiful portrayals of true gentlemanliness. They greatly inspire to the attainment of high rank in the orders of real manhood and nobility. The Gentleman, Imagination, The Calling, Shibboleth and Religion are dissertations whose careful perusal will prove valuable even to college alumni who have been for years in ungloved contact with the world and destiny.

was not provincialism, but was rather his particular channel of communication with nature's infinite reservoir. Even the universal Shakespeare had relations of special intimacy with Warwickshire. Mr. Mabie has a large and fruitful theme when he essays to point out some of the local dependencies in the case of a few great writers, and to show how their work has been influenced by these attachments. The seven chapters are on "The Lake Country and Wordsworth; Emerson and Concord; The Washington Irving Country; Weimar and Goethe; The Land of Lorna Doone; America in Whitman's Poetry; The Land of Scott." It will be seen that the author has not made any attempt to exhaust his theme, but has only chosen a few typical instances. One might, from the title, expect the emphasis to be placed on the descriptive element. In reality it is upon the critical. Most of the chapters are essentially essays in criticism. To say that these essays are dependable in statements of fact, fair and convincing in questions of critical judgment, warmly but not

Missouri Bible-School Notes.

Boys' and Girls' Rally Day is to come the Sunday before Thanksgiving or any other Sunday that suits your school better, but see that the day is kept and an offering taken for home and state, as fifty per cent of the offering is given to state Bible-school work, while the other goes to general home missions, making it worth while for every school in the state to keep the day and help forward these good works.

Have you had the Recruiting Campaign? Do you really want to increase the membership of the school, the number of Bibles used, the punctuality of all, the regularity of your school membership? Then keep the school interested by the recruiting campaign. It surely does it, as many are testifying.

The new school at Minden Mines, under F. M. Usher, is growing right along, averaging seventy, the result of their new house and the splendid work of Sister McCoy Crank, their minister and Superintendent Usher.

Liberal is going to keep Boys' and Girls' Rally Day; so should your school, and they will if the matter is brought before them. Will you do it?

Mrs. Madison Miller is wisely continued as superintendent of Liberty, while their records show the presence of nearly every teacher every Sunday. This is what tells in this good work, and Liberty should be proud of such teachers. Robert Graham Frank is just opening up his work and all are delighted with the outlook, and the next move will be a new house in Liberty. Good!

John P. Jesse has held five protracted meetings in Camden Point in five successive years, every one of which was a success, netting 250 additions to the church, and then, best of all, 130 of them came from the Orphan School, showing clearly the character of work done in that institution. President Barham and his splendid faculty are doing such good work that the school is crowded again this year and only needs more room. President Barham superintends the Bible-school and six of the teachers are from the Orphan School. What a great work for Christ and the worthy young women of the northwest is being done! M. M. Goode is helping in the meeting this year, and the brethren think him fine, so that during all the bad weather the house has been crowded, with thirty additions, so that no one talks of Brother Goode as being over the "dead line."

Brother Head's good meeting at Brunot shows sixteen additions, nearly all "primary," being twelve confessions, three Baptists, one Congregationalist, and he organized an Endeavor with thirty members, and is now at Potosi. Brother Havener is at Berea, Shelby, Brother Moore at Lucerne, all working for Christ and the children, and are worthy of your support. Have you sent it? Will you?

Now, do not defer Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, but have a great time, raise the school's apportionment and then put before the school "Certificate of Honor," coming from B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O., and worthy of your efforts.

Meeting our financial obligations promptly depends on you; please do not fail.

Would you believe it? The campaign goes right along and now word comes that Cassville is going to be a record-breaker.

The Webster county meeting was great and more money was raised for the work than has been given in years, just as F. M. Hooten wanted and does. They are going to make an especial effort to revive some of the weaker congregations of the county. Northview extended us every courtesy, and we enjoyed the meeting very much. Webster will push to the front if good men back Hooten.

LaBelle is one of the exceptions in Bible-school work, first in having a superintendent that is always on hand and on time, for so Frank Elick does. They are to keep Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, they are going to have a cradle roll, a home department, and more than meet their apportionment to our work. D. L. Bourne is an expert in review, and the children enjoy him greatly, while J. H. Jones in his meeting with singer C. E. Wagner, has given satisfaction to all, and Brother Jones has been called for another year. LaBelle has the best record for 1903 in Lewis county, and it is no unworthy record either for faithfulness did it.

The "roll of honor" to go to the schools meeting their apportionment on Boys' and Girls' Rally Day to be kept Sunday before Thanksgiving, or when it suits you this fall, is very pretty indeed, and all our schools should strive for it. You get your supplies free from B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio. Let us put Missouri right to the front in this grace also. We can do it and we will.

Miss Grace Moss superintends at Lebanon, and with that womanly determination stays with her work until it is "the talk of the town," having near 200 enrolled, and they are going to introduce the cradle roll and keep Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. S. G. Clay is doing such good work there, that he will be continued. Good!

Washington, Laclede county, has their new house in shape, and are in their Bible-school doing good work for Christ, adding another band to the county force.

Kirkville is one of the hardest works in the state, only because it is such a school town and with so many students with every one of whom H. A. Northcutt keeps in touch, thus making his work very heavy, but the results are very good.

Another fine superintendent is Mrs. M. J. Groom, Richland, and where Jno. R. Blunt and his devoted wife are doing such good work for Christ and the children. Mrs. Groom has had a teacher's meeting for nine years. Think of that, and is going to have a cradle roll, then home department. Of course such a school helps all the work, and they will keep Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, and are even now planning for a Christmas entertainment. Work, you say, and of course, and the trouble with so many schools is the leaders try to run them without work, and it can not be.

Not less than 300 Missouri schools ought to keep Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, and they will too, if the workers will call their attention to it. We owe it to our home work, to the children, to the Master, and to the salvation of souls.

Third quarter is due Dec. 1, and that ought to be sufficient. Write.

The Quiet Hour

I could love thee, O God, all the same if there were no heaven, and if there were no hell I would fear thee no less.—Teresa.

Men at some times are masters of their fates; the fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, but in ourselves, that we are underlings.—Shakespeare.

It is our Maker's care that plants alike thorns and flowers in our path. To reject His flowers would be none the less filial than to repine at His thorns.—Frances Power Cobbe.

The tissue of the life to be
We weave with colors all our own;
And in the field of destiny
We reap as we have sown.

—Whittier.

When I found that it was Christ's nature to lift men out of weakness to strength, out of impurity to goodness, out of everything low and debasing to superiority, I felt that I had found a God.—Henry Ward Beecher.

A great many people purpose to do right, but the trouble with them is that they purpose in their heads, and that doesn't amount to much. If you are going to be a Christian you must purpose to serve God away down in your heart. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness."—D. L. Moody.

If any little word of mine
Can make a life the brighter,
If any little song of mine
Can make a heart the lighter,
God help me speak that little word
And take my bit of singing
And drop it in some lonely vale
To set the echoes ringing.

Prayer.

O God, grant us the open mind to learn thy truth, the open soul to receive Thy unstinted blessings, the open hand to give as it has been given unto us. Fortify us with Thy courage and visit us with the peace of Thy presence. Purify us that we may be strong, and strengthen us that we may keep ourselves pure. And forgive us our sins, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

To will aright gives to the mind the right impetus. The will is a cause, a master cause. What amazing vigor a resolute volition shoots though the whole life and experience! "I will love," "I will trust," "I will rejoice"—and we are at the feet of God. The will tilts the soul to the sun; it determines the climate in which we live; it turns the tides of feeling. Let us cultivate the will. It needs cultivating as the conscience does.—W. L. Walkinson.

God's help is always sure,
His methods seldom guessed;
Delay will make our pleasure pure,
Surprise will give it zest;
His wisdom is sublime,
His heart profoundly kind;
God never is before His time
And never is behind.

Hast thou assumed a load
Which few will share with thee,
And art thou carrying it for God,
And shall He fail to see?
Be comforted at heart,
Thou art not left alone;
Now thou the Lord's companion art;
Soon thou wilt share His throne.

Family Circle

The First Night of Paradise.

Mysterious light! When our first parent knew,
Thee from report divine, and heard thy name,
Did he not tremble from this noble frame,
This glorious canopy of light and blue?

Yet, 'neath a curtain of translucent dew
Bathed in the rays of the great setting flame, Hesperus, with the host of heaven, came,
And, lo! creation widened in man's view.

Who could have thought such darkness lay concealed Within thy beams, O, Sun? or who could find,
Whilst fly and leaf and insect stood revealed,

That to such countless orbs thou madest us blind?

Why do we then shun death with anxious strife?

If light can thus deceive, wherefore not life?
—Jose Maria Blanco.

Neptune and Graywings.

By Grace Duffield Coodwin.

"Come on, if you want to; you may see him too," called Annie, shaking back the curls that tumbled over her face.

"Oh, dear!" said Marion fretfully; "who wants that dirty Indian boy? What made you call him? It's our gull, anyway, and you mustn't touch him."

"Mustn't touch him!" echoed Bessie, who stood holding Randall's hand, and watching with big eyes the struggle of the little gray gull with a broken wing, which Ben was now binding fast to its body.

The Indian boy looked down wistfully from the cliff where he had paused when Marion spoke. Then he tried again:

"I won't hurt him, honest; he's awful pretty."

Even Marion was won by the boy's frank admiration of the new-found treasure, and her lips found the vanished smile as she shouted up:

"All right. Come ahead, Neptune—only you're not to touch him, mind, 'cause his wing got broken some way, and he can't fly even a tiny bit, and Ben is going to make him all well. Will he be well by to-morrow, Ben?"

Ben was twelve and scornful.

"I shouldn't wonder if it took a week, or maybe a month," he replied; "and we've got to feed him every day."

"Feed him what?"

"Oh! fish and things."

The words were scarcely out of his mouth before he found himself alone, all the children having raced down to the slip to begin at once their search for "fish and things," Neptune, the Indian boy, far ahead. Ben wound the strips of cloth tenderly over the beautiful useless wing, and the gull ceased to struggle, and looked up with great frightened eyes.

They put him in a box in the boat-house, and every day they fed him, and let him out to run on the sand, until a week had gone by. Then one day Ben unbound the wing, and the children stood breathless to watch the feeble flutter which proclaimed that the gull would soon fly. But he did not seem to care greatly for his new freedom. He had grown fat and tame, and at the end of a month he was still there, flying at times, but always returning to the familiar rocks, and waiting for his food from the kind little hands that never failed to supply it.

Neptune was more faithful than anyone, and if ever a little gray gull could have indigestion, that one ought to have had it; for Neptune dug clams at low tide, fished for herring in the weir, brought crusts from his own scanty meal—how scanty the hotel children never guessed—and even urged the poor bird to eat blueberries and sassafras.

Marion complained bitterly that the others had no chance to offer food to the gull, for Neptune was there early and late, and spent the most of the day idly lounging on the rocks, skipping stones in the water, and trying to teach tricks to his feathered friend, who perched contentedly on the boy's bare brown foot.

"Neptune," said Annie one day, "what makes you love Graywings so?"

"'Cause he loves me, I guess," said Neptune simply. "You've got folks, and things to do, and Graywings and I haven't got anybody but ourselves."

"Pooh!" said Ben. "He's got a whole flock of relations, probably sisters and brothers and cousins and aunts, over on Greening's Island; and he's just fat and rich, and don't care any more about his family. How's that, Graywings?"

"No such thing!" said Neptune hotly. "He just likes us because we've been good to him; and he can't remember his folks."

"Well, If you're so fond of him," retorted Ben, "you'd better be careful how you sit here shying stones around, or you'll hit him."

"No, I won't either," Neptune answered sullenly, and climbed up the rocks out of sight.

But one day Neptune was nowhere to be found, and down on the sand little Graywings fluttered pitifully, dragging a broken wing—broken a second time by a cruel blow of a stone; for nothing else could have harmed him so.

The children—even big Ben—wept with pity and wrath. Neptune did it, —they knew he did.

with those old stones," said Annie tearfully, and even Marion sobbed, "I never wanted Neptune even to see Graywings—you know I never did!"

Once more Ben bound up the poor wing, and once more Graywings was fed and petted to his heart's content. And still Neptune did not return!

At last, one day the children saw him bounding down the rocks, and flew after him, with voices raised in protest. They found him leaning over poor Graywings with a face of distress.

"O Ben!" he called, "what's the matter? How did it happen?"

"How did it happen?" mocked Ben bitterly. "You're a pretty chap to be asking that! You did it yourself, with your old stones—just as I said you would—and then you ran off and left him!"

"No such thing!" And Neptune was on his feet, and his fists were clenched and his eyes ablaze.

"Where have you been, then?"

"Yes, where?" chorused the little girls.

"Been blueberryin' over at Pretty Marsh for the hotel—that's where! And Graywings was all right when I went off."

Annie stepped out bravely.

"You may just go home, Neptune, and don't you ever come near Graywings again! You hit him! Nobody else around here throws stones, and nobody else comes down on these rocks."

Neptune turned without a word or a look, and went away, and it was a long time before the children saw him again.

One night Graywings, healed for the second time, and strong as ever, was hopping up and down the piazza, with a crowd of admirers around him. He turned his smooth, gray head and shining eyes from side to side. Uncle Ned came over to watch the little procession.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, BOSTON, MASS.

"It makes me feel mean nowadays," he said to the children's father, "when ever I see a gull; for I hit one with a stone a few weeks ago, down there on the rocks. It was pure accident, and I couldn't find the little chap again. I was very sorry."

Ben's face lighted up. He saw in a moment the whole mistake.

"Why, Uncle Ned," he shouted, "that was Graywings! And we found him, and now he's all well."

But later he drew Annie aside, and the two disappeared. Up the hot and dusty road they hurried, and into the woods to the rough cabin which Neptune called home. The boy was sitting at the door, staining little strips of wood for baskets, and the old woman who employed him was scolding angrily. The children walked bravely up to him, and Ben spoke first.

"Neptune, you didn't do it; it was Uncle Ned. And we want you to come down and help feed Graywings this afternoon."

Neptune looked up, and his eyes were shining gladly.

"All right," he said; "I'll come."—Sunday-School Times.

A story is told about Wendell Phillips—a story that must have made even the serious-minded Abolitionist laugh heartily.

Wendell Phillips was in a hotel at Charleston, had breakfast in his room, and was served by a slave. Mr. Phillips spoke to him as an Abolitionist, but the waiter seemed to be more concerned about the breakfast than about himself. Finally, Mr. Phillips told him to go away, saying that he could not bear to be waited upon by a slave.

The other remonstrated: "'Scuse me massa, but I'se 'bliged to stay yere, 'cause I'se 'sponsible fo' de silverware."—Current Anecdotes.

Giving and Leaving

"So Mr. Jones gave £500 to missions at his death, did he?" was asked of a minister the other day. The answer was, "I did not say he gave it, but he left it; perhaps I should more explicitly have said that he relinquished it, because he could no longer hold it." The distinction needs to be kept in mind; one only "gives" when living; he "relinquished" at death. There is plenty of Scripture commendation for giving, but none for relinquishing what the stiffened fingers of death can no longer hold.

A Thanksgiving Hymn.

By Mary Stark.

Praise the Lord! In the closing year
Before his throne let us appear
With songs of joy, and hymn of praise
To him who guardeth all our ways.

For bountiful harvests in gladness reaped,
For fruits of the earth in the storehouse heaped;
For his blessing on the seed and field,
Our grateful hearts their praise would yield.

For clouds of war by his hand dispelled,
Ignoble strife of brethren quelled;
For Justice anew to her high throne raised,
The Lord of love and truth be praised.

—Herald and Presbyterian.

Virtue Rewarded.

The explorer, Dr. Carl Peters, has quite a collection of darts, arrows and assegais that are souvenirs of exciting experiences in Africa.

On his last expedition, Dr. Peters gave employment to a homeless black youth whom he took from the forest and trained in the duties of a valet. Thus his tent, where he kept his outlandish weapons, was always neat.

One day the boy brought an assegai to Dr. Peters.

"I found this, sir," he said, "outside. It belongs to you, doesn't it?"

"It does," the explorer answered. He had remarked the interest that the boy took in his collection, and therefore he added, "You may keep that assegai, Jerome, for your honesty."

The boy appeared properly grateful. A few days later, though, Dr. Peters lost a piece of gold. He knew he must have lost it in his tent. Therefore he waited confidently for Jerome to return it to him. But the boy made no sign.

"Jerome," Dr. Peters finally said, "I lost a gold piece the other day. Did you find it?"

"Yes, sir," Jerome answered.

"Well, what did you do with it?"

"Kept it for my honesty," said Jerome.—Selected.

How Woman Suffrage Works.

Alice Stone Blackwell gives the following concrete case of how woman suffrage works for moral purification in politics:

In Wyoming, soon after the passage of the woman suffrage law, a man was elected who was popular with his party, but who was a secret drinker. After his election he grew more careless, went into saloons openly, and was several times seen on the street the worse for liquor. The politicians of his party did not care. When his term was out, they re-nominated him. A man came home from the caucus, and his wife asked him who the candidate was. He told her. "Why," she said, "that man cannot possibly be re-elected." "Why not?" asked her husband, in surprise. The wife made no answer, but she put on her sunbonnet and went out and talked with the woman next door, over the fence. The woman next door then put on her sunbonnet and went out and talked with her next neighbor, and so they passed the word all through the town. The women held no caucus, made no public demonstration, but when election day came, the intemperate candidate found himself defeated. He knew he had done nothing to make him lose caste with his party, and he could not understand his defeat until one of his lady friends said to him, very quietly, "We could not let you go back; you were setting a bad example to our boys." In Wyoming, both parties have come to recognize the necessity of nominating their best men, or at least not nominating bad men, if they wish to succeed.

Cures for Fits.

For a fit of passion.—Walk out in the open air; you may speak your mind to the winds without hurting any one, or proclaiming yourself a simpleton.

For a fit of idleness.—Count the ticking of a clock; do this for one hour, and you will be glad to pull off your coat the next and work like a beaver.

For a fit of extravagance and folly.—Go to the workhouse or speak to the inmates of a jail, and you will be convinced that

"Who makes his bed of brier or thorn, Must be content to lie forlorn."

For a fit of ambition.—Go to the church-yard and read the grave-stones; they will tell you the end of ambition. The grave will soon be your bed-chamber and the earth your pillow.

For a fit of despondency.—Look on the good things God has given you in this world and to those he has promised to his followers in the next. He who goes into his garden to look for cobwebs and spiders no doubt will find them; while he who looks for a flower may return into his house with one blooming in his bosom.

For all fits of doubt, perplexity, and fear.—Whether they respect the body or the mind; whether they are a load to the shoulders, the head or heart, the following cure may be relied on, for I had it from the Great Physician: "Cast thy burden on the Lord, and he will sustain thee."—Selected.

Pumpkins and Pumpkin Pies.

There is no more pleasing sight than a field of pumpkins turning up their yellow, complacent faces toward the September sun. No cornfield is complete without the indispensable pumpkin; and though it is usually what farmers term a "stolen crop," a few seeds placed at intervals among the hills of Indian corn often secure a ton or two of pumpkins besides the regular crop. It is not only a valuable auxiliary, but the long, trailing vines of almost tropical luxuriance and the large, golden, ovoid fruit are beautiful sights in themselves. Whittier, whose memory loved to revel among the scenes of old New England life, tuned his lyre to its praise in some of the sweetest lines that he ever sung:

O, queenly and fair in the land of the sun,
The vines of the gourd and the rich melon run.
And the rock and the tree and the cottage en-fold
With broad leaves all greenness and blossoms all gold.

O, fruit loved of boyhood! the old days recalling.
When wood grapes were purpling and brown nuts were falling!
When wild, ugly faces were carved in its skin, Glaring out through the dark with a candle within!

When we laughed round the corn heaps with hearts all in tune,
Our chair a broad pumpkin, our lantern the moon.
Telling tales of the fairy who traveled like steam
In a pumpkin-shell coach, with two rats for her team. —Ex.

The Band's Part.

One winter when the First United States Cavalry was stationed in Montana, the bandmaster went to the commander of the post, General Culver Grover, and reported that the members of the band had been ordered to help cut ice.

He said, "Sheneral, they do not enlist us to cut ice, but to make moosic."

The commanding officer called the adjutant, and on his approach said: "Mr. Adjutant, Mr. Schmidt wishes the band excused from ice fatigue. He says they enlisted to make moosic."

Mr. Schmidt, bowing to the commanding officer, said, "Yes, Sheneral, to make moosic."

The commanding officer said, "Mr. Adjutant, the band will be excused from ice fatigue."

Mr. Schmidt bowed himself out, saying, "Thank you, Sheneral, thank you, Sheneral."

"But," continued the commanding officer as the door closed, "Mr. Adjutant, the band will take post on the bluff overlooking the river and will make music while the rest of the company cut ice."

The weather was intensely cold, and as a matter of course it was impossible for the players to make a sound, their breath freezing on their instruments.

The bandmaster again hurried to the commanding officer and said: "Sheneral, it is impossible to make moosic. The band would rather cut ice."

"Very well, Mr. Schmidt, just as you wish," replied the commanding officer, and, calling the adjutant, "Mr. Adjutant, the band will cut ice." —Chicago News.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Two weeks ago I called Madge Masters and Nannie D. Chambers our veterans, and so they are; but we have a third veteran, to whom I now submit the floor, Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo.: "Here I am again but not with my report, as I left it at my boarding place. You know I am teaching now, and I have not been getting the EVANGELIST. When I came home, last night, mamma told me about our orphan; no grander purpose can be found than that of helping others, and a society like ours can well afford to make a sacrifice for such a cause. My mother sends 25 cents, my sister 25 cents and I 50 cents." Later: "My twentieth quarterly report will be found enclosed. I enjoy the work of instructing the young minds under my control. My enrollment is 30. My school is about 15 miles from a railroad and I am often asked if I get lonesome. No, I am too busy—especially as I had a tooth pulled this week, or rather, a part of it, and it keeps me company." (I have always contended that people who get lonesome do it willfully, and because they won't exert themselves to overcome it. Don't tell me you can't keep from feeling lonesome. Is there no tooth to your head that you can get pulled?) "Each evening I have my next day's work to prepare, and then I have plenty of studying to do." (Good for you; it's a poor teacher that stops studying; lots of them do. Preachers, too. I've known preachers who just step about telling old tales and no more thinking of buckling down to a solid book to get something into their minds, than if they were pumpkins.) "Last week I attended our county association at Washington and had the pleasure of going through the cob pipe, shoe and zither factories. I would tell you how they make cob pipes, but it would take too long." (It's well enough for the boys not to know.) "The zither factory was the most interesting. We saw the wood dressed, veneered, cut, oiled, polished and put together to make the musical instrument; our thriving little country metropolis has the largest factory of this kind in the world." (I hope the thought of these countless zithers will prevent no one from moving there.) "In the proprietor's museum we found palm trees, bunches of green bananas just cut from the tree, preserved snakes, stuffed birds, sea shells, alligators, minerals, etc." (What points has a preserved snake over a pickled?) "Dear co-workers, let us push our orphan work. We are able to do that much for the orphans, are we not?" (This brings our total to $22.30.)

Lois Percy, Thomas, Okla.: "I think it will be just fine to have an Av. S. orphan. Mamma doesn't belong, but she believes in taking care of orphans. She sends 10 cents, and so do I. We will try to send more money next year." ($22.50.)

Mrs. R. Johnson, Malvern, Ia.: "I have been reading 'With the Children' about 2 years. I like the orphan plan, and am going to turn in and help a little. Perhaps you'll ask why I don't join the society. Well, I'll tell, if you don't tell the children—afraid I couldn't keep the rules. I think some of the letters are very bright. I like those news boys (the Lees) and many more. I hope you'll easily get enough to care for your orphan." (No, not easily; it's right hard work.) "I send you 50 cents, hoping one more child may be saved from being a tramp, or something worse." ($23)

Aubrey Ainsworth, Shenandoah, Ia.: "Inclosed find 25 cents for the Av. S. orphan from Sister Edith and me. She is six, I am past 7; we are too young to join yet. We go to school and Sunday-school. We are trying to be little Christians." (I am very much pleased with this letter because it is written by Aubrey, and spelled by him, and punctuated by him. I wish mammas and papas would always let their children's letters come to me from their own little hands. Total, $23.25. Not long ago I spent two days in the country and went after walnuts with my little cousins, Louise and Anna Laura, and I saw the island I dug last summer which I told you about. The water in the pond was so low that none of it ran between the island and the end of the point, so it had stopped being an island. Maybe it expects to wait till next summer to be one again. It reminds me of our Av. S. members who stop keeping our rules, some when vacation comes, others when school begins. But I was going to tell you that while out there, trying to get warm by a new base burner that wouldn't do it—I mean get warm—Susie Searce gave me 50 cents for our orphan; $23.75.)

Nelle L. Northcutt, Kansas City, Mo.: "I begin keeping the Av. S. rules to-day. I send 50 cents for the orphan. I do hope we will be pleased with it, and don't, whatever you do, let it freeze or starve. Talk about cats—I have the sweetest one—Jeretta Gordon." (24.25.)

Terol Lester, Appleton City, Mo.: "I am a stranger to you all. Once I kept the Av. S. rules 2 weeks. I have not missed going to school yet. I have fine times there. I walk a mile and a half to it. I live 6 miles from town, so I don't get to go very often, only to Sunday-school. I am 11. I can't write a long letter as I have yet to get my language lesson to-night. I think it would be nice to start an Av. S. Branch here. Several children live close to the church and school both, so we would have a nice place to meet." (Why not get one up? From a "busy woman with little ones of her own to care for," living in Akron, O., comes one dollar for our fund. She doesn't want her name given. She sends the prayer that God may guide us in our undertaking. From another busy mother in Oklahoma, comes a dollar—a mother who would not dream of using a dollar for her own pleasure except as one finds pleasure in blessing others. Total, $26.25.)

I have another letter from Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, who is Cor. Sec. of the National Christian Orphans' Home, situated at St. Louis. You remember what she told us about little Joe, the five-year-old boy who was sent to the Home so mysteriously, with nothing to identify him but a piece of white cloth pinned under his collar. In answer to me, she writes: "I am glad you are pleased with little Joe. If you could see him, you would be ever so much more pleased. For some of our children we get only $3 a month board. I think we could clothe him as the Av. S. would wish him clothed, for $14 a year. Do you think the Advance Society could raise $50 a year? I think that would board and clothe him fully. Maybe the Av. S. will find they can send something extra for better clothes, or for a visit to the World's Fair, or for a boat excursion. If any of your members visit St. Louis, they can come and take Joe to some place of recreation, if they bring a letter from you, granting the privilege. I think the Av. S. members would be much interested in visiting their orphan, when they come to St. Louis." (Children, what do you say? If we have a rally at the World's Fair, wouldn't it be good to rally around our orphan? Don't you like this plan better than an orphan over in India? Do you think we can raise $50? I have written Mrs. Hansbrough I think we can. Perhaps if you would have the matter brought to the attention of some of your church members, we can roll up the $50 for our American orphan. Tell your preacher about it, and see what he says. We don't want to persecute anybody—just want to give folks a chance to help in this work if they feel like it; and they can't feel like it unless they know about it. Tell 'em. Maybe you'd better not let 'em know what I said about their studying.

WHY THEY ARE BEST.

They are Self-Pronouncing, have Large Type—restful to the eye, and Superior Paper. Strong Flexible Binding, 60,000 selected marginal references. Complete Concordance. Latest Maps. Best Teacher's Helps, etc. They have stood the test of time, criticism and competition proving their adaptability for every need of the Bible student and reader, never failing to give complete satisfaction.

WHAT THEY SAY.

Economy Bible Club,

Gentlemen:—Bibles have arrived. They give perfect satisfaction. I would not take four times the price I gave for them. Respectfully, NELL M. REYNOLDS, Loami, Ill.

Gentlemen:—Bibles came O. K. They are beautiful—far nicer than expected. The best bibles for the money I ever saw.

ESTER WILLIAMS, Sterling, Kas.

Gentlemen:—I received the two bibles I ordered of you in due time. To say that I am pleased with them is putting it mildly. They are marvels of cheapness and beauty—two very commendable virtues. It's a rare chance to buy a serviceable bible combined with beauty.

Rev. W. H. STEVENS, Kingsville, Ont.

South Bend, Ind.

Gentlemen:—The Bible came all right and in good shape. It is up to expectations, and we are well pleased with it. Yours truly,

Mrs. ANNA VANDERHOOF.

Gentlemen:—Your handsome bible was received to-day. I am highly elated at being the recipient of such a valuable book for the amount paid for it. It is as represented and well worth $4.00. Its clear type and beautiful finishings commend it to the public as a gem of much admiration. Its helps and aids are a feature of special delight to me. I was once a S.S. teacher and wish I could have had such a volume as this. I would recommend it to every S.S. Teacher and Scholar. Yours truly,

C. T. GORDY, Mobile, Alabama.

CHRISTIAN- EVANGELIST

The PRAISE HYMNAL

The Ideal Church Music Book. Half leather binding, $70 per 100. Vellum cloth, $50.

THE FILLMORE BROTHERS CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Music Publishers and Dealers. Also Band and Orchestra Instruments and Music. Catalogues Free, Correspondence Solicited.

Words of Appreciation.

We thank our friends for their many words of appreciation. We love now and then to give our readers a few quotations from these letters of commendation. These may help our agents to introduce the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST into new homes.

Am a subscriber and reader of your paper. Am proud to have it in my home.

Mrs. JOHN V. ATTEBERY.

I shall use all legitimate means to have the brethren take the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

D. A. YOUNTZY.

Your paper has been a visitor to my home for twenty years and shall be until your life and mine closes, and may our heavenly Father spare you for many years of useful work.

H. E. WITWER.

Your CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST grows better and better all the time. I keep on hoping to have some little share in making it grow, but I move around so much in search of health that I seem never to have time for anything else. I suppose I am settled now for the winter, and may hope to get the harness on after awhile.

Fraternally,
J. S. LAMAR.

Can't you send me a man to push the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST? I'll stand back of him. No, I won't stand back of him, I'll push him for all there is in me. I do want the people to get the light, and I know of nothing that will help to this end more than the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. There are a host of us who look to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for deliverance.

I have your circular letter of Nov. 28. I am sorry I cannot do more for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST than what I do. Just at present I am not preaching regularly anywhere, and have been confined to home affairs for the last three months on account of the serious illness of my wife. Wherever I go I do not hesitate to say a good word for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is a first-class paper and worthy of a large constitution.

F. M. GREEN.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is excellent. I hope Bro. T. P. Haley will give something quite helpful to old preachers, for I expect to be an old preacher myself some day.

WORLD'S FAIR MARCH 1904.

Mr. John C. Weber, director of Weber's Military Band of Cincinnati, known as the "Prize Band of America," has composed the St. Louis World's Fair March 1904—and dedicated it to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. It will be distributed through the passenger department of the B. & O. S. W. R. R., World's Fair Route, at 10 cents per copy.

The music is in sheet form, arranged for the piano, being very handsomely gotten up, with highly illuminated title cover. Mr. John C. Weber is not only a great Musical Director, but he has written some very catchy and popular marches. The St. Louis World's Fair March is his latest success, and will add further to his fame.

Mr. Weber and his great organization of artists has twice defeated all comers in national contests at Elks' Reunions. The last triumph was at Baltimore, Md., on the 21st of last July, when, in a notable contest, composed of the leading bands of America, won the first prize of $1000 00. It is confidently expected that Mr. Weber's World's Fair March will become a popular air during the next year, and every household should have a copy of this music.

Send 10 cents in silver to the undersigned, and copy of the World's Fair March will be mailed to your address.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

Current Events

At noon on Monday the special session of Congress expired by limitation and the regular session began. The President's message, which was read at once to both houses of Congress, is a document of average length as presidential messages go. The chief points of the message are as follows:

The department of Labor and Commerce has made a good beginning, in the less than ten months since it was organized, in providing for greater publicity for the proceedings of great corporations and in expediting suits under the federal anti-trust law. This department, with the bureaus which have been transferred to it, now has 8,836 employees.

The government's attitude toward combinations of capital and labor is not one of hostility, for it is recognized that such combinations are natural and may be beneficial, "Every man must be guaranteed his liberty and his right to do as he likes with his property or his labor, as long as he does not infringe the rights of others."

The reduction of the revenue during the past five months has been such that, if it continues at the same rate through the rest of the fiscal year, the surplus will disappear.

Any general reconstruction of the monetary system is declared unwise and unnecessary.

The question of legislation for the encouragement of the merchant marine is commended to the consideration of Congress.

An appropriation is recommended to cover the expenses of prosecuting and convicting parties guilty of postal and naturalization frauds.

The need of treaties making bribery an extraditable offense is pointed out.

The Alaskan boundary decision is reviewed and commended as an evidence of international good feeling and a step toward arbitration.

Favorable mention is made of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. The needs of our non-contiguous territories are pointed out. Revision of the land laws is urged, in view of the frauds now being committed.

The new general staff system in the army is approved and further increase in the efficiency of the navy is recommended.

The Panama situation is treated at length and the course of the administration in that matter is defended.

The President devotes more space in his message to the defense of the administration's recent actions toward Colombia and Panama than to any other one subject. He holds that in the act of Congress, June 28, 1902, authorizing the President to make a treaty with Colombia for the building of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama, the essential feature was the specification, not of the government with which negotiations should be carried on, but of the route over which Congress preferred to have the canal built. Since the Isthmus unexpectedly changed hands after the passage of that act, it is held that the purpose of the act has been fulfilled in making the recent treaty with the government now in control of the Isthmus. By the treaty of 1846, the United States agreed, in exchange for the privilege of free transit across the Isthmus, to guarantee the sovereignty of New Granada over Panama. The territory of New Granada was subsequently divided and Panama became a part of Colombia. Still later, within the past month, the territory of Colombia has been divided and Panama has become a separate and independent government. The guarantee of sovereignty to New Granada did not bind us to prevent either of these changes. It has always been held that, as Secretary Seward said in 1865, when Colombia demanded our aid in suppressing a rebellion in Panama, "the purpose of the stipulation [the treaty of 1846] was to guarantee the Isthmus against seizure or invasion by a foreign power only." In the same year Attorney General Speed said: "The United States did guarantee New Granada in the sovereignty and property over the territory [Panama]. This was as against other and foreign governments." These opinions, pronounced long before there was any thought of such developments as have recently taken place, have great force in answering the charge that we have broken faith with Colombia in recognizing the independence of Panama. Again, as to the propriety of our taking steps to prevent Colombia, or any other power which happens to control the Isthmus, from obstructing that great natural highway, the following words from Secretary Cass in 1858 are as pertinent as if they had been written yesterday:

While the rights of sovereignty of the states occupying this region [the Isthmus of Panama] should always be respected, we shall expect that these rights be exercised in a spirit benefitting the occasion and the wants and circumstances that have arisen. Sovereignty has its duties as well as its rights, and none of these local governments, even if administered with more regard to the just demands of other nations than they have been, would be permitted, in a spirit of eastern isolation, to close the gates of intercourse on the great highways of the world, and justify the act by the pretension that these avenues of trade and travel belong to them, and that they choose to shut them, or, what is almost equivalent, to encumber them with such unjust relations as would prevent their general use.

The President severely arraigns Colombia for the policy of obstruction which it adopted in rejecting the canal treaty. The events leading to the recent successful revolution in Panama are recited, showing that the movement was wholly spontaneous and was not fostered by our government. Since 1850 there have been, in the province of Panama, not less than fifty-three revolutions, rebellions and revolts, successful and unsuccessful. This list is not complete, but it shows an average of one revolutionary disturbance every year through the entire period, and every one of these uprisings endangered to some extent the traffic across the Isthmus which we were under obligation to protect. Six times our government has landed troops to preserve order, and on four other occasions such aid has been asked but not granted. In view of these facts, and of this half-century of forbearance, the course of the administration in recognizing the government of Panama and entering into a canal treaty with it, does not seem so hasty as it may at first glance have appeared. The President closes his message with a statement of the provisions of the new canal treaty.

The time for appeals against the course of the administration in regard to Panama, is growing short. The treaty has been ratified by the government of Panama—a somewhat informal and desultory government, to be sure, but one that is able to keep the peace on the isthmus and is therefore doubtless competent to ratify a treaty. The ratified treaty is on its way back to Washington, and it is predicted that it will be ratified by the Senate without much delay—though Senator Morgan may decide to make a few remarks occupying a week or two, as his canal speeches usually do. It will be hard to organize any opposition to it on party lines, for the South wants the canal. The communication which was sent to the President of the Senate recently on behalf of the Colombian government, protesting against the President's actions, seemed to be about the limit as a diplomatic faux pas. But last week the Colombian junta in New York presented to Grover Cleveland a letter, which is evidently at least semi-official in its origin, appealing to him as the natural leader of the American people to rally the nation to the defense of Colombia's rights in Panama. It is gratifying to observe that the petitioners "have unbounded faith in the righteousness of the American people, and know the sound principles of justice that constitute the make-up of the stout and sincere heart of every true American." Totally unembarrassed by the recollection of Colombia's proven inability to govern Panama properly or peaceably, or of our government's patience through half a century of vexatious misrule, the appeal concludes with this choice example of Latin-American rhetoric:

"We are absolutely confident that should you advocate the cause of righteousness and redress from the height of your glorious record, but more especially in regard to the fair dealing with the weak South American nationalities during the period of your administration, there will be no doubt that all those who to-day are misguided will at once understand where lies the path of true grandeur for their country, and how easy it will be for this great republic to accomplish the most resplendent act of justice and redress, setting the most transcendent example of republicanism."

The special session of Congress was not a great success. It was called to pass the Cuban reciprocity bill. The Senate did not want to pass that bill at the special session. Its reason was—because. The Senate wanted to adjourn and go home for a couple of weeks before the regular session opened and let the President's reciprocity bill wait. Senatorial dignity seemed to demand that the President be taught that the Senate could not be startled into prompt action by a call to a special session. But the House would not adjourn; so the Senate could not. The latter part of the session was wasted in that petty deadlock. The Senate would not act because it was being "kept in" against its will. And the House insisted on keeping the Senate in because it would not act. The Cuban reciprocity bill will probably be passed early in the regular session, after the President has been duly impressed with the futility of trying to get the Senate to do anything to-day which can be postponed till to-morrow. There is something almost oriental in the Senate's chronic deliberateness, and when our strenuous President runs against its adamant fixity we are apt to have an exhibition of what would happen if an irresistible force met an immovable body. In this case the immovable body had the best of it, for a time at least. We hope the President will not often find it necessary to try to accelerate the Senate, for—if one may slightly modify Kipling's lines, with a worse rhyme than he would ever be guilty of—

The end of the fight
Is a tombstone white,
And graven deep upon it
Is this epitaph clear:
"A fool lies here
Who tried to hurry the Senate."

An intelligent citizen of St. Louis, who has been serving on the grand jury which has uncovered a vast amount of corruption in this city, was recently discussing the police system in vogue here, and in that connection made a statement which has perhaps a wider bearing than was intended. He said: "I was astonished to find that over 90 per cent of such crimes as murder and assault either occurred in a saloon or were directly traceable to one. The grand jury endeavored to fix the responsibility for the existence and conduct of some of these saloons. This proved a very difficult matter." The fact at which the speaker was driving was the fact that the police force in this city is not primarily an instrument for the enforcement of law or the preservation of order, but is the tool of a corrupt political ring—a ring which bears the name of one of the great parties, but has in reality no political principles and is moved only by considerations of "graft." This police force protects disorderly resorts which could be closed by a simple enforcement of existing laws. But the larger fact is this: The laws are made to protect an institution, which, according to the above statement, is responsible for 90 per cent of the assaults and murders. Why not try to "fix the responsibility for the existence of" all of the saloons, instead of merely some of them, as the grand juror says? If this statement about the relation of the saloons to crime is true—and it is only a repetition of a statement made in the formal report of a grand jury in this city a few months ago—the average good citizen, who is not a fanatic or a puritan, but is opposed to crimes of violence, ought to be expected to join in a war upon the saloon, the institution which furnishes the training, the incentive, the opportunity and, too often, the defense for the crime. And the otherwise sane men who criticize such a program as an attempt to "make men good by legislation" or as an "interference with personal liberty" ought to be impanelled to serve on a grand jury until they become familiar with some fundamental facts about the relation of the saloon to crime.

John Alexander Elijah Dowie, who combines the callings of prophet and business manager in a unique fashion, has become involved in financial difficulties. The expedition of his "Restoration Host" to New York was no great success. The city evidently needed restoring, but it was too busy electing a Tammany ticket to attend to the matter just then. Dowie's wife and son left New York en route for Australia while the crusade was still in progress and it was rumored that they had taken a vast amount of treasure with them. This rumor was doubtless false, but it may have had its effect in making his creditors nervous. Claims began to be pressed and, at the petition of creditors to whom $385,000 was owing, Judge Kohlsaat appointed receivers in bankruptcy. Dowie appealed to his people and crowds came to make deposits in Zion Bank. "God is with us, but you must dig down in your trousers and produce a million dollars," said Dowie to his followers. This exhortation gives, in fact, the keynote of his whole movement. Enough was raised to satisfy the more pressing claims, the creditors are satisfied of the solvency of "Zion," and the storm seems to have blown over. Dowie is, in our opinion, a good many different kinds of a charlatan, but his genius for organization and administration is genuine. Two years ago he opened up Zion City on 6,400 acres of land which he had bought near Waukegan, Ill. Now the city has 10,000 inhabitants. Everything in it is owned and operated by "Zion", and that means Dowie. All the property of Zion is held in his name. He claims that it is worth $25,000,000 and that the value of the property has increased by $5,000,000 during the past year. It is a pity that his real ability could not have found an outlet in some legitimate business, unentangled by religious quackery.

Brevities.

The case of Mr. Smoot, Mormon apostle and newly elected Senator from Utah, will have to come up for consideration sooner or later. In the early days of the special session of Congress, pages and pages of the Congressional Record were filled with lists of petitions presented by various senators on behalf of their constituents praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Mr. Smoot.

Perry Heath, against whom charges were made in Mr. Bristow's report of the post-office investigation, says that he will not resign his position as secretary of the Republican National Committee, and sees no reason why he should do so. James N. Tyner who is under indictment for postal frauds, has written a letter to the President asserting his innocence and protesting against the comments which the President made on Bristow's report.

The Mystery and Meaning of the Incarnation.

There are some things about the birth of Christ, that are too deep for our human philosophy. How the Infinite could take on the limitations of the finite, and the divine assume the form of the human, is beyond our comprehension. The fact itself is patent enough, but the philosophy of the fact is too profound for our human understanding. We can see that since man is created in the image of God it is not impossible or unreasonable that God should manifest himself in a human personality. But it does not follow that the human mind is capable of dissipating the mystery that must needs enshroud the process by which God became manifest in the flesh.

But this mystery that attaches to the incarnation is no obstacle to intelligent faith. On the contrary it is the occasion and ground of faith. If all the mystery were eliminated from the problem, where would be the occasion of faith in the divine personality of Jesus of Nazareth? Daniel Webster, when asked if he could comprehend Christ, replied that, if he could he would not believe on him as a divine being. If there were not heights in the personality of Jesus that rise above the reach of our intellects, we could not trust Him as an all-sufficient Savior. But if he be "God manifest in the flesh" it follows that mystery must attach to the process by which the divine and the human were blended in one perfect and sublime personality.

Besides, this is but a part of the mystery of all life. Science has not yet succeeded in banishing mystery from the processes of life in the vegetable and animal kingdoms. It has registered and classified the phenomena of life in these realms, and has made considerable progress in understanding their relation to each other, but beneath all these phenomena there is a hidden force, working according to a great plan, which eludes their search. But they do not reject the facts because they cannot comprehend the unseen and invisible power that produces them. This is the common sense rule that prevails everywhere except in the domain of religion, where some would make mystery the ground of rejecting the greatest facts of all history, even the very facts that have shaped the course of history and made our civilization what it is.

When it comes to the meaning of the great fact of the incarnation, reason enlightened by revelation, can see its way more clearly. It being God's purpose to enlighten, regenerate and save men, He would naturally seek the best method of disclosing His character and will to men. In no way could He do this so successfully as by entering into humanity, and uniting the divine with the human in the person of His Son, the incarnate Word. The mystery of Bethlehem and the tragedy of Calvary, were the beginning and end of a chapter of self-revelation of God, in which His infinite love and good will to men were made manifest to the world and to principalities and powers in the heavens. This is why the facts of Christ's birth, death and resurrection are gospel, or good news. They disclose God's love for humanity and his gracious purpose and plan of saving men from sin and death.

No wonder, then, that Christmas is a season of joy and good will among men. So it should be. It marks the birth-time of a new era of hope for the race. Since that night when the angel-choir sang the Gloria in Excelsis over the plains of Bethlehem, the tide of life and love has been rising in the world, and the kingdom of God is spreading its benign influence over the earth. In our gladness let us not forget Him whose lowly birth and advent among men has opened up a fountain of joy and life to mankind. Let mortals join with the angels, this Christmas tide, in singing, "Peace on earth, good will among men!"

Prayer and the Holy Spirit as Factors in New Testament Evangelism.

No one can read carefully the Acts of the Apostles—our great authority in the work of evangelization—without recognizing the important place assigned to prayer and to the Holy Spirit. After Jesus had given the apostles their great commission to evangelize the nations, "he charged them not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait for the promise of the Father, which, said he, ye have heard from me: for John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized in the Holy Spirit not many days hence." (Acts 1:4, 5). Immediately following our Lord's ascension they returned unto Jerusalem from Mount Olivet, and going up into the upper chamber, where they were abiding—the apostles, "with the women, and Mary, the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren"—and "all continued steadfastly in prayer." This prayer-meeting was followed with the endowment of power by the Holy Spirit.

In this way began the work of New Testament Evangelism. The work proceeds with such wonderful success that the Jewish rulers were disturbed and the apostles were forbidden to preach this gospel. But instead of ceasing, they held another prayer-meeting. "And when they had prayed, the place was shaken wherein they were gathered together; and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and they spake the word of God with boldness." Later, the number of the disciples had so increased, and there were such demands upon the time of the apostles in ministering to the temporal needs of the poor, that they recommended the selection of seven men from among the multitude of believers to look after this matter, saying, "But we will continue steadfastly in prayer, and in the ministry of the word."

There can be little doubt but that the two functions of the apostolic ministry, given above, are mentioned in the order of the importance attached to them at that time—first prayer, then the ministry of the word. Is that the order in which they are regarded in our efforts to carry on evangelistic work? If not, we have to that extent departed from the apostolic order, and from the New Testament method of evangelism. When we stop to think about it seriously, it is easy to see that the apostolic order indicated above is the natural and the proper one. It is by prayer that we are enabled to preach the word with power. Prayer is the bringing of our own hearts and minds into oneness with the will of God. Prayer is a condition of receiving that fullness of the Spirit's power that will enable us to be effective ministers of the gospel of Christ.

We need not follow the thrilling record in the Acts of Apostles of how these first preachers of the gospel were made invincible by means of prayer and the Holy Spirit, and what triumphs they won for the kingdom of God. No one can fail to see that these men felt themselves to be under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. It was not in their own power that they wrought so mightily, as they gladly testified, but in the power of the Holy Spirit, which was given to them according to the measure of their needs and the demands of the kingdom they were seeking to advance. Can anyone believe that the marvelous speech of Stephen, the proto-martyr, was delivered without the aid of the Holy Spirit? Impossible. He was "full of the Holy Spirit" and spoke with such convincing power that even the great persecutor, Saul of Tarsus, never forgot.

Of course it will be said, and has been said, that the apostles possessed an extraordinary measure of the Holy Spirit. That is probably true, and if so, it was because the work they were required to do demanded such extraordinary measure. But is not the inference legitimate that the Holy Spirit will be granted to us in such measure as will fit us for the work which the Church of God requires to-day? The apostles, we all understand, had a special work to do that needs no repetition; but in addition to that, the main part of their work was much the same as that to be done to-day—preaching the gospel, rebuking sin, planting churches, organizing and caring for them, and planning for the extension of the kingdom. If the work is in some respects different from that done in the days of the apostles, it does not follow that it is less difficult, especially in heathen lands. There is the same need for the Holy Spirit and for prayer in the work of God to-day as in any previous age of the world. What is more, God is as really present with his people in their efforts to spread his kingdom to-day as He ever was. The Holy Spirit is just as available to-day, for all the purposes connected with the ongoing of the Church, as He ever was. No man can accomplish the best results in evangelistic work without the realization of this truth.

With all our success in evangelistic work, we believe that there has been a lack among us, as a rule, in not giving sufficient prominence to prayer and to the Holy Spirit. If this lack should be supplied, we could easily be the greatest evangelistic people in the world, because of our knowledge of the gospel. We can avoid the errors as to the place and use, both of prayer and of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, which have marred the work of others, without neglecting these essential factors of New Testament evangelism.

An Eastern Trip.

Greeley's advice, "Go West, young man," was no doubt wise, at that time, and even yet, under ordinary conditions. But it does not follow that it isn't wise also for the Western man to go East, occasionally, on a pilgrimage at least, if not for permanent settlement. The West has received much from the East, and has given much back to it. The closer the two sections keep in touch with each other the better it will be for both of them. No Western or Southern man can go East without finding much to admire. Nor can any Eastern man travel widely in the South and great West without finding a preventive of a certain top-heaviness with which the East and particularly New England has been thought to be afflicted at times. Each has its strong and its weak points. If the East has a longer history, greater wealth, more and better endowed schools, a more widely diffused culture and a material development that comes only with time, the West has a wider and richer domain, more room for development, more freedom from conventionalism, and greater opportunities for that direct contact with nature, in her more primitive forms, which has produced some of the greatest characters of our own and the world's history.

The editor of this paper has just returned from Philadelphia whither he went to attend the semi-annual and mid-winter meeting of the Trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, held in that city on December 1, 2 and 3. En route thither we stopped off at Washington, D. C., and spent the last Lord's day in November with the brethren at the Capital. In the morning we preached in the Garfield Memorial Church on Vermont avenue, of which Bro. F. D. Power has been pastor twenty-eight years. It had been more than twenty-one years since we had preached for the church, on our return from England, where we had lived for nearly two years. In reminding the church of this fact we remarked that there were not many churches which we could revisit after a lapse of twenty-one years and find the same pastor doing business at the old stand. It was a good congregation for a cold, snowy morning, and the whole service was very delightful. This Memorial church, which the brotherhood assisted in erecting, was completed in the fall of the same year of our former visit in 1882, W. K. Pendleton delivering the dedicatory sermon. It has proved to be a great investment for our cause, not in the East alone, but in the whole country and throughout the world.

In the afternoon we went with Bro. Power out six miles, to what is known as "Edgemont Christian Mission," where a corner-stone of a new chapel was laid. This mission is an outgrowth of the Vermont Avenue Church, and Bro. Power presided on the occasion, calling on us for a brief speech. The location is a most desirable one and is near the line of the district, just over in Maryland. The mission has been conducted by two earnest young men, Bros. Fred Holden and Will Bondurant. There were present also, besides a goodly company of people in that community, Bro. Bagby of the Ninth Street Church and Bro. J. Murray Taylor, of Madison, Ind., who was preaching in the city that day for the "H" Street Church. We predict a bright future for this new congregation which will be known as the Thirty-fourth Street Church.

In the evening we took tea with Bro. E. B. Bagby and wife, and preached for the Ninth Street Church, to a large audience, made up largely of young people. It has all the signs of a live, growing church. Bro. Bagby has been the pastor from the beginning, thirteen years, and the church has an enrollment of about 1,100 members. The building is an elegant modern church edifice. It is a remarkable instance of success in building up a large, influential church in the East in a comparatively short time. It requires an extraordinary combination of favorable circumstances to make this possible, chief of which is the right man, which the church was fortunate in securing in the person of Bro. Bagby.

The other churches there are the "H" Street Church, from which Bro. Sappington has just resigned. This church is six years old and has good promise of success. It is courting Bro. J. Murray Taylor, who, we judge from appearance is in the condition of mind of Barkis—"willin'." It would seem to us to be a propitious union. Then there is the Whitney Avenue Church, the origin of which Bro. Power reported in these columns, not long since. It began as a union church and has fallen under our care.

Bro. W. L. Harris is pastor of that church.

On Monday forenoon we met in the study of Bro. Power's church for a conference, Bros. Power, Bagby, Harris, J. A. Hopkins and W. J. Wright, evangelists, of that region, Bro. Taylor, and Bro. Jones, the latter soon to be ordained to the ministry from Bro. Bagby's church. We had a pleasant and profitable interview on matters pertaining to the kingdom, and the brethren reported over fifty additions since their last meeting, most of them in a meeting by Bro. Wright. We spent the afternoon with Bro. Power, looking through the new Congressional Library and the Capitol. This library is magnificent beyond any power of ours to describe. It must be seen and studied to be appreciated. We had a look through the Capitol and an introduction to and brief conversation with the Speaker of the House, "Uncle Joe" Cannon. When Bro. Power inquired if he were succeeding "in keeping the boys straight," he replied, "O yes, they have given me but little trouble so far, but I expect the cussin' to begin by next Friday or Saturday." That was the time set for the announcement of the Committees. Congress had adjourned over Monday so that we did not have the privilege of seeing that body in session. So far as we know only one Congressman came out to hear us preach; that was Hon. Mr. Crumppacker of Indiana.

We had a delightful stay with Bro. and Sister Power, in their cozy home. It is easy to see how important a place Sister Power has filled in the useful life and arduous labors of her husband. It would be difficult to overestimate the immense service Bro. Power has been to our cause by his wise administration of affairs in Washington through all these trying years, and by his able preaching, his pure living and his wide literary labors. His influence with all the Protestant religious leaders in the East is very great. Long may his valuable life be spared to us!

We must defer notes on our visit in Philadelphia, and the Christian Endeavor Conference, until next week, as we have several things to say concerning the incidents and impressions of that visit.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Christmas bells! Their anticipated music is already vibrating in our ears. If there is any holiday that has distinct premonitions of its coming, whose spirit gets into the very air weeks before it actually arrives, it is Christmas. You see it in brightening eyes, and faces; you feel it in the grip of your friend's hand; you hear it in the conversation of children; you observe its signs in the numerous mysterious packages that crowd the street cars and in the jam of the shoppers in all the stores; you read it in the advertisements; you smell it in the evergreens that line the market places, waiting to be loaded and lighted; and you are reminded of it by certain pertinent questions from junior members of the family as to your state of preparedness for the great day! By all these signs does the glad Christmas-tide herald its coming.

Christmas is a wonderful quickener of memory and imagination. Whatever else we may or may not do, at this approaching Christmas, we are all sure to make a pilgrimage, on the swift wings of memory, to the days and scenes of our childhood. Neither time nor distance can blot out the impressions made on our minds in childhood by the mystery and the mingled awe and exuberant joy of the Christmas season. In imagination we are children once more. We are back at the old home. It is Christmas eve. The yule log has been placed in the big fire-place, and a bright fire drives back the gloom of the approaching night within, while without the snow is beginning to fall. We are all there once more, in that charmed family circle—the faces and forms of many of whom, have long since faded from mortal view. Later in the evening some of the young people of the neighborhood drop in. There are nuts to be cracked and stories to be told, and father and mother or grandfather and grandmother, tell Christmas stories of the “good old times,” when they were young. How the children laugh to think that father and mother, and even grandfather and dear old grandmother used to be frolicsome boys and girls, and loved to play tricks on one another and actually made love to each other! Pass round the pumpkin pie, now, for there will be plenty left for to-morrow.

The perennialness of Christmas is one thing that impresses us. Many old things come to be out of date, and customs once dear grow stale and drop out of fashion. But Christmas holds its charm from generation to generation. The secret of this, no doubt, is the fact that it is indissolubly connected with the story of the Christ-Child. This story will never grow old. Moons will wax and wane. Suns will rise and set. Empires and republics will flourish and decay. Fashions will change, in science, philosophy and religion. But the story of the guiding star, the wise men bringing their costly gifts to the cradle of the new-born Babe in Bethlehem, the shepherds watching their flocks by night, the song of the angels announcing the birth of a Savior—this will endure through all time, and make men's hearts grow warm and tender, as no other story this world has ever heard. Wise men will come, not from the East alone, but from all parts of the world, bringing their frankincense and myrrh, and offering them at the shrine of Jesus, as long as the human heart finds in him the satisfaction of its deepest longings.

How shall we make most of this approaching Christmas? By filling it with the unselfish spirit of Christ. Let the question be, not, “What will I get?” but, “What can I give?” especially to those who are likely to receive but little. There are sad hearts and desolate hearth-stones all about us. Shall we not strive to gladden some dreary life, to brighten up some cheerless home? If we do, it will be a memorable Christmas, because we shall have a fresh experience of Christ's love in our hearts, and fresh proof that it is, indeed, “More blessed to give than to receive.” Among ourselves, let us not aim at costly gifts, but seek, rather, to make them tokens of personal affection, valuable for the love they symbolize rather than for the money they cost. Let us make it a happy season for the children, and see to it, that they shall think of Christ as inspiring all these gifts, and as the source of all the gladness which makes Christmas the happiest season of all the year. A merry Christmas to all our readers!

Notes and Comments.

As previously announced, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will complete its fortieth volume with the close of the present year. It is altogether proper that so important an anniversary should be celebrated by a special historical number. Naturally we had expected to make the last issue of the present volume the anniversary number, but a number of reasons make it necessary to postpone this issue until Jan. 21. The undertaking is no small one, as our historical information must be gathered from many sources. We have asked a few brethren whom we knew to be familiar with the early history of some of the papers which have been consolidated with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to give us some reminiscences connected with such papers, but there must be a large number of readers unknown to us by name, perhaps, who are in possession of facts which would be of interest in such a number. We shall be pleased to have a few words, too, from the “Old Guard”—that is, subscribers who have been with us from the beginning, or for a great many years. All this matter should be sent to us as early as possible in order to be available for the anniversary number.

F. D. Power, our associate editor, and pastor of the Vermont Avenue Church, Washington, D. C., was taken suddenly ill at Philadelphia, during his attendance on the Conferences of the Trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. The editor of this paper, who was the guest of Dr.

E. E. Montgomery, of that city, took him to his room, where he had every possible attention and care. The symptoms indicated appendicitis, but these had subsided largely on Thursday, the attack occurring Wednesday. On Thursday he sat up most of the day, but on Friday morning when we left the city he was not so well, and was unable to return home. His wife and daughter had come from Washington and were with him. We hope soon to hear of his recovery. Dr. Montgomery is one of the most celebrated surgeons in Philadelphia, or in the country, and Brother Power feels that he is in safe hands. Let us pray that our esteemed brother may soon be restored to perfect health.

The committee having in charge the matter of our exhibit at the World's Fair, is getting its plans completed and will have something definite to submit soon. As soon as the architect's plan is complete, we will print a cut of the proposed building, together with an estimate of its cost. We hope to be ready by the time the holidays are over to make a strong appeal to the brotherhood for funds. Meantime any one so disposed may signify what he is willing to do in this enterprise. The idea grows on people as they think about it—a rallying center for the brethren, with resting apartments for men and women, an exhibit of all the lines of our progress, a bureau of information relating to the history and principles of our movement. This, together with our great conventions in the Music Hall, our communion service on Lord's day at the Coliseum, and the “day” given us by the exposition, during the progress or at the close of the convention, will do much to familiarize the larger public with the fact, the magnitude, and the meaning of our religious movement.

Attorney J. G. Blair, of Monticello, Mo., writes to the editor as follows:

Allow me to say that I have been for several years back watching and looking after your soundness, and I am prepared to say that I can not discover any ground for even a suspicion in that direction, when your writings are all taken together, except as to your position upon Church Federation—in which I fear you have made a great mistake; but I don't want to censure or condemn without a further hearing.

It is really refreshing to have a critic who is willing to investigate the facts before passing final sentence. It is a great relief to the editor to have his “soundness” attested by a lawyer, even with the exception named. Bro. Blair does not seem to know that our position on Church Federation has been pronounced unobjectionable by the erstwhile stoutest opponents of federation. We suspect that he has been trying a knotty case and has not kept up with the developments in religious lines. We shall send him a tract.

Christmas Sermons in Brief

Peace on Earth.

"Out of the shadow of the night
The world moves into light.
It is daybreak everywhere."

—Longfellow.

History is a series of progressive cycles. Like the individual life, it is full of strife, yet the end of it all, if a good conscience inheres, is peace.

The Man of Galilee unfolded the principle by which all attainment must measure itself, i. e., perfection. Translated into social terms, this means peace. Here the Galilean again sets forth a working principle in the Golden Rule. Our fathers interpreted it politically in the Declaration of Independence when they set forth the truth that all men were created free and equal and with certain inalienable rights. That means the observance of the Golden Rule socially and politically and industrially. It means war for the sake of protecting human rights only.

Tyranny, vassalage and slavery obtained in the days of the Savior. But the world is purging the dross and the process ushers in the era of human equality. War now seeks apology in the claim that it is for the sake of some human right, and conquest can not be boldly undertaken by a western people. Vassalage must seek the excuse of a better ability to rule, and the ultimate independence of the ruled. Slavery is allowed only to the unspeakable Turk. It is all the work of the "Golden-Rule-human-equality" doctrine incarnated in modern life.

John Bright said the engineer would be remembered after the politician is forgotten. By the arts of industry and commerce the world is made of kin. Here too must human equality and the Golden Rule reign to keep peace. To every man the result of his own labor, from no man aught except an equivalent in value is given. That means industrial peace.

The process of peace is a leveling process. Not a leveling down but a leveling up. It is the lifting up that draws all men.

The Epoch-Maker.

At this season of the year our thoughts turn back to the greatest event in history. We think of the epoch-making man, who has changed the map of the world, and transforms the minds and hearts of men. The race will never think again the thoughts it entertained before the birth of Christ. The children of the olden time were afraid of God, and trembled in the presence of Jehovah. Adam and Eve hid themselves among the trees when the voice of the Lord walked in the garden in the cool of the day. Into the land of Nod we trace the footprints of a flying Cain. At Sinai the brave man Moses said, "I exceedingly fear and quake." But we have passed from fear to love. Christ is the perfect revelation of the Father. He tells us what God thinks and how he feels. The infinite mind has uttered itself in "the mute persuasion" of the cross. Christ said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." He is the way of man to God, the way of God to man, the meeting-place of the human and divine. The peace-conference of two worlds was held around the Bethlehem cradle. Behold the ground rocks beneath the giant tread of millions coming "boldly to a throne of grace." Heaven's good will was not first preached, but sung into the world by the lips of angels. Peace on earth is the counterpart of the sweet temper of the skies. To save the world is the Father's sublime pledge, and in token of good faith he has given as hostage the Child of his heart. God in Christ is saying "Christmas gift" to the ages; a happy everlasting new year.

Augusta, Ga. A. B. PHILLIPS.

The First Christmas.

Jesus was the world's expectation and hope. "All the people were in expectation." All races and civilizations that had lived on this planet were looking for some one to come. The history of the past looked forward, led up to, and was fulfilled in the divine birth of the Babe in Bethlehem. The religions of Egypt, Persia, Babylon, Chaldea, the literatures of Greece and Rome, abounded in visions and songs of "him who should come." The Latin song of Virgil sings of a child of the golden age; Plato prophesied a God-inspired man who would take away the darkness; above the shrine of Osiris were the words, "Who is he that shall draw aside the veil." The whole Jewish system of religion was one of expectancy. All its singers, poets and prophets, all its types, symbols and prophecies were of some one to come. All ancient history, poetry, philosophy, art, were permeated by this great and deeply-moving purpose of God. Take the Christ idea out of the world, and its inspiration and hope, its literature and religion, go with it. "Through the ages one increasing purpose runs."

And when in the fulness of times, this expected One came in midnight birth, the starry deep was disturbed, and there was a movement among the wise men; and Herod the king became uneasy upon his throne, and the shepherds abiding in the pasture-fields of Bethlehem saw the glory of the Lord and heard the voice proclaiming the good tidings; and the very heavenly chorus burst into praises of "Glory to God in the highest." The coming is the come One; the kingdom of heaven is at hand, all things have become new. Christ has ushered a new era and hope into the world. Henceforth there is to be a new kingdom and order of things; new creatures, new growth and life-purpose and outlook; life and immortality brought to light. To this all things pointed, from it all things radiate. The whole plan and purpose of God to "bring together in one all things in heaven and in earth" culminates in the divine birth. To Jesus Christ all men must turn. The divine evolutionary process ceased with the coming of the Perfect. Now it is a birth into his kingdom and a growing up into him in all things.

A Progressive Incarnation.

It is necessary to believe in the Christ of Bethlehem. Children always believe that sweet story; so do child-like natures. They do not analyze or speculate—they believe, and then come and offer their gifts. May we always have that blessed vision of the starry sky, the astonished shepherds, the chorusing angels and the holy Babe. But it is equally as necessary to believe in the Christ of to-day. Christ came; that is the historic statement; but Christ comes is both historic and vital.

Just as he robed himself in clay, so he is robing himself through all the centuries in law and custom and social institution. He is entering more and more into the common life of the world. At first men tried to shut him up in the sanctuary and in holy days. But he who went about doing good, speaking to common, earth-worn people, forgiving, healing, enlightening—he is not to be embalmed in a creed or smothered in a ritual. His going away was expedient; it was necessary in order to his fuller coming. To the individual soul, regeneration is his coming. And if the truth is held with steadfast faith, the soul's Bethlehem gives place in time to Nazareth and the temple, and at last the Christ of the Beatitudes and the miracles, of suffering and victory, the Christ that has abolished death, fills the life and glorifies it.

Christ moves among the nations of the earth. He is coming in Central America and in China, in South Africa and the Philippines, in sweeter manners, in purer laws. He is the animating spirit of unrest that moves in the great human deep, among laborers and capitalists alike, and his march is toward the throne.

That Alaska Decision

By Edward Everett Hale

It is possible that the year 1903 may mark an epoch. It is certain that the successful trial of the Alaska boundary, which has taken place in London, is an event of the first importance in the history of the civilization of the world. It may be that some other year will be chosen by the historians for celebration. On the other hand, it may be that the peaceful decision as to a very difficult question—a decision made by the two most advanced nations of the world—will be recognized as we recognize the Fourth of July. It is a very simple thing to say, it is a very great thing to say, that almost unconsciously the decision represents the Golden Rule as applied to the affairs of nations, "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you." We have given to the Canadians what they wanted; England has given to us what we wanted. That is a simple statement of the decision.

We had in our own history a very pleasing illustration of a similar decision. It was, unfortunately, on a scale so small that it did not attract, as this decision does, the attention of the civilized world. In some prehistoric time the red men, who found themselves at a point generally called Pueblo in Colorado, made irrigating ditches which fertilized the charming valley where our city of Pueblo now stands. It happened, as we irreverently say, that in the latter half of the last century some white men appeared there, who took up the sections assigned to them by the government of the United States. It was very clear that those sections were worthless unless they had the water which flowed through the Indian ditches. The leaders of the whites conferred with the leaders of the redskins. And, under the high law which has won for itself the golden name, the Indians said to the white men: There is water enough for both. We will draw the water on Monday, Wednesday and Friday of your week; you shall draw the water on the other days. Here was the golden rule establishing in a difficult decision as to irrigation, the second law like unto the first, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

It would be absurd to claim that the decision made in London with regard to these intricate questions as to what lisiere means, or what is the crest of a range of mountains which never existed—it would be absurd to say that the Golden Rule was in form applied by the tribunal to which the question was referred; but, in any study of ethics or international law, a great interest certainly attaches to the fact that the decision, when arrived at, is substantially an advantage to both the contending parties. Probably the persons who have become much excited on the subject think it is a greater advantage than it is. Such mistakes as that often happen in human affairs; but, if those people who are on the advance line are satisfied, all the more ought the people be satisfied who are comparatively indifferent as to the points at issue. In this case it would be hard to say why the government of the United States should wish particularly to incur the expense of policing a frontier district, inhabited by men who come to-day and go to-morrow as they seek for gold. The one thing certain in the whole affair is that the gold would come to the ports of the United States, whether the territory were called Canadian, or by some other name. Gold finds its own level as water does. But the United States wanted this strip of territory. Maps and charts and treaties seem to give it to them, so we argue for it, and perhaps some people thought we would fight for it. But, really, the pear was on our side of the fence, the pear fell in our orchard, and it is ours.

On the other hand, the Canadians wanted access to the Pacific. Lower down the coast they had it. Mr. Polk and his southern friends chose to give it to them a generation ago, with moan advance to the latitude of 49. They wanted a harbor nearer to the North Pole. It is as hard to say why as to say why the United States cared much for gold mines which were virtually theirs. But the Canadians wanted their port, and they have it. And we have peace instead of war, good temper instead of bad temper, and, whether all parties meant to or not, each party has done to his neighbor what his neighbor was glad to have done.

Here are some of the reasons for saying that the decision in London forms what John Adams called "an epocha," when he wrote of the Declaration of Independence. The new century has certainly made for itself already some good auguries. We began with the organization of a common tribunal—on paper. The newspaper world sneered at the statement, and asked why The Hague Tribunal did not settle the Boer war, why it did not appease the contestants in the Philippines; and the newspaper world did not much care for the answer. It was that The Hague Tribunal was made for us by twenty-four powers, who chose to rely upon it so far as their concerns with each other required. Time passed on, and the sixteen American states fell into this great agreement. Those critics who are satisfied with nothing, thought this advance unworthy of notice; but, as four years have ground by, that great tribunal has already settled cases of importance; it has compelled, one may say, the settlement of many, many more where the parties in controversy did not care to refer their questions to its decision. The court, if we may call it by that name, at London, in the dignity of its conduct, in the publicity of its proceedings, and in its great result, has won for itself a distinguished place in history.

and in grace. "First the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear," is the law in every line of study and in every sphere of growth. In being we have first existence, then righteousness, then eternal life in righteousness. In knowledge we have first the intuition, then the thought, then the ripe conclusion in the thought. And the kingdom of righteousness is governed by the same law. Step by step can we trace, through the history of four thousand years, the unfolding of the eternal and unchangeable purpose of God to save men by his Son Jesus Christ. The landmarks which indicate this progressive development of divine mercy began (1) in the heart of the Heavenly Father (John 3:16); (2) it assumed the form of a divine purpose (Eph. 3:11); (3) from the divine purpose there budded a promise (Gen. 3:15); (4) the promise grew clearer, defining the specific race and people whence the Deliverer would come (Gen. 12:1-3); (5) as the day passes from the faint dawn to the noon-tide brightness, so the promise of the Messiah, obscure at first, passes into the clear light of prophecy and history (Isa. 9:6, 7; 52:7; Dan. 2:44); (6) as the day of Christ approached, prophecy became more special, and his birthplace is defined (Micah 5:2); and as the coming of Christ drew nigh, the angel of the Lord announced his parentage (Matt. 1:20-25.) It was then that the Messianic idea became fully developed. All the scattered rays of prophecy were concentrated in Jesus as their focus. All the confluent streams of grace and truth had met and merged in him, the end of the law, the goal of the grand march in Messianic prophecy, the revelation of the mystery of the ages, the solution of the divine redemption plan, "the brightness of God's glory and the express impress of his substance." Uncle Sam's Ice-Box

By F. D. Power

Our genial general secretary of home missions tells us his organization is at work in every state and territory of the land. There is at least one-sixth of the United States I am afraid he has overlooked, and that is Alaska. Our Lady of the Snows is making a great ado about the decision of that boundary commission in regard to the disputed strip of territory, and all eyes have been turned toward our northwest possessions: and then this is the way we are to go by all-rail route to Paris soon, and we are interested to know something of this wonderful region. Some years ago I said to the librarian of Congress: "Let me have the best things on Alaska." An attendant brought me a half-dozen books, all of which were cheap and unsatisfactory. The truth is, we know little of Alaska. With all its romance Jack London's "Call of the Wild," and Joaquin Miller's "Comrades of the Klondike," dedicated to the missionary, Dr. Young, express the conditions. Here is what the poet of the Sierras has to say:

And have you banged at the Chilcoot,
The rock-locked gate to the golden door?
The thunder built steepes have words built to suit.

And whether you prayed or whether you swore,

'Twere one where it seemed as an oath or a prayer--

Seemed as God couldn't care,
Seemed as God wasn't there.

And have you climbed to the Klondyke,
And talked as a friend to the fire-burned stars?

With mucluck shoon and with tolspike,
Have you bared your head to the bars--
The golden-built bars, where morning is born?
Hast drunk with maiden morn,
From Klondyke's golden horn?

Say! Have you read by the north lights,
Such sermons as never men say?
Have you sat and sat with the midnights
That sit and sit all day?
Have you heard the silence, the room?
The glory of God in the gloom--
The icebergs boom and boom?

Then come to the Sunland, my soldier,
Aye, come to my heart and to stay.
For better crusader and bolder
Bared never his breast to the fray.
For whether you prayed or whether you cursed,

You dared the best and worst,
That ever brave man durst.

The name Alaska is native and signifies "A Great Country." It has an area of 600,000 square miles. It is twice the size of Texas. Its farthest point west is the island of Adut, 2,943 miles west of San Francisco, thus placing that city east of the center of our country. As when the sun is rising on Eastport, Me., it is just going down on this far western island, we may claim that on the United States the sun never sets. The population in '95 was about 35,000, of which one-fourth were whites and the rest Indians. The territory has lofty mountains, Mt. St. Elias being 18,000 feet in height, large lakes, impenetrable forests, mighty rivers, inexhaustible mines, and great diversity of climate, the thermometer ranging from 95 in the shade to 80 below zero.

Alaska was discovered by a Russian expedition under Bering, 1741. It was thought of until recently as only associated with Esquimos, wolves, walrus, seals, and totem poles. In 1867 the United States purchased the whole outfit from Russia for $7,200,000. It was ridiculed as "Seward's Folly" and "Uncle Sam's Ice-Box." When asked a few days before his death what he considered the most important measure of his political career, Secretary Seward answered: "The purchase of Alaska, but it will take the people a generation to find it out." The world to-day is beginning to see the fulfillment of this man's prophecy that "the Pacific Ocean, its shores, its islands, and the regions beyond, will become the chief theater of events in the world's great hereafter." Half the population of the globe fronts the Pacific; 800,000 square miles of our territory finds its commercial outlet there.

Gold has revealed Alaska. Klondicitis is now the name of a very old and very familiar disease. The famous Treadwell mine on Douglass Island, opened fifteen years ago, has yielded more yellow stuff than was paid for the whole territory. Its gold mines have produced $65,000,000 and its furs $60,000,000, and its population now is anywhere from 100,000 to 150,000.

The Alaskan Esquimos, which number 20,000, are honest, good natured, and friendly. They subsist principally upon fish. The Eskimo woman ages rapidly, but when young is sometimes even good looking. They dress like the men in the "parka," a loose garment reaching to the knee, made of skin, and in fur seal boots and breeches; and it is puzzling to distinguish the sexes, as they are a smooth-faced race, only the women are generally adorned with tattoo marks on the chin and they are beasts of burden.

The dwellings of these people are pits in the ground, roofed over with logs, with a piece of fish skin for a window. The hut is entered through a sort of ante-chamber from the top by a hole large enough to admit a human body and by a step ladder. The sole furniture is a seal oil lamp used for cooking and heating, which is lit in the autumn and burns constantly until spring. Ten or fifteen persons occupy the hut, and during stormy weather, being kept closed, it has not the odors of Araby the Blest. Their summer dwellings are built above ground of light poles, roofed with skins. Their food is boiled seal meat and fish. Certain dishes are favorites. One made during the warm season consists of a dozen raw salmon heads put in a hole and, after several days' exposure to the sun, for obvious reasons, they are in a state of constant motion. Decayed goose eggs and a mayonnaise of stale fish-roe, mashed up with salmon berries and flavored with fish oil,

The leading tribes are Tlingits and Aleuts. The Tlingits are said to be natural gamblers, and, as a rule, drunkards. They belong to two classes, the "Wolves" and the "Ravens." They were slaveholders until recently, and when a chief died one or two of his serfs would be killed that he might have servants in the other world. A slave was killed and planted as the corner-stone when the chief built a new hut. Witch-beating, in which suspects are pounded with devil-clubs, is as bad yet among them as it used to be among our fathers in Salem, Mass. Flagellation with devil-clubs is also self-inflicted for rheumatism. "Potlatches" are conspicuous ceremonies. These are grand free distributions of goods accompanied by drinking, feasting and gambling, when a shaman or chief marries, builds a hut, or dies. They burn their dead, except their shamans and sorcerers, and kinsman burn their hair in the funeral pyre and smear their faces with the ashes of the departed. We get perhaps 5,000 of these copper skins in the disputed strip.

Alaska is larger than twenty-one states east of the Mississippi, and has a coast line of 7,860 miles. It presents a great opportunity for development. The temperature of Sitka is little less than that of Washington. On the coast poppies, daisies and anemones bloom luxuriantly throughout the summer. A tourist counted twenty kinds of wild flowers within a mile of St. Michaels. Southeastern Alaska has a luxuriant vegetation. They raise turnips there weighing ten pounds; cabbages, twenty-seven pounds, and as fine potatoes as are seen in any market. But the great thing is its gold. Plunder is now the chief object. In August, '96, a poor squawman, rejoicing in the title of "Stick George," while building a fire on the banks of Bonanza Creek, to cook his frugal meal, accidentally thawed out the frozen gravel and carelessly poured out $700 in coarse gold. Since then Klondicitis has claimed thousands of victims.

What do we get through the boundary commission? Why 20,000 square miles were involved in dispute. We are awarded 15,000, and about 10,000 human beings that have been for years on the fence. Skagway and Dyea come our way. Skagway is the metropolis, three times the size of Sitka, and only exceeded in population by Nome. It is the key to the Klondike. Hence the tears of Our Lady of the Snows. Dyea is deserted, and a Skagway man uses most of it as a vegetable garden. The future of that vast territory interests us. Why should we not report at the next convention this neglected sixth of the United States occupied by the A. C. M. S.? Who will go?

The Weakening of Worship

By N. J. Aylsworth

Many things conspire in this age to the development of fraternity. The influence of Christianity, so strongly impressed on our civilization, is being felt more and more, as love, sympathy, helpfulness. Commerce is laying an embargo on war. The railroad, the telegraph, the submarine cable, the ocean steamer, are all so many swiftly flying shuttles weaving the web of brotherhood. Whittier was not wrong when he said of the Atlantic cable:

"Throb on, strong pulse of thunder! beat
From answering beach to beach;
Fuse nations in thy kindly heat,
And melt the chains of each."

In no other age have the religious and secular so strongly conspired to the development of sympathy, and the result is apparent in a wonderful growth of brotherhood.

But if the influences of the age are eminently favorable to brotherhood, they are not so to worship. The unprecedented splendor of a material civilization, sore rival to the spiritual; the rush and roar of business; the swiftness of the race for material acquisitions, are all powerful diversions from the future and eternal. Deeper still, perhaps, lies the influence of democracy, which is a great leveler, leveling down as well as up. Independence, equality, are not mere political principles, but are felt to the very core of our being. The congressman, the senator, the president, do not rule, they serve. If they do not please the common man, he replaces them by others to his liking. Dignities, parenthood, age, are little revered. The deference of children to parents is well nigh a thing of the past. What this means for worship is easy to understand when we consider that the family is the kindergarten of the church. Reverence is becoming one of the lost arts; it is dying out of the human heart. Worship is withering at its roots. The very ability to worship is being lost. After saying, "Demos is King," it is easy to say, "Demos is God." This is not to say that democracy is wrong; only that its leveling down is a perilous process, to be watched, guided, and turned from evil ends. Democracy is a kingship for which small men are little meet; and it has its perils, political, moral and spiritual.

Science is not an enemy to religion, but it has sometimes jostled it uncomfortably. Digging about the foundation is a dangerous business, and weakens the sense of security. Such periods are periods of fear and pain. Religious people have been stoutly blamed for their resistance to the would-be demolisher, but, I think, not with entire justice. If, after you have laid your mother to rest, with many tears, her grave is violated, she is dragged from her coffin, carried to a dissecting-room and with brutal remark and ribald jest, cut in pieces, are you the worse for protesting? What were you if you did not cry out with horror? And yet, from the points of bald utility, no harm has been done, and science has been furthered. Are sanctities to pass for nothing? Not until we become brutes. If, then, a body of men, cold and feelingless, gather about your religion, holier than father or mother, and say, "Let us rip this up," and you cry out in pain, what does it mean? It means that you are noble. Shame to the scientist that is brutal enough not to feel your pain! Neither has been large enough to see the end and be at peace, but you were the nobler. You were for the good, he for the true; the conflict was less a blame than a misfortune. When the intellect of the growing youth begins to set question marks about his childhood faith, it is a perilous hour. As he loves the good and the true there will be battle, sometimes awful battle. If there be no conflict, it means either little intellect or little heart. In the rising of the race to new manhoods this conflict is ever repeated. Alas for him who has no sympathy with these birthpangs! He but proclaims his own poverty of soul.

This jostling of certainties and the familiar and profane handling of religious sanctities have tended to weaken the sacredness with which they formerly impressed us. But we are not to blame for this; we could not prevent it. The spirit of our age is kind and sympathetic, but it is not worshipful. We voice our prayers, but the spirit does not mount. The wrestling of prayer, the burning passion of adoration, are not ours. The wings are clipt, and we but flutter. We want to worship, but the faculty is weak and wasted. There are few men now who are "mighty with God." Prayer-meetings do not prosper, family altars have fallen down. We can only strive against this spirit of the time—against the worshipless air in which we gasp—and seek to nourish the roots of worship; and in this we can do much.

Some of the things that weaken worship, however, are strictly under our control. We can best approach this part of our subject by noticing Christ's injunctions regarding oaths. The Jews were in the habit of confirming their statements by the use of a variety of oaths, omitting, however, the name of God. Christ spoke of this practice as "coming of evil." It tended to looseness regarding the truth; a veracity that needs continual propping with oaths is not of the best. But another objection to these oaths was that they were dishonoring to God. Heaven was his throne, earth his foot-stool, Jerusalem, the city of the great king. To swear by any of these was to make too familiar use of things closely related to God—to profane, turn to common uses, not his name, but things made sacred by association with him. Such things [were harmful to reverence, and thus became weakening to worship.

In the light of this, what must be said of the profane swearing of our day, using God's own name in all conceivable ways of dishonor, connecting it with all the trivialities and obscenities, and even ordure of human speech? He who should use the name of a respectable woman in this way in a crowd, would be likely to be knocked down, and a century ago might have paid the penalty with his life. To such a being, worship will be forever impossible, except through a complete revelation of feeling toward God,—a profound repentance,—and even then his soul will bear the scare of his self-debasement for many years.

This gives us the principle by which we may judge of another form of profanity, hardly as yet recognized as such, but which is very harmful. I refer to what may be called religious banter, or joking regarding spiritual things. In this no insult is meant toward the Divine Being, but it is clearly a profanation of sacred things,—a trifling and making common with them,—and it strikes at the very foundation of worship. You cannot stand in awe of a being that you joke about. That is not sacred to you which you can laugh about. The stories about St. Peter with his keys at the heavenly gate, and the jokes about hell are clearly profanations. The preacher who raises a laugh when speaking about some sacred matter has stabbed religion with a rapier, and made that holy thing ever after suggestive of laughter to his hearers. Baptism has been almost ruined as a religious act by the jokes of religious people; it has been profaned, and lacks to the popular mind the holy and sublime impressiveness of the first age. A man of about thirty, a member of a religious family, a regular attendant at church, had passed through many revivals unmoved, and about all hope of his ever becoming a Christian had been abandoned. He was witty, and when approached on the subject of his duty, would always parry with some joke, which was repeated and laughed about throughout the community. Finally a preacher went to that place who saw what was the matter, and told the man and the church what they were doing in terms that startled them. The man confessed Christ within twenty-four hours. The power of the gospel had been nullified by jokes. The late Robert Ingersoll sought to laugh Christianity out of existence. I have never

Christmas Ideas for Sunday-Schools

Observance of Christmas by Sunday-Schools.

In my opinion, the Christmas service should be made a grand festival entertainment, permeated with the spirit of Christ to such a degree, as to draw all members of the Sunday-school and church into a sense of true kinship of family relation. It should be of such nature as to deepen and enrich life by impressing, in a vital way, the noblest religious lessons, at the same time interesting and entertaining all, from the youngest to the oldest, and filling every heart with joy and happiness such as are only known, when love blossoms in the human soul.

How can these results best be obtained?

I. (a) The story of stories, or the world's evangel, in which the finest possible rendering of the best musical numbers relating to the advent, ministry and resurrection of Jesus should be given. (b) These should be followed by carefully selected passages read by the one who can most effectively render them, and who can best interest all present, the passages to relate to the advent of Jesus, the ethical teaching as found in the Golden Rule and the Beatitudes, the supreme act of love in Christ willingly giving his life, and the splendor of the resurrection, carrying the promise of life everlasting to the children of men. (c) A brief talk of five to eight minutes on the life of the Redeemer, or the message of Christ by the minister.

II. Readings, recitations and tableaux, interspersed with songs. When possible, fine stereopticon pictures, accompanying the readings, recitations or songs, or the minister's five minute talk, would greatly add to the interest and delight of all.

III. The Christmas offering. Here, if a Christmas tree is to be the feature of the evening, let every one in the congregation, from oldest to youngest, receive some token. Of course the little folks will receive candy, pop corn and oranges—but this is a season when all the church should receive some little memento of the day; while those who have felt the burdens of adversity and poverty should receive substantial aid, so that joy shall enter every home, at least during this most holy of all seasons, the chief object being that those who most need shall receive the most, and those whose circumstances are the best shall receive remembrances, that from a monetary standpoint are of least cost, such as a card or a note of cheer from the minister.

In this way we will substantially help every one. Those who need the externals will have received them, and at the same time, by helping others, those who have been more blessed in worldly goods will have helped themselves in the truest way, for they will have brought gladness and joy into their own hearts by carrying it into the lives of others to such an extent that they will know as never before what it is to find life by losing life—to enjoy by sinking self in thought of others.

These brief lines embody the result of my experience and most mature convictions, reaching over sixteen years of Sunday-school work and teaching.

The program, of course, is only suggestive and could be infinitely varied.

Giving—Not Getting.

Children of well-to-do parents receive suitable gifts at home. Our gifts to children whose parents are unable to provide for them, may be delicately bestowed in private.

In my ignorance, for years I thought it made Sunday-school children happier to give them presents at Christmas. I have been shocked, almost tempted to believe in the depravity of human nature, upon hearing well-behaved children from refined homes utter such exclamations as these:

"Pshaw! This ain't real steel; it's only pot-metal."

"I'm too big for this!"

"I won't have any if I can't have one as nice as his!"

Finally, I awoke to the realization that the depravity and grossness was on my own part as superintendent, not on the part of the children. Covetousness, jealousy, selfish disappointment are not natural to childhood, but unnatural, unchild-like, the result of bad training. A child's greatest pleasure is in the service of others. Children come up to what we expect of them. They grasp the idea of the heroic when suggested, more readily, more enthusiastically than their elders. How grandly they rise to an ideal when it is lifted before them! We had been bringing out the worst in our children, cheating them of the joy of Christmas giving, instead of holding before them the ideal of self-forgetfulness in living for the happiness of others. It has been said that we ought not only to love Christ, but to be Christ before our fellows. He gave. The Sunday-school's aim is to fit the child for life and eternity. In any sphere, denying self, living for the welfare of others, is joy and, incidentally, honor and success. A mother who lives for herself is not a success. The statesman or citizen who thinks only of his own good, fails dishonorably.

At the Central Christian Church, some years ago, we put to the test, in the observance of Christmas, the truth of Jesus' words: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The admission fee was an apple, an orange or a potato. Nobody brought one, but three barrels at the door were filled. We opened with a grand march in which the whole school participated, and each class and its teacher in passing the platform deposited some gift in sight of all. And such hilarious giving you never saw! The Sunday-school room was filled with canned goods, sacks of flour, other groceries, and many useful articles, all of which were wisely distributed and bestowed by competent committees.

We sang giving songs and Christmas carols, and reproduced in tableaux some of the world's masterpieces: "The Holy Family," "Christmas Angels" and "The Worship of the Wise Men," which will hang on memory's wall forever.

This celebration was delightful and satisfactory because love, the only gift which makes us happy, was in all hearts, and the spirit of the first Christmas brooded over our "Feast of the Holy Child."

The Gladdest Day.

My thought of the Christmas time is that it ought to be made the gladdest day of all the year to the children, and there ought to be associated with it, so far as possible, the most tender thoughts of Jesus, our Lord, the love of God in making the unspeakable gift of himself to men, what the world would be without any Christmas time, and what it is in the far away lands where it has never come, and among the poor in our cities whose darkened lives have scarcely received a single ray of Christmas light. As love begets love, so a sense of God's love will awaken the love of the children, and this will be made manifest by their desire to make gifts to others.

The best Christmas time I ever knew was when we asked the children in our primary Sunday-school class to hunt up and bring all their toys and books which they were willing to pass along to others less favored than they. So the Christmas time is made to teach the beautiful lesson that the joy of giving is greater even than that of receiving.

Christmas Music in the Sunday-School.

The first Christmas was inaugurated with the songs of angels, and there has never been found any better way of expressing the joy of Christmas-tide than by song. There may be a place in the imagination of even the healthiest childhood for Santa Claus, but surely a Sunday-school entertainment has a higher purpose than the fostering such fancies.

Christmas is pre-eminently the children's day; give the smallest ones the biggest part of the entertainment. While solos and duets by sweet, childish voices are winsome, the Christmas chorals by an entire Sunday-school, when well learned and earnestly sung, are best of all.

The greatest poets have written some of their finest strains upon Christmas themes; these have been wedded to tunes by the best of musicians. Don't reject the best carols because they are old, and use inferior jingles because they are hot from the press.

The most appropriate Christmas entertainment I have ever known was one made up entirely of Scripture texts in the form of prophecy and fulfillment, part of the texts to be recited, part sung to appropriate music, written somewhat after the anthem form. It has been several years since I heard it, but it abides with me.

No Santa Claus.

For some time I have been giving a great deal of serious thought and attention to the question, "How shall we observe Christmas in our Sunday-school?" A good entertainment is enjoyed by all, and especially by the children. I think the time had come when we should be very careful in selecting a suitable and instructive program for the evening.

I, for one, am willing to do away with Santa Claus in the Sunday-school. He is entirely too common. You see him on the street corners and in all the department stores, deceiving the children. But I hear some one say, "The children won't enjoy it without a Santa Claus." Try it and see! Tell them the story of the first Christmas. It is an old, old story, but it has lost none of its sweetness. It is just as beautiful and interesting now as then.

Teach them that one of the ways to make Christmas day a happy day is to make it a giving day, to bring gifts for some of God's children in hospitals or children's homes. For several years, the little ones in my class have brought soap for the Babies' Home in this city. I wish you could know of some of the sacrifices these little ones make to be able to do this. I wish you could see their happy faces when they bring their little gifts to the platform. I have tried to teach them that whatever we do for others for His sake, He will count as done unto Him. In all our Christmas giving, let us think of Him and try to make others happy for His sake.

A man can no more take in a supply of grace for the future than he can eat enough to-day to last him for the next six months, or take sufficient air into his lungs at once to sustain life for a week to come. The Influence of the Home.

By George W. Bince.

For the past few weeks I have read with interest the articles in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST pertaining to the erection of the family altar in every Christian home. There is possibly nothing in the line of Christian work which needs more thoughtful or more serious attention than this very matter.

It has been my good fortune throughout the past sixteen years to come into contact with the young people from various homes in southern Illinois. My business has been teaching in the public and private schools of this end of the state.

I wish to submit a thought or two from observation along the line of the far-reaching influence of home training in any and every phase of life.

I take it that the work of the home, the church and the school are in a substantial manner identical. The constant work of each is to create a favorable environment for the young people to develop in, to the end that sturdy character may be found in every home of the human family. Divorce school work from this idea, and it becomes simply a process of intellectual gymnastics; permit the church to lose sight of this aim, and there is no excuse for its existence; and if the home be not concerned in purifying the thoughts and affections of the boys and girls around the hearthstone, there is certainly trouble ahead for those who are responsible for the discrepancy.

Conceded then that the aim of one is the common aim of all, the question naturally arises "Which institution shall take the initiative in this arduous task?" Shall the school or church or home assume the leadership and direct the work?

Manifestly, the home. I think it was in Brother Philputt's address that I read that "human nature is incurably religious." This is to be taken with a grain of allowance. Man is incurably religious, if spiritual impressions be made upon him while in the plastic stage of youth; if the home fail in its mission at this point, follow the matter far enough to convince yourself that the religious life of the young people coming from such home is weak and nerveless, if not altogether wanting. The persistency with which home influences and habits cling to and control the life of the youth and the mature man, is one of the striking things that has come under our observation.

Whatever the home emphasizes will dominate the life of the children. Let the parents stand four-square for education and the boys and girls of that home are among those devoted to study at school; let them put social matters in the foreground, and church, school, government, business or what-not becomes an incidental matter.

How important then becomes the institution known as the home! What a responsibility rests upon those who have the shaping of the ideals of the children in the millions of homes in this and other lands of to-day! What a crying need for the rekindling of the flame of pure devotion upon the family altars this wide, wide world over! Rome never fell until she lost her faith in the gods; and this never occurred until the home and home-life of the Roman citizen grew corrupt. Careful daily religious training in the homes of Israel spiritualized that race and preserved its integrity, while civilizations all about toppled and fell into decay for lack of the benign and holy influence of the family altar and the resulting spiritual ties which bound the Jews together in a strong bond of fraternal fellowship and good will toward each other.

seen his efforts fitly characterized. They were eloquent profanity. Their power lay in smirching the sacred, and leaving men incapacitated for worship of anything; making them profane in feeling, brutalizing them. If I have an error take it from me, but leave me my reverence. Do not make me drop it by cutting off my hands. Worse than highwayman is he who profanes my soul and makes me brutal. This man's lectures were tragedies. It is wretched business, the slaughter of holy feelings.

Alas for the man to whom there is no holy day, no holy seasons, no holy Being, no holy acts—to whom all things lie at the level of the common earthly life! He is profane; there is nothing sacred. No transfiguration glory ever lights his brow. He knows not the grandeurs of being; all is cheap.

What can be done to stay the paralysis of worship?

1. Teach childhood reverence for parents, for the aged, for the wise and the good. Let it see you stand with bared head and uncovered feet before the burning bush.

2. Select the most favorable times to be alone with God. Banish worldly thoughts, meditate, listen to the great silence. Hush the uproar of life, that the still small voice may be heard.

3. Trifle with nothing sacred, or even related to it.

4. Make the Lord's day holy. Let its hours be God's, and spend them in his service. This will give a vast uplift to worship.

5. Never smile at religious jokes, even on preachers' lips. They should be a shock to our sensibility. Speak with the really good men who are making this mistake, and they will probably thank you. Guard your holy feeling for all that is sacred as the jewel of your soul; and your heart will yet mount as on wings to the eternal, and you shall know the joy of worship.

A Turk of the Old School

By Hon. Z. T. Sweeney

Former U. S. Consul-General at Constantinople

Progress is felt in Turkey as everywhere else. Manners, customs, and costumes are rapidly being changed to conform to "Frank" or "Ghiaour" standards.

Rarely is the picturesque, but inconvenient, dress of the old time Turk seen upon the streets of Constantinople. Equally rare is the cumbrous turban which has been displaced either by the fez of Abdul Medjid's time or by modern headgear fresh from Austrian or French factories.

But underneath all the outward forms of progress, the Turk is still a Turk, and can be found by one who knows how to hunt for him. Within a block of the modern European hotels, where the Ghiaour is meditating upon the fading of all things Oriental, may be found numerous private coffee-houses filled with the old school Turks, repeating and listening with gravity to the simple tales called "The Arabian Nights' Entertainment." To one who can understand their language there is no greater pleasure and diversion than an excursion through these private retreats. It is a backward single step of at least five centuries.

Having nothing particular to do one dreary afternoon in the beginning of January, in company with a young friend familiar with the Turkish language, I crossed the bridge from Galata to Stamboul and trudged, slipped and splashed my way through mud and mire, along its narrow and dirty streets.

Wet, tired and depressed in spirit, we entered a Turkish coffee-house, or rather room, two sides of which were literally made of small panes of glass; the western overlooking the opening in which stands the Egyptian Obelisk, the northern the dull exterior of the far-famed "Saint Sophia." There, in one corner on an old-fashioned yellow painted tripod washing-stand, stood a contrivance capable of holding both the semi-circle kettle and the ignited coal to keep the water for the coffee warm. A carpeted bench, rather high to be a comfortable seat to Europeans, traversed the whole of the many windowed square. White- and green-turbaned Turks, each with his legs carefully folded under him, either smoking his narguile, chibook or cigarette, covered the whole range. Nothing but the alternate bubbling sound produced by the narguiles and the tremendous and continued suction given the tiny cups of coffee, followed by a sigh of satisfaction, broke the silence. It was indeed not only a picturesque, but a very impressive, scene of Oriental life and custom.

An old Turk solemnly stroked his beard and gazed at the wreath of smoke circling ever upward from the huge bowl of his chibook which rested on the floor. A young man slowly and systematically blew the smoke from his mouth to the ignited end of his cigarette, and sighing as it lost itself in the clouded atmosphere, began again.

Taking up two of the small stools, we retreated as far as possible to one of the corners, and had not been there very long when a conversation, which had its birth in long intervalled monosyllables, gradually worked itself up to a general though languid interest. They had been talking of the French, English and European nations, but could come to no satisfactory conclusions as to the greatest, and were about to give up (not in despair, but in indifference) when the door opened and a venerable looking Turk, with an exceedingly important air, walked in. "Mashala! It is Hadgi Mehmet!" exclaimed one, "he will tell us which of these ghiaour nations is the greatest."

Hadgi Mehmet paid not the slightest attention to this remark, but took a seat, and arranged his corpulent body in a comfortable position and salaamed one after another his numerous acquaintances. He then smoked a cigarette and sipped a cup of coffee, which, judging from the various sounds he produced, he must have enjoyed immensely.

For full a quarter of an hour we preserved this impressive silence, and we were beginning to forget Hadgi Mehmet; and the others certainly appeared to have quite forgotten him—when unexpectedly in a deep bass voice he slowly said:

"You wish to know which of the Frank nations is the greatest. Ask me and I will tell you."

"Which? O Hadgi Mehmet!" asked one.

"None—not one of them is great—but ask me which, to the eye of the world seemeth the greatest."

"Which? O Hadgi Mehmet!"

"The English—but why in truth are they not great? ask me!" And with a defiant look he scanned his audience. None daring to accept the challenge (which his look meant) to solve the problem, he put his fore-finger to his temple, and slowly and emphatically uttered these words:

"Why? Because they deem themselves what they are not—wise. They are yet young. They are a nation of boys. Their wisdom or knowledge is such as can yet be surpassed by women, whose hair is long and whose wits are short."

This outburst was followed by a very long pause, and though impatient to hear what more would be said by the philosophic old Turk, for we well knew that he had not finished, we little expected him to be so personal as he was. Examining us from head to foot with an eye that, at any rate, appeared to measure, weigh and sift out our inmost thoughts, he abruptly put the question.

"And what are you?"

We told him that we were Englishmen, to which he gave a great "Ah—" which meant as much as: I thought so.

"And can you tell me what kind of wisdom that is that can not be surpassed by women?"

We expressed our incapacity to do so, at which he was not at all astonished; but told us to ask him and he would tell us.

"O Hadgi Mehmet, the far-seeing, what kind of wisdom is that that can not be surpassed by women?" we asked.

"Ah! It is the wisdom of inexperience!—the wisdom of the Hodga, who had but learned three quarters of the book of the Prophet, and written the thought of his brethren for a few moons! He had a mature head, but no experience, and he fell—so will the English," and Hadgi Mehmet looked round—was there one ready to contradict him? No. But we wanted to know more about the young Hodga, who like man fell; so without further delay put the question:

"And how, O deep reasoner, did the young Hodga of mature brain fall?"

"I've said he fell. But why?—ask me." And forthwith we asked him a second time, both how and why.

The following is what he told us. We have endeavored to translate it, word for word into English; but it, of course, loses that inherent quaintness of expression, and the rich gestures which invariably accompany the eastern tale.

"Some years ago, deep in the recess of a secluded corner of the mosque Saint Sophia, to the left of the pillar bearing the impression of Mehmet's hand, could be seen and heard a youth reciting sentence after sentence of the Koran. A youth that was his father's pride, and with good reason, for before one score and two years had he seen, he could repeat well nigh three quarters of the Holy Book.

"One evening Abdul, for by that name was he known, instead of reciting his lines sat—looking—looking—at some distant thing that his father could not see.

"Abdul, what seest thou in thy thoughts?" asked his father. 'Father,' said he, 'a great yearning is within me—my soul crieth for something'—(mark and remember this, said the story-teller, when the obedient soul of one of the faithful crieth for something, He—Allah, heareth and answereth that cry.) 'The next great fast of the Ramazan I would pass in that place whither five times do I daily turn mine eyes in solemn prayer. And to go to Mecca I must have money, and to get this, no way do I see.'

"Mark that," quoth Hadgi Mehmet, "He was young and could not see—though he gazed and gazed—but his father could."

"My son, that is no difficulty. Thou shalt be a scribe, the writer of the thoughts of thy brethren. Thou hast thine ink-stand, the gift of thy great-father to thee on the morning when thou, midst jubilee shouts from youthful throats, were first conducted to school. 'Twas a veritable gala day to us all. Naught else dost thou need but a tray, a stool and a very wise look, all of which thou hast; and the money is made."

"Abdul was a child. He knew nothing, but deeming himself wise, he sought to surpass the counsels of his father by writing above his little box, in well blended letters: 'THE WISDOM OF MAN IS GREATER THAN THAT OF WOMAN,' dost thou understand?"

"This sign one day attracted the eye and mind of a Hanoum (who had a little sense) who was passing along the road where Abdul sat within his box. The Hanoum, on seeing that Abdul was a very manly youth, went to him and said she had a letter to write—one of great importance—one that would tax his thought and judgment—to write which he had better come to her Konak, where he would be undisturbed."

"That evening Abdul, impetuous youth, early picked up reeds, ink and sand and turned his footsteps toward the dwelling place of his morning fair visitor, as directed."

"Bang! bang! he knocked at the door."

"'Who is there?' from the window."

"'It is I, the scribe,' and the door opened."

"Abdul's breast, as he entered the room draped with rich damask, with no little youthful excitement, was throbbing. First coffee and cigarette were served; then the Hanoum came smiling into the room. 'Ah, good evening, good evening.' They spoke and spoke—on all matters except the letter; for Abdul was in a seventh heaven in the company of the fair being. He knew not that time was passing. He was in ecstasy when—bang! bang! bang! went the door. 'Oh, what shall I do? It is my husband, the Pasha; he will kill you. Aman, aman, what shall we do? He will slay you in his wrath; he will cut you to pieces. Aman, aman, my soul is in bondage.'"

"Suddenly this Hanoum, who by exception had longer wits than hair, took Abdul by the arm, and with a true woman's bewitching eye and captivating gestures, implored him (unnecessary waste of words and time) to get into a box, saying: 'Quick, quick, my life, and if your life you prize, utter not a word, but remain silent, and Inshallah! I will save you.'"

Abdul, too late now, saw his folly; 'twas his want of experience." (Hadgi Mehmet here looked very wise and put that inevitable finger to his temple, and gazed at each one of his silent admirers.)

"Yes, my brothers, Abdul entered the box, and—click—our Hanoum Effendi locked it."

"'Ouf, ouf, a coffee and my chibook bring thou hither,' said the Pasha as he entered his home."

"'Pasha mine, husband mine, what an adventure I have had to-day! O, such an adventure!'"

"'Bah, bah, thou art but a woman. Didst thou forget thine eyelids to paint, or thy nails to color? No! Didst thou forget thy robes of silk to caress? No! That indeed would be an adventure; but ha! ha! pooh—my chibook and sugarless coffee.' And the Pasha sat on the identical box in which Abdul was locked."

"'By my soul, my Pasha, I lie not; such an adventure! I will tell it thee. To-day, as thou knowest, is my day to go my rounds in the bazaar (yes, to trouble men's brains with petty questions). While there I saw a young man who was pleasing to mine eyes, to satisfy which I asked him to come here.'"

"'What! What!'"

"'Wait, my Pasha, wait. He was flattered and came.'"

"'He came! Who came? Where is he?'"

"'Yavash, yavash, my Pasha. He came, and we had been but half an hour together enjoying ourselves, when we heard your dreaded knock. Quick, quick, if you value your life. said I to him. Jump into that box. And, poor youth, he obeyed me.'"

"'The Pasha jumped up, drew his sword, and tried to open the box."

"'Oh, Pasha mine, what a hurry thou art in to slay this youth of comely form—the being that gave my soul's reflectors such joy but a few hours ago. He is your prey; he cannot escape; so calm thy wrath. For if thou touch him in the spirit that thou art in now, thou wilt kill him with a blow, and then, wherein the pleasure? Yavash, yavash, my Pasha. The youth is not only in the box, but is locked in, and the key is in my pocket; here it is.'"

"'The Pasha colored and, swollen with wrath, reached forward and snatched the key from her hand—'"

At this crisis of the tale, Hadgi Mehmet put his fore-finger to his temple, looked all round, and, with a smile of satisfaction, asked me if I followed and understood him. I told him that I was very impatient to hear the end, and begged him to continue."

"Ah, my friends, observe, no sooner had the Pasha taken the key from his wife than she cried, 'Ha! Ha! Yadiz!' and clasped her hands for joy."

"The Pasha in disgust threw down the key, sheathed his sword and walked out of the room."

"Soon the great door closed, hiding the muttered curses and the danger of his presence. The Hanoum, still laughing, picked up the key, unlocked the box and let out the trembling Abdul. And when he got out she said to him: 'Young man, to-morrow go and take down that sign of yours and in its stead put: THE WISDOM OF WOMAN IS EQUAL TO DOUBLE THAT OF MAN, for I, who am but one, have fooled two of you in one day.'"

In the East, the day that a child first gets his school-bag is one of rejoicing. All the pupils of the school in which he is about to enter, with the school master at their head, follow the new scholar round the district with shouts of gladness."

On one of the granite pillars in the mosque, high up, there is the impression in the stone of a very large hand. The Turks believe that the impression was made by Mahomet's hand while stained with Christian blood."

A bet is decided in the favor of the one who can first distract the other's attention, hand him or her something and say the word "Yadiz"—the same as in our "filipœna."

ABOUT FEAR

Often Comes From Lack of Right Food

Napoleon said that the best fed soldiers were his best soldiers, for fear and nervousness come quickly when the stomach is not nourished. Nervous fear is a sure sign that the body is not supplied with the right food."

A Connecticut lady says: "For many years I had been a sufferer from indigestion and heart trouble and in almost constant fear of sudden death, the most acute suffering possible. Dieting brought on weakness, emaciation and nervous exhaustion, and I was a complete wreck physically and almost a wreck mentally."

"I tried many foods, but could not avoid the terrible nausea followed by vomiting that came after eating, until I tried Grape-Nuts. This food agreed with my palate and stomach from the start. This was about a year ago. Steadily and surely a change from sickness to health came until now I have no symptoms of dyspepsia and can walk 10 miles a day without being greatly fatigued. I have not taken a drop of medicine since I began the use of Grape-Nuts, and people say I look many years younger than I really am."

"My poor old sick body has been made over, and I feel as though my head has been, too. Life is worth living now, and I expect to enjoy it for many years [to come if I can keep away from bad foods and have Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich."

❖ A Practical Application ❖

By Orpha Bennett Hoblitt

Georgia Asheton had stood for ten minutes on the doorstep of St. John's Episcopal Mission looking anxiously across the weed-grown plain and up and down the dusty road.

"Is it possible that no one is coming?" she said finally, addressing the six stumpy Spanish daggers that adorned the bare churchyard. "Considering Miss Briggs' lecture to us at the last Guild meeting on the disgrace of not decorating for Christmas and her exhortations to be prompt, I should think that she, at least, would—Ah, here is Antonio. Now I can begin."

Around the corner of the adobe church came Antonio, bearing a very rickety step-ladder on his shoulder and leading by a frayed and knotted rope a mangy pup, which came most unwillingly, pulling back, its head down, its tail between its legs. Antonio, however, at the sight of Miss Asheton, quickened his lagging pace, while a smile, which exhibited two rows of sound white teeth, creased his brown countenance into a net-work of amiable wrinkles and brought out the twinkles in his bright, black eyes.

The ladder fell to the ground with a crash and the dog yelped and scurried back as far as its rope would permit.

"Buenas tardes, senorita," said Antonio, "I have brought all and there is much mistletoe inside."

Fumbling in different parts of his nondescript attire he produced nails, a hammer, a coil of rope, a ball of twine, and finally a key with which he unlocked the door.

As he said, there was mistletoe inside, two great heaps of it filling the back pews, and Miss Asheton smiled approvingly at the small Mexican lad.

"How beautiful! Did you bring all this, Antonio?"

"Not alone. The ministro helped. We gathered all the afternoon yesterday."

"Ah, indeed," said Miss Asheton, frowning slightly as if annoyed. "But why do you bring that dog in, Antonio? Leave him outside. He will not run away if you tie him."

"No, but Pablo will find him. He searches for him already."

"Pablo? What are you doing with Pablo Ramirez' dog?"

"He is my dog now," said Antonio.

some smilax and holly or a few of the evergreens and palms and flowers we had at home. Mistletoe is so stiff and unmanageable. It will be hard to make this bare place beautiful with it alone."

"It is the only green in the whole valley now," said Antonio with an impressive sweep of his arm.

"I know, and it is beautiful. Oh, see!" She held up a great branch from which depended the silky, grey nest of an oriole. "How exquisite! That must go on the front chandelier, where everyone can see it," and suiting the action to the word, she fastened it deftly into place.

"We will finish the chandeliers first, Antonio, and then do the chancel rail and the altar and the lectern. Perhaps some one will come to help by the time we get to the windows and the wall space above the altar. Bring me the mistletoe, the finest and thickest branches for this part, and I will fasten it into place while you cut and trim it."

Her clear, sweet voice rang through the chapel and penetrated beyond the closed door into the little study at the back, where the rector was writing his Christmas sermon. At the words the handsome, athletic young clergyman threw down his pen and started to his feet, but then sank slowly back again into his chair, where he sat frowning, his lips set in a somewhat unpleasant line.

"If it were anyone else," he murmured, "or if some one else would come, I would go out and help, of course. Why is she so foolish as to try to do such work alone? She will tire herself out. However, I suppose that is nothing to me now, after—I'll wait a little. Some one will surely come." And he tried to resume his writing.

No one came, however. Nevertheless the decorating in the church proceeded briskly. The chandeliers were soon draped, the low chancel railing was festooned with green along its entire length. The crimson draperies of the little altar made an effective back-

"See, I can read them, PEACE, PEACE ON EARTH."

"Pablo took my new knife, the fine four-bladed one. He will not give it back, though I call him picaro, puerco, ladron. I cannot fight him, he limps. So I take his dog. I do not like the dog, but Pablo does. I take him for revenge. And I will never love mi amigo, Pablo, again. He is malo, muy malo. He steals, he lies, he —!"

"Hush, Antonio." What a savage he is, thought Miss Asheton. I ought to reason with him, I suppose, but I do not feel equal to it to day. Her lip trembled, and if Antonio had not been engaged in tying the dog to the end of a pew he might have seen tears shining on his divinity's eyelashes.

But she looked up quite gaily. "Now let us see, Antonio. If there were only ground for the leaves and white berries that were artistically arranged upon them, and its tall vases were filled with the finest sprays. At the lectern Miss Asheton lingered longest, but even that work of art was at last finished and Antonio's exclamations of admiration at the effect were loud and satisfying.

"Se acabo, eh?" said Antonio, wiping his perspiring face with his sleeve.

"Not quite. There is this rope to twine for the festoons above the altar. It will take away a little of the bare look, but there should be a motto."

"Letras?" said the quick-witted Antonio. "Look!"

From behind the organ he produced them, old English characters done in glazed paper in crimson and gold.

"The ministro brought them." Miss Asheton frowned again, but Antonio spread them out before her. "He say they go up there," he explained, pointing to the wall. "See, I can read them. P-E-A-C-E—Peace on E-A-R—earth. What does that wish to say, senorita?"

"Paz en la tierra. It is what the angels said to the shepherds. Sabes?"

But Antonio shook his head and looked blank.

Miss Asheton looked severe. "Do you mean to say to me, Antonio, that Padre Sebastian has never told you about it? Well, well! It is time that you heard of it. Help me to stretch the rope down the aisle between these chairs. Now begin at that end and bind the branches on, turning them all the same way, so, and lay them on thickly. That's it. Now we will work toward the middle and I will tell you the story."

Antonio, beaming at the prospect, set to work with a will, and from the other end of the aisle the clear, high voice began the sweet old story of the Babe of Bethlehem, told so often, but this time in soft and musical Spanish.

As she proceeded, Antonio forgot to work, but stood instead motionless, wide-eyed and open-mouthed, his dark face glowing with interest as the wonderful story was unfolded. A strangely awed and solemn look came into his eyes, but he said nothing except a quiet "Mil gracias, senorita," as she finished, and fell to work again steadily and gravely.

Miss Asheton, too, was silent. The late afternoon sunlight, streaming in at the western window and shining on the chestnut waves of her hair, lit up her face which, in its softened and reverent expression, showed that her thoughts were still with her story.

In his study the rector had ceased to write. His arms were resting on the table and his face was buried in them.

At last the rope was finished. The white hands and the brown ones together tied the last bunch of mistletoe in its place, and Miss Asheton said:

"That is all. We must leave the motto and this until to-morrow, Antonio. You are too little to fasten them up, and I will get a man to do it. Besides, I have kept you too long already. Leave me the key and run along home. I will stay and put things in order."

Antonio unfastened the pup and took the wretched creature up in his arms.

"I go home, senorita," he said, slowly, "but I go first to take the dog back to Pablo. Let him keep the knife, if he wish it. He has not many things and he is a poor, lame creature and humpbacked, while I am straight and strong. The blessed nino, Jesus, and the shining angels wished 'Peace on the earth.'"

He was gone, and from the window Georgia Asheton watched him running down the road until the tall weeds hid him from her sight.

She turned, with misty eyes, to find the rector standing beside her, a new light in his face, a smile, half tender, half playful, on his lips, which trembled as he spoke:

"Georgia, dearest, the blessed Jesus and the shining angels wished 'Peace on the earth.'"

Half an hour later, the motto hung, the church in its usual order, they came outside into the afterglow of a New Mexican sunset. The light had faded from the eastern mountains, but the west was glorious with it, a rosy flush, that reached up, fainter and fainter, almost to the zenith, where the young moon hung in its border, and low in the west, in the heart of the glow, shone the evening star. They took their way westward over the great purple plain in a hush that yet spoke to them of space and beauty and a great Peace.

The Sun.

By Mettie Crane Newton.

One day as I mused on the myst'ries
Of earth and sky and sea;
The sun on his journey westward
Sent back these words to me:

"You dream, you ponder and study
To fathom nature's laws;
Now list, and learn that of many Effects, I am the cause.

"I'm a silent force, but a greater
Dwells not in earth nor air;
I'm lord of the morn and evening
My throne is anywhere.

"I pass from view, but am shining
In distant, foreign lands;
My reign has no beginning,
My work, it never ends.

"I paint the auroral splendors,
I gild the glowing west;
With warmth and light and beauty,
Is every country blest.

"I pass o'er the hills in springtime,
And wake the slumb'ring flowers;
I green the gray old forests,
And weave their fairy bowers.

"Behold me in seedtime and harvest,
Rip'ning the fruit and grain;
Clothing in rich abundance
Upland, meadow and plain.

"I smile in the homes of the lowly,
In the dark and crowded mart;
'Tis only a ray of sunlight,
But cheers the lonely heart.

"To wearied brains 'tis elixir,
To wearied nerves 'tis balm;
To the worn-out frame a healer,
A miracle-working charm.

"And for the unnumbered blessings,
I scatter far and near,
I'm worshiped by many nations
As a God of love and cheer.

"But, behold, there is a mightier,
The self-existent God;
And I am only a vassal
Of the universal Lord."

Then behind the misty mountains
He hid his golden light;
And I bowed in silent worship
In the hush of starry night.

SURE TEST

Of Whether Coffee Really Hurts or Not.

Some folks drink coffee and suffer day after day, but console themselves by saying, "I don't believe it hurts me or at any rate I am not sure that it does."

The sensible thing to do is to make sure by leaving off coffee and using Postum for a week or so. The trial is pleasant and you may learn something worth more than money to you in the way of health and strength.

An intelligent woman who valued her health and comfort made sure. She says: "I have proved positively that when I used coffee I had kidney and bladder trouble, palpitation of the heart, stomach trouble, insomnia and my complexion was sallow and muddy, but I got rid of all these troubles when I quit coffee and took on Postum Food Coffee. All my troubles disappeared quickly, almost as if by magic, and in their place I became strong and well.

"I soon learned to like Postum as well as I ever liked coffee, and I would not exchange my delicious cup of Postum for coffee and sickness for anything in the world." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Too Much Christmas: A Story

By Jessie C. Glasier

Four o'clock Christmas afternoon. Outside, a gray sky, scattering snow-flakes, the merry jingle of sleigh-bells and hurrying footsteps echoing on the icy pavement. Inside, behind the broad windows of Dr. Keith's handsome parlor, a glowing fire, soft-hued draperies, easy-chairs and divans, and scattered over piano and mantel, sofa and rug, a holiday display of books, knick-knacks and toys. Lastly and most important, Dr. Keith's four rosy, well-dressed children.

"There! That's finished, but it doesn't end a bit as I hoped it would," pouted Helen, closing the book on her lap and tipping back in the depths of her favorite chair. "I wish mamma had looked at the end of it before she bought it. I don't enjoy stories at all where people die and nothing goes as you want it to."

"Pooh! Girls always like to find something to cry over," declared Theodore, scrambling up from the rug. "Now if some of your things were broken or wouldn't work right, like my steam-engine here, you might be disgusted." He shoved both hands into his trousers' pockets and looked moodily down on the splendid red and black toy at his feet. "I can't think what ails it. It won't go at all like it did this morning. I'm going to ask mamma to let me go over and take a look at Sam Bright's. His is just like this, only it's bigger."

"You'd better not bother mamma," said his sister. "Don't you know she took Mrs. Ponsonby up to her room after dinner for a visit?"

"Oh yes. I s'pose they're talking about 'old times.' I don't see what mamma can find to say to her. She doesn't seem to care for anything much. Doesn't bother herself to say three words to us."

"I don't think much of company Christmas-time. Ho hum!" And Helen smothered another yawn.

"Well I do, if it was Aunt Marcia and Paul that had come," put in Jamie dolefully from the window. "It was just a shame Paul had to get rumonia."

"Pneumonia!" corrected Helen, laughing. She had crossed listlessly to the mantel and was fumbling in a bon-bon box. "Theodore Keith, where have all my chocolates gone?" she demanded.

"How should I know. I haven't touched them," Theodore returned, crossly.

"Thought you ate the last one your own self before dinner. Don't you remember?" Jamie put in. "My marshmallows and creams are all gone, too. Nothing left but gum-drops and common things. Most wish I'd saved some of mine. I don't feel very good, somehow."

"It's an awfully tiresome Christmas. What shall we do? I wish mamma would come down." And Helen's face grew more discontented as she sauntered to the piano and surveyed the various possessions that she had arranged there with pride only that morning.

"I do think Maud Garnett might have sent me as much as a fancy calendar," she complained.

"I should think you had one for every room in the house now," observed Theodore.

"Well, she might have remembered me in some way. She always has, before. I made her a lovely handkerchief this year. O Theo! I hadn't thought till this minute! Don't you suppose we'll get something from Cousin Lewis? Is it too late for the postman?"

"If I just had the watch I wanted, I could tell you," Theodore sighed. "My tools are beauties, but I did want the watch so. I hinted every way to papa, and I did think I'd get it this year. Horace has one and he's only twelve, not a month older than I am. Jamie, stop teasing Midget," he demanded sharply.

"He teeps pulling my dollies away," wailed the little maid from her corner. "I det 'em 'way I want 'em an' he mates 'em tumble over."

There was a stir in the hall and Nurse Lucy, in white cap and apron, put her kindly black face in between the portieres. A moment more and she was stepping briskly about the room, shaking up pillows, setting chairs straight and picking up scattered toys from the floor.

"Child'n, I cert'nly is s'prised at ye, 'deed I am!" she began. "I jes' been straightenin' up in de hall an' I 'clar I was 'stonished at de way you was all gwine on 'bout yo' fine presents yo' thought was so gran' dis same mohn-in'. Wishin' fur de pos'man, too, when he come to dis ve'y house jes' loaded down 'fore dinner. I'm right down glad all dem dat's tried so hahd to please ye can't see yo faces. All on ye faultin' 'cept dis blessed baby, an' she fair misable becuz she's got so many doll babies she can't hold 'em all to once. Come here, honey, let Lucy fix 'em fur ye," she added more gently, taking the little one on her lap.

"Well, it's a real poky, dull day, anyhow," Helen declared under her breath; but Nurse heard her.

"Dull, an' all dese el'gant t'ings to 'muse yo'selfs wid! I know 'zackly what's de mattah wid ev'y las' one of yo' chil'n." And she shook her head at the little group. "It's too much Christmas ails ye."

"O Nurse!" protested Helen.

"Pshaw!" exclaimed Theodore, tossing his curly head and trying to look as though he did not believe a word that Nurse had been saying. But both his face and Helen's were losing the fretful look of five minutes ago. The children generally took Nurse Lucy's little lectures in good part and were the better for them.

"Tek my word, I've hit de nail plum onto de end. Ef yo' hadn't mo'n a quahtah paht o' dese fine t'ings, yo'd be boun'ter 'preciate 'em a dozen times bettah."

"Well, don't scold any more, that's a dear. Take us for a walk, won't you," coaxed Helen.

"Yes, do," Theodore echoed. "It's stopped snowing now, and I don't believe it's as cold as it was before dinner. I'll go and see," and he rushed out. In the vestibule he stopped short in astonishment. One of the heavy outer doors stood open, and from behind it protruded something that looked like a bundle of rags in the dull gray light.

"What in the world—" he began. The bundle stirred, then advanced boldly. A coffee-colored face and two shining rows of teeth became visible under the remnants of an old pink fascinator, and a pair of merry black eyes looked up half pleadingly.

"Please, sah, hit's me, sah, an' I ain' doin' no hahm nor nuffin'. A big dog got ahtah me en de street an' I seen dis do' on de swing an' I jes' runned up de steps ter git outen de way, an' w'en I's in onst 'twuz so pow'ful comf'ble I 'lowed I' stay an' git thawed out a bit. Dat's all an' dat's de truf," with an energetic nod that set the frayed ends of the old fascinator fluttering.

Theodore looked a bit incredulous, remembering the street-thief who had stolen into the hall the week before and made off with papa's best umbrella: but honesty shone in every curve of the chubby face lifted to his.

"Call it warm in here, do you? Must 'a' been pretty cold," he said, shivering as the keen wind struck his face.

"Dat I wuz. Feet felt de wust," and the child looked down at her shapeless old shoes which yawned at the toes, inviting snow and frost to enter. "If I hadn't be'n boun' ter fin' suffin' fur Mammy fur a bit o' Christmas, I'd a gib'n up an' gone home long 'fo' dis. But I's putty comf'ble now, an' luk at heah!" She drew one bare brown hand from under her old green and blue plaid shawl and held up a scrawny branch of holly, with here and there a red berry amidst its prickly leaves.

"What good is that?" Theodore asked, dancing a hornpipe on the tiled floor to keep from shivering again.

"What good? Lawzee! Yo' don' know my Mammy. Don' yo' see," she went on, stimulated by the interest in the boy's face, "we useter hab a hull roomful o' holly an' groun'-pine, Christmas-time, in de bressid Souf, an' mek wreafs an' crosses an' ankers an' ebry kin' o' tings, an' sell loads on 'em. An' we ain' seed a smitch o' holly befo' sence we come up Norf, an' Mammy, she's jes' be'n a-honin' fur a piece once mo'. I 'lows dis mos' mek her well. Wuzn't I tickled when I seed it half en de snow, front o' one dem big houses yonder. But I gotter mosey 'long. Good day ter yo'," and the queer little figure started out at the door.

"No, wait," said Theodore, imperatively. Until a year past, Dr. Keith's home had been in one of the loveliest of Southern cities, and the children still felt much of the keen regret with which they had parted from the scenes they held so dear. Even the ragged little darkey who swept a near-by crossing was an object of interest now, "because he looked so much like home." This waif with the cheery laugh and twinkling white teeth was far more amusing. Theodore decided to get better acquainted. The others would enjoy hearing her funny chatter.

"Come in and get good and warm before you go," he commanded, laying hold of a corner of the old shawl. Impulsive Theodore was always ready to make friends and kept his family in lively uncertainty as to who his newest chum would be.

"Me in dere? I ain' fit!" The child's face glowed with longing, but she hung back, looking down at her wet ragged shoes. "Wait jes' a minit, den." She stopped to clean her feet vigorously on the door-mat, then timidly followed Theodore into the parlor.

But after one glance into Nurse Lucy's face she forgot to be shy. Her eyes sparkled with enjoyment as she stood by the glowing grate answering the questions with which the children plied her, and turning her woolly head from side to side in silent astonishment at the array of pretty things all about her.

"What is your name?" Jamie asked promptly. There was a fresh display of white teeth, a brighter gleam of fun in the rolling eyes.

"Cin'mon Brown."

"Cinnamon!" repeated Helen, wonderingly. Theodore and Nurse laughed with the owner of the funny name, but Jamie was neither amused nor disconcerted. "Did they call you that because you are just that color?" he asked soberly.

Cinnamon gave a little rollicking giggle. "Yes, dey did dat. 'Twuz a fine gen'leman Mammy wash fur, name me dat, fust time he see me. Mammy laid out ter change hit, but it stick, dat name did, an' fin'ly she 'low as dere wuzn't much in names, nohow. She say as how Cæsar 'Gustus an' Benj'min Franklin wuz jes' as no 'count 's if she done tuk no pains 't all namin' on 'em. So she say I mought as well be Cin'mon as any'ting."

A pause, then she turned to Theodore with a wondering half-whisper. "Hit look in heah like one dem gran' stores down street. Does you 'spect ter sell off a passel o' dese yer el'gant tings?"

"Oh no! They belong to us. They are all our Christmas presents," Theodore explained, looking, as he felt, half ashamed.

"Fur de massy sake!" little Cinnamon cried. "All dese—an' dese—an' dem oders?" pointing with the holly branch. "An' yo' gwine ter see 'em ebry day an' play wid 'em?—I wish Mammy could git a peek at 'em!" she ended fervently.

"What sort of a Christmas have you had, Cinnamon?" Helen asked.

A sober look flitted across the little brown face, then eyes and mouth smiled again. "Fust-rate, thank you Missy. Mammy wuz ailin' bad, but dere wuz wood fur a fiah, an' we had smoked meat fur dinnah an' a pot o' hominy like we useter hab down Souf."

"But didn't you have any Christmas presents?" persisted Jamie.

"Not's I knows on," was the smiling answer, "'less yo' count dis one," and she glanced down at the sprig of holly. "But sho's yo' bohn I mus' hurry now. Mammy's be'n lookin' fur me a right smaht time, I reckon."

"Wait a minute," Theodore said again.

"Don't let her go yet, Nurse," cried Helen in the same breath, and the two, who had been exchanging nods and signs together in the bay-window, hurried out into the hall for further consultation.

"There's that pair of mittens mine, you know," began Theodore.

"There's a pair of shoes that I've had put by for ever so long," said Helen, "That old brown cloak, too."

"She shall have my picture puzzle," Theodore added.

"And I'm going to ask Maggie to put up a basket of things to eat. And say, if it isn't too far let's get Nurse to take us and all go with Cinnamon," Helen ended, wide-awake by this time.

"Hurrah! That's a capital plan," Theodore agreed and both children hurried off to appear again with shining eyes and arms well-laden.

It was hard to make Cinnamon understand that all these things were for her, that they were going to help her carry them home, and that she mustn't worry any more about Mammy's cough, because Papa was a doctor and could cure anybody.

"Mammy allus said I wuz bohn ter luck an' now I b'liebes hit!" she cried. "Why, dere's 'nuff fur fohty Christmasses," she declared waving both red-mittened hands over cook's basket and the pile of garments and toys. When Nurse had added a bright colored shawl for Mammy's aching shoulders out of her own store, Jamie filled the pockets of the half-worn cloak with candy and Midget, who had been shyly eyeing the stranger from Nurse's lap, came up with as many of her doll-family as her little arms could hold. "Tate any one you want," she said, with her blue eyes full of pity. "I fink the baby doll is the nicest. And you may have my Noah's ark too, 'tause I'm so sorry you didn't find any 'Tristmas in your 'tockin.'"

"Yo' bressid dahlin! You is de puttiest t'ing in dis hull roomful!" Cinnamon cried, quite overcome, while Jamie danced about begging Nurse to hurry and help him on with his overshoes and ulster, and Helen tied Midget's hood with fingers that trembled with pure delight.

There was a still more excited group about the parlor fire late that evening. Even Mrs. Ponsonby was genuinely interested.

"To think of finding an old family servant in such a mannah! Really, it is most romantic," she said, waving her fan dramatically with one ring-decked hand while with the other she touched her handkerchief softly to her big dark eyes.

"You told her I would come to-morrow, Dudley?" asked Mrs. Keith from her corner, where she sat with Midget on her lap and Theodore on the rug at her feet.

"I did, my dear," answered the good doctor, stroking Helen's hand as she leaned over the arm of her chair. "Poor old Judith! I never want to lose track of her. It would have made you want to laugh and cry both to hear her go on over me."

"You ought to have heard her talk to Theo when we were there," Helen put in, "She told over and over just how he looked when he was her baby, and how 'he'd 'done growed so tall an' handsome.'"

"Seem's most as if I could remember her," Theodore said musingly, knitting his forehead.

"You were only a baby, son, when she left us. Not quite two years old, so you can hardly expect your memory to go back to old Judith, if she was the best Mammy a boy ever had," said his mother.

Helen slid her hand into her father's. "I hate to have this day come to an end," she said regretfully.

God is Not Far From Men!

God is not far from men!
The humblest flower that's born,
The mountain's towering form,
The glow of radiant morn,
His Beauty tell!

God is not far from men!
The fields of waving grain,
The sunshine and the rain,
The stars with light aflame,
His Wisdom speak!

God is not far from men!

J. E. Pickett preached to his congregation at the Highlands Church, Denver, Nov. 15-22, on themes designed to upbuild the spiritual life, entitling the week's services, "A Week of Worship." B. B. Tyler has recently given three lectures on his recent experiences in the Orient, which gave pleasure to his hearers and added $40 to the building fund of the church.

For years the church at Golden has had many discouragements, and it has seemed hard to accomplish any permanent work. But with the beginning of the ministry of J. W. Maddux in August, a change for the better seemed to come, and steady progress has been made. Audiences have improved in size and character from the first; the church is meeting expenses by free-will offerings; a number of influential members who have moved into the community have added their influence and membership to that of other good workers, with the result that the prospect seems bright.

F. F. Walters has been received with heartiness by the church at Grand Junction, and we expect good things from that important city on the western slope. Brother Walter's experience as pastor at Salida, with his pioneer evangelistic work in northwestern Colorado during last summer, have fitted him for still greater usefulness at Grand Junction.

F. L. Cook, of Sedalia, Mo., has been called to the pastorate at Salida, and is to begin work about Jan. 1. He held a meeting for this church last February.

G. W. Coffman, formerly pastor at Salida, began work at Paonia, Nov. 1. Paonia is an important new town in Delta county, to which the Rio Grande road has recently built. By reason of its splendid agricultural and horticultural resources and its great coal supply, a fine future awaits it. Our congregation has bought the old school property, which is admirably located, and the building will serve well for several years. The little church of 26 members is full of faith and determination, and Brother Coffman will lead them into the accomplishment of good work.

On Lord's day, Nov. 22, the new house at Atwood was opened for worship. Atwood is six miles west of Sterling, and 134 miles northeast of Denver. There are but nine members enrolled, but they are full of faith and zeal. Against many difficulties they secured a property worth a little over $1,100. On opening day $600 remained unprovided for. Nearly $200 was secured during the day. Within ninety days these pledges will be paid, and in this time it is hoped to raise another $150, and then it is hoped $250 can be borrowed from the Board of Church Extension. It is planned to re-establish the church in Sterling this missionary year, and it is expected that these two churches will then cooperate.

Colorado is having some good meetings. The leader is that at Boulder, in which the pastor, Samuel M. Bernard, did the preaching. There were 107 additions; a splendid result. Ward Russell is in a meeting at Florence, his own field, with 12 added to date. This, too, is a good result in that difficult field. Wm. L. Cline, of Manzanola, is preaching in a meeting at Rocky Ford. It has just begun. L. E. Brown held a meeting with his own congregation, with 25 additions. Other meetings are in prospect. The State Board asks the churches of the state to place the services of their pastors at the direction of the State Board for one meeting during the year.

The state convention at Pueblo in October voted to undertake the largest things ever undertaken in the history of our state work—the raising of $2,500 for state work this year. But Colorado has much of the western pluck and determination, and will win. Already the churches at South Broadway, Denver, Grand Junction and Highlands Church, Denver, have made their pledges. These, with individual offerings, amount to $375.90. But this is but a small beginning, and two months of the missionary year have passed. Every pastor is exhorted to take this matter up at once, and push it. There is nothing more important than to get an early start.

S. K. White, pastor at Windsor, is leading his congregation in a determined effort to cancel their indebtedness. This done, they expect to hold a meeting. A popular lecture course has been arranged, reaching from November to March, in which L. E. Brown, B. B. Tyler, William Bayard Craig and Samuel M. Bernard will appear. Also Judge J. Mack Mills' orchestra of Fort Collins.

The death of Mrs. Sarah J. Corbin, of Fort Collins, removes one of the pioneers of the work in northern Colorado. She was the leader in organizing the church at Fort Collins, and was familiar with the difficulties encountered in such work. The church at Fort Collins is the monument of her work as a pioneer.

The many friends of Mrs. Elizabeth J. Bronaugh, in Illinois, will regret to learn of her death. She passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Leonard G. Thompson, in Denver, Oct. 23.

LEONARD G. THOMPSON.

California.

Brother McHatton has been busy holding meetings since his return to California and success has followed his efforts.

The entrenchments of sin have to give way to Brother Gallahorn and Carroll; they have been kept busy since the state meeting and their work has been full of success.

Not many of the California brethren saw Brother Lehmon, who came out from Iowa in a great hurry to hold a meeting for Brother Denton at Vacaville, then after that fine meeting rushed back to his old pasture.

Brother Jopson, of Los Gatos, held an uplifting meeting for Brother McCollough at Warm Springs.

We regret very much to lose Brother John Young from our California forces. He has proved himself to be a consecrated, level-headed young man, and the Lodi church has greatly prospered with his labors. But his parents and that Missouri church will be the gainers, and we will still hope to strike hands with Brother Young in our "Sunset Land."

We too often have preachers come to California, who are not as level-headed as they think they are. Whether it is constitutional with them or the climate change may be the question.

When the Palo Alto church called Brother Evans away from the Red Bluff church it produced other great changes along the line. Brother Russell from Hollister to Red Bluff. Brother Meeker from Winters to Hollister. While the preachers and the people are all happy, the Winters church is trying to call an eastern man.

The church at Monmouth, Oregon, having taken Bro. J. A. Brown away from the Wheatland and Fairview churches, leaves a good field in need of a good workman.

We are needing more laborers in our fields.

Our work at Acampo is prospering in every department. A fine Sunday-school, same in Senior and Junior Endeavors. The Methodist brethren have come into our prayer-meetings and we alternate in their church and ours.

Brother Fuller, who united with the Church of Christ from the Baptist Church, is taking up the work at Galt and has settled with them.

Brother Reed, formerly of Texas, a good preacher and elder of the Lodi church, will hold the fort till they secure some one.

The offering for state work this year excelled all previous history. The fields are inviting and the laborers are being called.

We have lately held a short, successful meeting with Brother Middlekoff at Dos Palos, the only church we have in Merced county. We had one addition by statement, three by primary obedience; two of whom had been baptized, and all were well advanced in years and were heads of families. Dos Palos is one of those fertile spots in the great San Joaquin valley that is attracting attention and settling up with a good class of eastern people because of the irrigating canals that run all through the colony. Everything grows lovely. The alfalfa fields are a delight. Large quantities of honey are produced. It is strictly a land of "milk and honey," but it is not a "Holy Land." The colony is about eight miles long at present by four wide and is enlarging. Land $60 to $75 and water $2 per year. They cut from four to six crops of alfalfa with an aggregate of from five to ten tons per acre. Poultry, hogs, cattle, dairy and fruit are successful. A farm of ten to twenty acres makes a good holding. It is three miles from a railroad and strictly temperance.

J. DURHAM.

South Carolina.

The state convention was held at Orangeburg, Nov. 19-22. The attendance was large, and the sessions on Saturday and Lord's day especially enthusiastic.

Sermons were delivered by A. T. Fitts, the state evangelist; W. H. Brunson, of St. Stephens; John Simpson, who has been laboring in the state for over a year, but who is now compelled to return to his old home in Lexington, Ky.; W. T. Smith, of Ellenton, and S. D. Colyer, pastor of the Orangeburg church.

"Bible-school Methods" were discussed by Edward Everett Hollingworth, who also had charge of the music during the convention.

The C. W. B. M. report, by Miss Cora Brunson, of St. Stephens, corresponding secretary, showed 44 members, who raised $127 for missions during the year. Papers by Mrs. M. R. Gooding, of Varnville, and Mrs. Dora E. Walker, of Appleton, were read.

Miss Annie Agnes Lackey, a returned missionary from India, discussed "India's Needs." A. B. Phillips, of Augusta, Ga., spoke in behalf of Church Extension.

W. P. Bentley, of Shanghai, China, who is at home in Pittsburg, Pa., on furlough, made the most interesting address of the convention on the Celestial Kingdom.

Dr. C. W. Erwin read the report of the corresponding secretary and treasurer, and A. T. Fitts presented his report as state evangelist, showing that in the eight months he has been in the field he has held meetings at thirty points, preached 212 sermons, and received 93 additions.

B. L. Smith talked Home Missions with his usual ardor and effectiveness.

W. M. Taylor, late missionary to Porto Rico, spoke on the needs of and conditions in our new possession.

Detailed reports were received from 22 churches.

The convention endorsed The Southern Evangelist, CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, Christian Standard and Christian Century as worthy of the support of our brethren in the state.

It was decided to appoint a superintendent of Bible-school and young people's work, there being a great work to be done along these lines.

Pastor Colyer's Bible class of Orangeburg was a feature at one session. The books of Mark and Acts have been subdivided into 192 sections, with appropriate headings, which have been memorized and the gist of the contents of the books fixed in the mind in connection with these heads. Eleven young ladies, three of whom were under 15 years of age, were in the class, and were questioned by the pastor, in every conceivable way, without a mistaken reply. Then there was a speed exercise, in which Miss Marie Harley repeated the 192 headings, approximately over 900 words, in one minute and twenty-two seconds, intelligibly to the rest of the class. The others ranged to three minutes and one second. All who heard the recitation pronounced it wonderful, and the convention later expressed its appreciation by giving the class the Chautauqua salute.

The next convention will probably be held in Charleston, where a new church building is fast nearing completion, and is expected to be dedicated in January.

Newcastle contributes $110 to state missions, the largest contribution, with a single exception, ever received by the State Board from a church, in the November offering. The growth of the Newcastle church on missions, and in spiritual life generally, during the past year, is one of the marvels among many good records made by Indiana churches the past year. E. R. Black is the pastor.

Angola, which has a record fashioned after that of Antioch of old, sends $111.80, and assumes $70 due from the State Board to Strole, a total of $181.80. Many churches not heretofore represented in state missions, have already remitted, and others report progress in making up the offering. All of which is very encouraging to our State Board. The same good reports are coming in from Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. Lebanon leads out with $70. The Indiana preachers, churches and Sunday-schools seem to be working to make November offerings more nearly what they ought to be than ever before. Some will not be complete till later.

We ought to be careful about conflicting dates. One of our general enterprises sent a representative to one of our good churches on Sunday, Nov. 1, State Mission Day, and took an offering of $57, deferring the state offering till later, which, when it came, was less than $17. This is awkward. We ought to avoid conflict of dates.

There seems to be a small epidemic of resignations among preachers the past few weeks. I could give churches the names of some good Indiana preachers, if you speak quick. Some of the best preachers in the state will be accessible for the next week or two, but not for longer time, as this class of preachers are always in demand. Churches needing meetings can have names also of preacher-evangelists who can hold meetings.

How many churches will spare their pastors for one meeting and pay his salary? We make this call for volunteers to help answer about 300 calls on our books. Please write me and say you will spare your preacher and pay his salary for one meeting.

Western Pennsylvania.

Earle Wilfley, who has been pastor of the Park Church, New Castle, for four years, has resigned to accept a unanimous call to the church at Crawfordsville, Ind.

The First Church, Allegheny, is rallying in a royal way to the call of their pastor, Wallace Tharp.

E. A. Cole, of Washington, Pa., assisted E. W. Thornton, First Church, Pittsburg, Hazelwood Ave., in a meeting resulting in 26 added, nearly all by primary obedience.

Evangelist Fred A. Bright is in a meeting with Knoxville Church, Pittsburg, F. M. Gordon pastor. He just closed a short meeting at Turtle Creek, R. J. Bamber pastor, with 17 added.

Z. E. Bates, Shady Avenue, Allegheny, is in a meeting with home forces, with fine outlook.

Henry F. Lutz, after a very successful pastorate at Duquesne, Pa., has resigned to take the work at Fairmount, West Virginia, beginning Dec. 6.

W. D. Trumbull has been pushing the work with Central Church, New Castle, since graduating at Hiram College in June. They are running a Brockway entertainment course for the benefit of the building fund with splendid success. The writer assisted in a four weeks' meeting, resulting in 32 accessions to the church.

Western Pennsylvania missions are still the order of the day, and a goodly response is being made on the part of the churches to the appeal for a larger offering.

W. R. Warren, editor of the Christian Worker, has held two institutes, one at Brad-dock, O. H. Phillips pastor, and one at Central, Pittsburg, C. L. Thurgood pastor, beginning Wednesday night and closing Sunday. These addresses are proving to be a spiritual uplift to the churches and those who hear them.

Bolivar Church has recently closed a meeting resulting in 8 added. E. L. Allen, of Duquesne, did the preaching.

Holbrook Church, J. W. Stewart pastor, begins a meeting Nov. 30. E. W. Thornton, of Pittsburg, will do the preaching.

R. O. Miller, class of '03 of Bethany, has accepted a call to the church at Dravensburg, Pa., and is already on the field.

A. P. Cobb, of Waynesburg, begins a meeting Nov. 30 with Charlevoix Church, I. N. Frye pastor.

Brother Frye held a successful meeting at Zollarsville the first part of November.

J. G. Burroughs has resigned the work with Gipsy, Pine Vale and Smithport churches in Indiana county.

E. A. Hibler is back to his old post with the First Church, Johnstown, after a rest of three months. He reports his work in fine condition through the faithful efforts of W. R. Warren, who supplied the pulpit during his absence.

Harry A. Cochran, a student at Bethany College, is preaching half time for the church at Monaca.

S. J. T. Sale has accepted a call to Bell-vern and is already on the field at work.

The new church building at Mahoningtown, seventh ward, New Castle, is inclosed and will soon be ready for dedication. A. N. Chisholm is the pastor. This is a mission, supported by the Park Church, New Castle.

Virginia.

The new convention year has scarcely begun until our Virginia brotherhood is called upon to record another severe loss in its corps of preachers. This time it is L. A. Cutler who is taken. He attended our state convention and delivered one of our most eloquent addresses. He returned to his field of labor, every one supposed for a number of years of usefulness, but in less than three weeks he had passed to his reward. He was 66 years of age, and had been one of Virginia's staunchest and most gifted ministers. He was at one time candidate for governor on the prohibition ticket. I suppose some one who knew him long will write a suitable story of his life, and will therefore content myself with this simple statement.

A new church was dedicated near Newport, Va., on the second Sunday of November by Brother Reynolds, of Ohio, and J. A. Campbell, of Lee county. The organization was effected about two months since with nine members. They now have a house seating 250 people paid for, and a splendid chance for a rapid growth. This church is about two and a half miles from the birthplace of the lamented C. S. Lucas. I was told by those who had made a count, that there were 100 children in reach of this new church, who had never been to Sunday-school. What a mission field! Ernest C. Bragg, of Pembroke, is to preach for this congregation in connection with his work at Pembroke.

Monte Vista Seminary, at Vista, Virginia, has recently changed hands, but our Bro. O. L. Huffman has been retained as principal and manager. Brother Huffman is a successful school man, and will no doubt make a splendid success of this good enterprise.

A. J. Renforth is in a meeting with J. D. Hamaker at Strasburg. At last report there had been 23 confessions. The meeting was to continue. Brother Renforth is our Hampton preacher, and is also a very successful evangelist. Brother Hamaker is one of the "old guard," and a splendid co-worker in a meeting.

At noon on Thursday, Nov. 5, our state convention adjourned as a body, in order to attend to an ordination service. The following young men were ordained to the ministry: C. O. Woodward, Manchester; S. A. Morton, Crewe; and C. B. Richards, of Petersburg. Those who took part in the service were: W. F. Fox, W. L. Porter, P. A. Cave, B. H. Melton, L. A. Cutler and J. D. Hamaker. J. D. Hamaker delivered the charge, and L. A. Cutler made the ordination prayer.

Virginia Christian College at Lynchburg, Va., is prospering even beyond expectation. Reports say they now have 125 students, and this is the first year. Surely a good beginning.

There has been for the past two years a Sunday-school and mid-week service conducted at Fairmount, one of Richmond's promising suburbs. About 40 members have been found in this community, and a church will be organized the first Sunday in December. Hugh Sublett, who is now working for his A. M. at Richmond College, will be called to the pastorate of this young church. Brother Sublett has been speaking in this section for some time, and the people are greatly pleased with his ministrations. A chapel has been built, and the prospect for a successful work is very flattering. We now have six churches in Richmond and Manchester. Surely we are growing in this good old state.

J. J. Haley, of Cynthia, Ky., has accepted a call to Seventh Street Church, Richmond. Brother Haley will be heartily welcomed to Richmond and to Virginia. He will find a great field, and will do a great work.

Gethsemane has called S. G. Sutton. It is thought he will accept. Brother Sutton is a very successful worker, and will, if he goes to Gethsemane, be the "man of the hour."

The Richmond churches have decided to observe the week of prayer. All the people will go to one church each night. At the close of the week of prayer, the ministers will each hold a protracted meeting. Thus we will have five meetings going on at the same time in the city. Each pastor will do his own preaching. This effort will likely be by some special evangelist later on.

Charlottesville has not found a preacher. There are a number of other vacant pulpits.

J. T. T. Hundley has made a good beginning at Norfolk. This is a good field, and Brother Hundley is a strong preacher and a hard worker.

A union Thanksgiving service was held by the Disciples of Richmond in Seventh Street Church. C. O. Woodward, of Manchester, preached the sermon. It was very highly complimented. Brother Woodward knows how to get hold of the hearts of his hearers. He is one of Virginia's most promising young men.

A letter from J. R. Miller, Radford, Va., says they have their new brick house ready for the roof, but are not able to get the roof. Brother Miller is a good worker. This mission is worth and deserves success. It would not be a mistake or money wasted if some one would make J. R. Miller a Christmas present of a roof for this new church house.

A new church was recently organized in Westmoreland county by J. T. T. Hundley. This is our first work in this section, and is a compliment to Brother Hundley's earnestness.

B. H. Melton recently preached the annual sermon to the Junior Order of American Mechanics at Wilson, N. C. Brother Melton was for five years pastor of the Wilson Church. This special service was a just compliment to a deserving man. He preached for his old congregation at night. The house was crowded at both services. Brother Melton is the efficient pastor of Marshall Street Church, Richmond.

General Francis Marion Drake

By F. L. Moffet

General Drake is at rest. The end came unexpectedly to all. Even those who were attending him did not look for so sudden a departure. On Monday evening the writer called on him at his home, and found him in the best of spirits, and had a most delightful visit with him. He had been to the office that afternoon having some blank notes printed to be used in securing pledges for Drake University, the immediate purpose of which was the erection of two buildings, one for the Law Department and one for the Bible Department. Later in the evening President Hill M. Bell, of the university, and Judge C. C. Cole, dean of the Law Department, arrived from Des Moines, and, after talking over the interests of the university, General Drake made a pledge of twenty-five thousand dollars upon condition that the same amount be raised. That evening he induced Judge Cole to obligate himself to raise five thousand dollars of the above amount. President Bell and Judge Cole returned on the midnight train, and General Drake did not retire until after their departure. The next afternoon was very chilly, and General Drake went to his office as usual in the afternoon, but had to wait some time for a car, and became thoroughly chilled while waiting. He, however, spent the entire afternoon at the office, and answered all the correspondence of that day. That evening Joel Brown, financial secretary for Drake University, was in the city and spent about an hour with the governor at his home. C. C. Smith was also in the city, and Governor Drake, hearing of it, sent a note inviting him to dinner the next day. Brother Smith went to the house about ten o'clock and was having a friendly visit, when he observed a death-like palor come over his countenance and beads of perspiration stand out upon his face. He complained of severe pains in his lungs and difficult breathing. Brother Smith, upon feeling his pulse, and finding it very feeble, became alarmed, and called Mrs. Goss, his daughter. A physician was soon summoned and he was taken to his room, where he soon entered into convulsions, which was the beginning of the end. He suffered most intensely from Wednesday noon until about thirty minutes before his death on Thursday at 10:45. He was conscious to within a short time before his death. With that indomitable courage of a man who had never known defeat, he fought man's last great enemy, death, but to no avail. The last stages of the disease which had been preying upon him for years had been reached, and when the end came he sank to rest as one who lies down to pleasant dreams.

Those who looked upon him and ministered to him so tenderly in his final hours were his daughter, Mrs. Henry Goss, with whom he had made his home for some time, and Mr. Goss, Mr. and Mrs. George Sturdivant, Mrs. T. P. Shontz, of Chicago, his son, Frank E. and wife, of Chicago, his sister, Mrs. Nancy Lockman, his sister-in-law, Mrs. J. H. Drake, of Albia, some of the grandchildren, his pastor, and his physician, Dr. Clyde Sawyers. In response to telegrams stating his serious condition, the four absent children had made haste to reach their beloved father while yet alive, but John A. and T. P. Shontz were in New York and could not arrive till Saturday morning, though they had prepared to have a special train bring them from Chicago had their father been alive when they reached that city, and Mrs. J. L. Sawyers and Dr. Sawyers were in Baltimore, and though they made the greatest haste, did not arrive till Saturday night, as two wrecks delayed them on the way.

Profound grief was manifest in all upon the announcement of the death of General Drake; each one seemed to feel it as a personal loss. The state and the nation mourn the loss of a great and good man, but he was nearer to Drake University and his home city than to any others; the faculty and students of the university had lost a father and a friend; the people of his home city had lost a dearly beloved companion and brother.

When the news of ex-Governor Drake's death was heard at the state capitol general sorrow was expressed. Gov. A. B. Cummins issued a proclamation paying tribute to his sterling worth in the following beautiful words:

"It is with profound sorrow that I announce to the people of this state the death of Francis Marion Drake. He was one of Iowa's most distinguished citizens, and has contributed in a high degree to the growth and development of the state. Born in Illinois, Dec. 30, 1830, he came with his parents into Iowa in 1837. His boyhood and early manhood witnessed the privations and dangers of the western pioneer, and the strong, reliant character for which he was conspicuous was formed amid the perils of the early days. He answered the first call to arms in the war of the rebellion and bore a prominent and noble part in the struggle for the union. He was sorely wounded but returned to the army while yet on crutches. He rose by gallantry and courage through the ranks and was mustered out at the close of the war as brevet brigadier general. In civil life he was equally successful, and accumulated a fortune which he devoted to benevolence and philanthropy. He was elected governor of the state in 1895, and filled the office with great distinction during the years of 1896 and 1897. His death will be universally deplored, and his memory will be always revered.

"Now, therefore, I, Albert B. Cummins, governor of the state of Iowa, in addition to the sad announcement above made, do hereby direct that until after the funeral ceremonies occur, the flag upon the capitol shall be at half mast, and that upon the day of the funeral the executive offices shall be closed."

In the city of Centerville every heart was sorely touched. Rich and poor, learned and ignorant, the prominent and the humble vied with each other in attempting to find some way to express the gratitude of the heart.

The funeral obsequies were simple, yet befitting a man who had reached such great distinction in state and nation. From 9:30 until 12 Monday the body lay in state at the Central Church of Christ, with a detail from the Knights Templars in charge. Thousands passed by and looked tearfully in the face of one who had been their benefactor and friend. It was evident that everyone felt sincere sorrow at his departure. More than a thousand of the children from the public schools passed before his casket.

The floral decorations were beyond description. Possibly no great man in the state of Iowa ever was given such elaborate floral tributes at his funeral. On the great pipe organ was spread the regimental flag, the one presented to Company "G" by the women of Appanoose county, and bearing the names of the battles fought. Beneath was the word "Drake" in the university colors. Around the platform were the beautiful floral offerings of the family, including a magnificent blanket of roses, a pillow with the word "Father," a gates ajar, the broken column, a large wreath and dozens of American beauty roses, and chrysanthemums from the finest Chicago florists.

At one o'clock a brief service was held at the house with the family alone by the pastor. Words of consolation were spoken, and a brief prayer offered. The family with closed doors then sat for nearly an hour alone with the dead. What tender memories and holy influences!

The Des Moines special bearing Governor Cummins and his staff and the university faculty and students, arriving too late for them to view the remains at the church, were taken to the house. The funeral services at the church were held at 2:30 and were very simple. The choir, under the leadership of Professor Travis, sang "Lead Kindly Light," "Tarry with Me," and "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." The Scripture was read by Rev. D. A. Wickizer, of Bloomfield, Ia. A very tender prayer was offered by Dr. I. N. McCash, of University Place Church of Christ. The memorial sermon was delivered by the writer. President Hill M. Bell, of the university, represented the university with brief remarks.

President Bell said: "The news of Governor Drake's death is a great shock to the university. His loss is felt in so many ways that it is difficult to say wherein it will be felt the most severely. While the founder of the institution, he was also a real father to it and took as much interest apparently in the management of the university as he would in the direction of an only child. No appeal ever went to him from the university that was unheeded. If a professor felt the need of a special piece of apparatus, a note to Governor Drake brought in response a draft sufficient to purchase the article. If we needed a building, he was ready to give half or all as the necessity seemed to indicate. His gifts to the university amount to almost $200,000. But his greatest service to the university was not in the money that he gave, but rather in the wise counsel exercised as president of the board of trustees. His unselfishness was always so apparent to everyone of his associates on the board of trustees that his words of counsel were law to its members. No one had to beg Governor Drake for his assistance. He was always ready to do more than had been asked. The loss to the university is irreparable, but we trust that the institution that bears his name shall be an everlasting monument to the goodness of his heart and the greatness of his acts."

The Knights Templars who had charge of the funeral gave their beautiful ritualistic service at the church, and also at the grave. The G. A. R., the city officials and all the orders of the city were present in a body, as was the Drake faculty, trustees, trustees of the Drake Free Public Library, the Appanoose County Bar Association.

Besides Governor Cummins and his staff, there were many from Keokuk, Ottumwa and Chicago, who came on special trains to be present at the funeral of a dear friend. Among Chicago visitors were Thos. Miller, general freight traffic manager of the Burlington system; Mr. Harris, of Harris Gates Company, and Mr. Schenck.

The thing which most impressed every one in connection with the funeral obsequies was the spirit in which everything was done. No man ever had a more beautiful display in floral decorations. No one could be more ardently admired. But everything which was done, from the humblest to the highest, was a heart service. Everyone felt that he could not do enough for so true a friend.

While we knew that he had personally helped many in our own city, we had no idea that he had been the personal benefactor of so many. His assistance was rendered quietly, and no one would ever learn from him that he had helped another. But since his departure, hundreds have expressed their gratitude for favors shown and assistance rendered. What he did was with no thought of reward in this life. Among his private papers are found evidences of charity reaching back to 1856, and among these same papers are records for almost every year of his life since that. Assistance in a financial way was rendered some friend, but never anything in return.

Others will write of his public life and his great gifts to the church and the cause of Christian education. I desire to speak of his greatness in other directions.

While he was during his eventful life in business, associated with many of the great financiers of the nation, such as Russell Sage and others, he never felt above the lowliest citizen. He felt himself to be above no one, and felt inferior to none. The common people loved him as a brother, and they had supreme confidence in him. How many have leaned upon him in life!

I shall never forget his tender regard for his sainted wife, who was taken from him suddenly in 1883. He cherished her memory and honored her noble life by what he did. Last April, when we held our farewell service in the old church to enter the new building, he was to make a few remarks. I shall never forget how, with trembling hands, and quivering lips, and tear-stained eyes, he spoke of his departed loved ones. The old memories came back upon him; the faces of other years appeared before him; the voices which had been silent for years spoke again to him. His devoted wife, his sister, his saintly father and mother—all had been carried out from that old building to the silent city of the dead. We scarcely thought so soon would we be called upon to carry his lifeless form from the beautiful new building which his donation had made possible.

The tender regard in which he was held by the people of his own city, where he has lived since 1865, is a testimony to the greatness and worth of the man.

The high regard in which he is held by his children is certainly an inspiration. No family ever enjoyed each other more. No envy or jealousy finds place there. The only rivalry which can be observed in them is as to who can do the most for the other. This was a noble characteristic in the life of General Drake; it was a joy for him to serve.

I have been associated with him for nearly eight years in the church in this city, and he never endeavored to lord it over God's heritage; he had none of that spirit. His advice and counsel were most valuable, and always sought; but he would always say, "I am only one, and maybe this will not suit the other members of the official board." The poorest member of the board received as much consideration from him as the wealthiest. A truer man never lived—there was nothing little in his nature. You could trust him to the utmost, and when once his friend, he trusted you. He had the elements of character which make a true man. He was straightforward in all he did. The following resolutions by the Bar Association of his county reveal the motives which actuated him through life:

WHEREAS, on the 20th inst., God in his divine dispensation called from this life to a life beyond the limits of mortality, and into the realms of immortality, where God himself is the divine ruler, our brother, Francis Marion Drake, therefore

Be it resolved by the members of the bar of Appanoose county, Iowa, that in the separation of our worthy and esteemed brother, Francis Marion Drake, from us, we have lost a distinguished member of our profession.

Be it further resolved that it is the sense of this bar that no nobler man, honest and courageous lawyer, worthy citizen or Christian gentleman ever belonged to the bar of this country.

Be it further resolved that Governor Drake was a lawyer of the highest type, in all that the word implies among lawyers, who are always zealous for the fair name of the profession. He was honest, zealous, courageous, bold in his professional life. The most loyal to his client, but that loyalty, however, was always subordinate to his loyalty to truth and right. And he never sought the success of his client at the expense of right and justice or his own ambition to succeed. Brother Drake was not a "trickster," "pettifogger" or deceiver in his business, but while loyal and industrious for the best interests of his client, he was fair and honest with the client of his opponent, and the soul of courtesy and kindness to opposing council.

Be it further resolved, that in the life and practice of Brother Drake as a lawyer, he has never mantled the cheek of any honorable member of the bar with the blush of shame, or his dearest friend or children with a cause of regret at his conduct.

While he has been separated from us, he is not lost, but his professional life may be emulated by us who remain, and should stimulate us to do the right; and when our lives shall close, may we join him in that supreme court above presided over and inspired by the great Law-giver from whose edict there is no appeal, and whose judgments are always just and acceptable to the good.

MR. J. H. GARRISON, DEAR BRO.: I have read your little book, "A Modern Plea for Ancient Truths," with a great deal of interest and profit, but there is one passage in it which, if I understand correctly, seems to me to contain a dangerous idea. It is found on page 76 in the chapter on progress, and is as follows: "He has not exhausted Himself in the revelations which He has made in the past, either through nature, through history, or through holy men of old who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." This means to me that the Bible does not give us a complete or a sufficient revelation of God's will to men. In other words, that we are not only to learn more of the revelation which has already been given, but that we are to expect that additions will be made to this body of revelation. Is this the thought that you intended to present?

Faternally,
V. F. JOHNSON.

[This is not the thought we presented, as we supposed the context clearly shows. The Bible is quite sufficient as the written record of God's revelation to men, showing the way of salvation. But there is a growing knowledge of God and of truth through the experiences of life and through the movements of God in history. This is not "a dangerous idea," but a very wholesome one. It is a dangerous idea to limit God's operations in the world to the distant past and take Him out of the present. There is a constant unfolding of God's purposes in human history and in the life of man, and many things which are now hid from our vision will one day become clear to us. What we call human progress is but the result of God's movements in the world.—EDITOR.]

Further About the Falling off in Ministerial Students.

I was pleased to read the editorial in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Nov. 5, touching the falling off in the number of those preparing for the ministry, for it relates to a matter most vital to the church. Does not a part of the trouble arise from our treatment of our boys in the home and Sunday-school?

I call attention to the present strange tendency of the boys to drop out of all public exercises. Is not this tendency well nigh universal, or have my observations been exceptional? In most public entertainments at the church, the boys are giving over to the girls recitations, orations, and all exercises involving oratory. If put upon the program they excuse themselves and slip out, consenting, of course, to take part in some foolish little Santa Claus business.

Look at the performers at the Christmas and Children's Day celebrations. You would suppose that this was a girls' school.

You will not hear a recitation from a boy of any size. This is all contrary to nature. Men are the natural and rightful orators, but our young men are giving up their birthright. This has gone so far that the ladies of the Woman's Temperance Union seem to have ceased to expect young men, or even large boys, to appear in their medal contests. It is now a girls' affair, since their brothers have dropped out. If a boy appears among the speakers he is so small that he does not feel embarrassed by the lack of masculine company.

One evil begets another. Failure to drill for speaking carries with it failure in reading. The young men who have avoided declamation and oratorical exercises are invariably found to be poor readers. This is a logical result. A single recitation, well drilled into a child, will make him a better reader for life. Many such will produce high excellence. But the thoughtless youngster who has dodged this important part of his education has, by his folly, doomed himself for life to be a blundering and hesitating reader. Are we not making a great mistake? Where are the future jury pleaders, congressional debaters and statesmen to come from if the boys are not taught to speak? But a question which is far more vital to the church, How are the ranks of the gospel preachers to be kept full when our young men are thus neglected?

Does one reply, The preparation now required for the ministry is spiritual, intellectual and scholarly, and we are giving them that?

It is true, of course, that the spiritual and intellectual preparation is needed, but that of itself is not sufficient. The voice also needs to be trained, and still more, practice in speaking is necessary and that easy assurance must be gained that enables one to face an audience with confidence and pleasure. A young man may have scholarship and faith and spirituality, but if when through with his college course he finds that he dreads to speak in public and has a poor voice for it, rest assured he is not going into the ministry.

We thus lose hundreds of young men from the gospel field whose heads and hearts are right and whose general education has been ample. What has caused this falling off in the love of oratory? Is it the excessive devotion to athletics which, with many, monopolize all their spare time and energy? I am a believer in muscular development, but not to the exclusion of oratorical training. Cannot our Sunday-school and Endeavor program-makers correct this evil?

Syncopated Church Music.

[The following paragraph on church music appeared recently in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and may be suggestive as indicating the drift of secular opinion on this subject.]

The invasion of ragtime music into the church choir, slightly modified, has stirred the pastors of churches at Topeka, Kan., into a revision of the choral program, and a careful inspection of it each Sunday, to see that nothing of a frivolously festal nature is introduced. Church music has drifted a long way from long-meter doxol-ogies; and it was many years before the present syncopated melodies came into vogue that liberties were taken with some of the staid old hymns by irreligious singers and composers. That mighty and powerful Methodist glorification, in figurative language of the regenerating potency of the divine spirit, "There is a Fountain Filled with Blood," which used to climb the heights of sounding melody two words at a time with a majesty that befitted its spiritual exaltation, was "syncopated" more than twenty years ago. It became a hurried, galloping, sacrilegious horror, in which the line was lengthened out into, "There is a fountain filled with blood, filled with blood, filled with blood," and if the requirements of the meter had been such, would probably have been made "blood, blood," without hesitation or compunction. The new tune rattled off the rather sanguine phraseology in the same notes of that other whoop-la-whoop "song," "O, How I Love Jesus," which is set to such a wretched measure that it must be pronounced "O, howl of," etc., in order to keep up with the sixty-miles-an-hour music. Such effects are an abomination, and the pastors of churches are moving none too soon to bring the songs of sacred worship back to the stateliness and grandeur of ancient days.

A Condition, not a Theory.

In many congregations within my knowledge, apostolic conditions of salvation are being abandoned, those favoring a change contending that modern "society," and especially the younger element, cannot be drawn into a church where "old foggy" usages prevail. But to strengthen the church from this source, the most popular ultra sectarian ideas must prevail, such as modern "lecture sermons," modern music, modern church fairs, parlor dancing, progressive euchre, church club meeting, ending in a dance. If the allurements and recreations of the world are so harmless that the church members can engage in its amusements without any taint or compunction of conscience, that they can do no harm in the church, what in the name of all that is good, does the world need of the church? Of what use is the church to the world? The condition of things looks as though the story of the cross, to soften the sinner's heart, and bring him into the fold of God, has lost its power. In my grandfather's days, when, without the aid of any instrumental music, the good old spiritual songs of Zion would be sung, it would seem as if heaven and earth combined to sing all glory to our King. We are told now by some of our younger preachers, that it is the same old Jerusalem gospel, but in a new dress. God prepared the first gospel dress; we know nothing of his ever changing. Who made this second dress? In the olden days there were brought into the fold of Christ (at the time of ingatherings, protracted meetings) scores of souls at a time. Then was the time of separation. You could not serve God and mammon. No, there could be no middle ground.

THE BEATEN PATH. A novel. By Richard Lawrence Makin. (The Macmillan Co. $1.50.)

A novel of very unusual strength. The problems touched by it are those of the modern industrial situation, combinations of capital, over-capitalization, and labor-union troubles. These are topics which tempt the novelist to extravagance in his treatment. Mr. Makin has admirably escaped this danger, and his work is strong in its restraint and in the absence of exaggeration. He makes no attempt to dazzle us with the glory and splendor of the financial world. To tell the truth, we are tired of being dazzled, and we welcome a book which handles the matter soberly and sanely. The human interest of the story is amply provided for by a plot involving some very interesting people in quite unusual relations. Any attempt to even hint at the gist of the story in a few words would only spoil it. It should, however, be said that the love motive is worked out in a distinctly novel and ingenious manner. The style, without being loose, is full and leisurely. It would have been no great disadvantage if its 550 pages could have been reduced by at least twenty per cent.

THE NEW ERA IN THE PHILIPPINES. By Arthur Judson Brown, D.D. (Revell. $1.25 net.)

The writer is Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., and spent a considerable time in the Philippines. Naturally his primary interest was in the missionary situation—but this, broadly interpreted, means the whole situation. He is a good, all-round observer, has gathered facts assiduously and used them intelligently. Probably this is the best book that is generally accessible to tell the average reader all that he is apt to need to know about the present situation in the Philippines. Political, industrial, commercial and educational questions are discussed, as well as religious. But the author thinks—and rightly, we believe—that “the real issues of the new era in the Philippine Islands are not so much political and commercial as moral, and that it is a grave error to imagine that they can be settled right without the active and prayerful co-operation of the Christian Churches in the United States.”

THE BONDAGE OF BALLINGER. By Roswell Field. (Revell. $1.00)

Ballinger's bondage was an enslaving passion for books, for first editions and autograph copies. With passing years this growing passion obscured all other interests and led him into many dilemmas. The patient Hannah, his wife, bore the consequent domestic embarrassments with a degree of fortitude and composure which would have made Job seem quick-tempered and irritable by comparison. But while his chronic bookishness deprived Ballinger of all business sagacity and left him as helpless as a child in all practical affairs, it mellowed his spirit to the richness of old

Pains in the Back

Are symptoms of a weak, torpid or stagnant condition of the kidneys or liver, and are a warning it is extremely hazardous to neglect, so important is a healthy action of these organs.

They are commonly attended by loss of energy, lack of courage, and sometimes by gloomy foreboding and despondency.

“I had pains in my back, could not sleep and when I got up in the morning felt worse than the night before. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and now I can sleep and get up feeling rested and able to do my work. I attribute my cure entirely to Hood's Sarsaparilla.” Mrs. J. N. PERRY, care H. S. Copeland, Pike Road, Ala.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

Cure kidney and liver troubles, relieve the back, and build up the whole system.

wine or an old fiddle, and brought to him the power of winning friendship. Through one of these friendships he finds peace and prosperity in his old age. Beautiful, idyllic, tender, the story of Ballinger is a genuine little classic.

ON THE WE-A TRAIL. A story of the Great Wilderness. By Caroline Brown. Illustrated by Max Klepper. (The Macmillan Co. $1.50.)

A moving tale of adventures in the Illinois country during the early years of the Revolutionary War, when the country was full of Indians, hostile to each other and to the whites, when the ancient feud between the French and English settlers was being superseded by the conflict between the English and the Americans. The stern and martial figure of General Clark moves across the stage of this story. There are plenty of Indian atrocities in the narrative, and a strong and stirring portrayal of life in the “great wilderness,” both in peace and in war, and a pleasing love story delicately handled. In short, it is altogether such a book as Maurice Thompson's “Alice of Old Vincennes.”

MODERN FABLES AND PARABLES, Or Moral Truth in a Nutshell. By Rev. W. S. Harris. Illustrated. (J. L. Nichols & Co., Naperville, Ill. pp. 352. $1.25.)

There is a good deal of shrewdness and hard sense in some of these modern fables. The author has followed quite closely the method of the immortal Aesop, and has put many principles of right living and clear thinking into very concrete and catching form. Putting moral truth into parables and fables is a good deal like the old plan of administering quinine in jelly. The success of the expedient depends largely upon the skill of the administrator. The inventor of these fables evidently has a gift for conceiving and stating truth in concrete forms.

CHALK. Practical Work with Chalk and Blackboard. By Ella N. Wood. (Revell. 75cts net.)

The Sunday-school teacher or superintendent who has felt the need of illustrating the lesson graphically with chalk, but has been deterred by the consciousness of having no artistic talent, will find much in this book to surprise and delight him.

The author's fundamental notion apparently is that artistic excellence is not essential for effectiveness, and she shows how the crudest drawings, such as the most inartistic person can make, can be utilized to good advantage.

December Magazines.

The Booklovers' Magazine has just completed the first year of its existence. It is the biggest baby in the world of periodical literature, and the most precocious. Being issued in connection with the Booklovers' Library, its literary standing was assured from the start and it found waiting for it a special constituency created by that successful enterprise, as well as the general constituency composed of all who appreciate a good thing in the way of a magazine. The most striking feature of every number, and especially of the Christmas number, is the large number of illustrations superbly printed in color.

The Critic has a well illustrated article on Sacred Themes in Lithograph. The Jessica Letters, purporting to be a correspondence between a New York editor and a brilliant Southern woman, grow more interesting with each installment. The Critic's book reviews are short, crisp, frank and trustworthy. Evidently their reviewers read the books. The custom is none too common outside of their office—and ours.

The World's Work presents its usual comprehensive survey of current events. Among the special features are a very fully illustrated article on new methods in agriculture, a character sketch of Speaker Cannon, a careful study of the New York public school system and a survey of Governor Taft's work in the Philippines by Bernard Moses.

The World To-Day contains so large a variety of timely articles and editorials, that it is difficult to particularize. It is, as the name indicates, thoroughly journalistic in tone and purpose, and is developing into a strong rival of the two or three widely known magazines which aim to summarize all the important events of the preceding month.

"We Are Seven."

I met a little girl of eight Whose family was athletic,
And that was how I came to hear
This Wordworth tale pathetic.

"I'm living all alone," she said,
Though really we are seven,
But pa and ma are on the links,
And Tom is on the eleven.

"My sister Kate plays basket ball,
Her team is always winner;
One brother trains for Harvard's crew,
And cannot eat our dinner.

Then Johnnie joined the baseball nine,
He all the time plays matches
And wears a cage upon his face
While every ball he catches.

"Yes, we are really seven, sir,
But our years won't be many;
I, too, will grow up strenuous,
And then we won't be any."

—McLandburg Wilson.

An Unhistoric Dark Day.

They were sitting before the fire reading.
"Candles were lighted in the house," read Jimmy. "The fowls retired to roost.
The cocks were crowing all around as at the break of day. Objects could not be distinguished but at very little distance, and everything bore the appearance and gloom of night."

"Well, so they do every night," said
Jennie. "That's not wonderful."

"Oh, but this was in the daytime," said Jimmy. "The darkness began about ten o'clock in the morning and lasted all day long. The histories all tell of it, and call it the Dark Day. It was May 19, 1780."

Jennie's only answer was a great yawn, for she did not care for history as Jimmy did. The two were keeping house alone.
Father and mother had gone to stay all day and all night. Jimmy and Jennie had celebrated by sitting up very late.

"How jolly it will be not to have anybody call us in the morning!" said Jimmy.
"Let's sleep as late as we want to for once."

"Oh, no; let's get up early. There's lots to do, and we don't want father and mother to think we neglect things," said conscientious Jennie.

Fifteen minutes later they were both sound asleep, and only the old clock was left to make a noise in the farm kitchen.
But the clock was not so faithful as usual.
Something was wrong with it. In the middle of the night it stopped, and no ticking was heard for five hours. Then, without any apparent reason, it began again, as watches sometimes do.

The house was very still in the morning, and the two children slept heavily. Jennie woke up first, just in time to hear the clock strike.

"Jimmy, Jimmy, wake up!" she cried.
"It's seven o'clock."

They had always been early risers at the farm, and seven o'clock seemed very late to them.

Jimmy jumped up like a shot. He hurried to do the chores, and Jennie hurried to get the breakfast. It was a dull, cloudy day, and not a glimpse could they get of the sun. Jimmy went to his weeding, like the faithful farmer boy he was, and Jennie was very busy about the house till the clock struck twelve. Then she called Jimmie in to dinner. They were very merry at dinner and ate a long time.

"How dark it is!" said Jennie, when the meal was fairly over. "It must be going to rain."

They hastened out to scan the sky; but no rain-cloud was to be seen—only the gray mist that had covered the sun all day.

Why! why-ee!" cried Jennie, in astonishment. "The chickens are going to roost. Jimmy, it's another Dark Day!"

Jimmy ran in the house and brought out the book. He had to hold it close to his eyes to see in the dim light.

"Yes!" he cried excitedly. It's just the way it was then. We're having another Dark Day. Hooray! Go and look at the clock."

"A quarter past one," reported Jennie.
"Jimmy, we'll have to light a lamp. Oh, I wish—I wish—that it was night, so that mother would come."

"Nonsense!" said Jimmy, although his own hands trembled queerly. "It's only living history over again. Don't be a coward, Jennie. Just think how grand it is to be alive on such a wonderful day!"

"Don't go out to weed again!" begged Jennie. "Stay in the house with me."

So Jimmy stayed; and, although he wouldn't have liked to own it, he was glad to stay. He even wiped the dishes, "for company," he said. At two o'clock a rattle of wheels was heard, and a buggy drove into the yard.

"It's mother!" cried Jennie, joyfully, and ran out, dish-cloth in hand. Mother got out with her arms full of packages and a beaming smile. But she looked at father queerly when she saw what the children were doing.

"Why, Jennie," she said, "haven't you got your supper dishes done yet?"

"Supper!" cried Jimmy and Jennie.
"Why, ma, you mean dinner! Did you come early because you thought we'd be afraid? We might have been, if we hadn't read about the other Dark Day in the history last night."

"Early! Dark Day!" Mother looked up in astonishment. "What are you children thinking? What time do you think it is?"

"Two o'clock in the afternoon," chorused Jimmy and Jennie, pointing to the clock.

Then mother laughed. Oh, how she laughed! The table fairly shook till all the dishes rattled.

Satisfied.

Love wore a threadbare dress of gray,
And toiled upon the road all day.
Love wielded pick and carried pack,
And bent to heavy loads the back.

Though meagre-fed and sorely tasked,
One only wage Love ever asked—
A child's white face to kiss at night,
A woman's smile by candle-light.

A Real Christmas Story.

In a large New York business institution, says the December World's Work, there was an employee whose Christmas gift had the saving grace of individual consideration. He was a bookkeeper, nearly forty years in harness, and he had been overlooked in former years of fatness in Wall Street, except for a customary and unvarying ten-dollar gold piece. Several days before Christmas last year, the office became agitated with rumors of an unprecedented flood of good fortune. The old bookkeeper tried to keep calm, but his hopes ran riot, and the day before Christmas found him in a nervous flurry. He saw his fellow-employees called into the cashier's office one by one, each returning with a sealed envelope. The bookkeeper waited for his summons, but it came not. Even the office-boys emerged, biting new gold pieces to test them, and the roll was complete an hour before the bookkeeper summoned courage to send in an inquiry whether a mistake had been made in the case of Mr. Blank, and whether an envelope had been overlooked. The answer was:

"There is no envelope for Mr. Blank, but the president wishes to see him for a moment."

The bookkeeper saw only one interpretation. This meant his discharge for failing efficiency. He fairly tottered into the sanctum, a pitiful figure of panic fear.

"Sit down, Mr. Blank," said the president. "I have omitted your name in the list of Christmas rewards for faithful service, and I regret that the bank will have to find another man to fill your position after to-morrow. Compose yourself, sir, tears are undignified in this office. You should know better after being here for so long a term of service. Don't go. I have a few words more to say before you leave. The directors have decided to retire you on full pay for the rest of your life, and the year's salary will be paid to you in advance. This does not establish a ruinous precedent, for employees with thirty-eight years of faithful service to their credit are not sprinkled very plentifully through Wall Street."

A Bad Sign.

An amusing story, which may or may not be entirely true, is told of a short-sighted but energetic member of the Russian secret police, by the Youth's Companion:

He was walking through a little-frequented street of St. Petersburg, one night, when he spied high up on a lamp-post, a placard.

"Aha!" he said to himself, scenting mischief on the instant and alert for action, "that's one of those incendiary notices about his majesty, the Czar! It must come down at once!"

With some difficulty, being of a stout

WHY SWAMP-ROOT GIVES STRENGTH.

Almost every one, from personal experience, knows that effects of any kind of severe physical strain are felt, first of all, in the small of the back—in other words, in those Vital Organs, the Kidneys. This is as true in the case of the very powerful as it is with one of less strength, and it is especially true whenever the kidneys are weak.

The Great Kidney Remedy Swamp-Root, strengthens the kidneys and through them helps all the other organs.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root investigated by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, the ones we publish this week for the benefit of our readers, speak in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

Mrs. H. N. Wheeler, of 117 High Rock St., Lynn, Mass., writes on Nov. 2, 1901: "About 18 months ago I had a very severe spell of sickness. I was extremely sick for three weeks, and when I finally was able to leave my bed I was left with excruciating pains in my back. My water at times looked very like coffee. I could pass but little at a time, and then only after suffering great pain. My physical condition was such that I had no strength and was all run down. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, but I felt certain that they were the cause of my trouble. My sister, Mrs. C. E. Littlefield, of Lynn, advised me to give Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root a trial. I procured a bottle and inside of three days commenced to get relief. I followed up that bottle with another, and at the completion of this one found I was completely cured. My strength returned, and to-day I am as well as ever. Swamp-Root is so pleasant to take.

"My business is that of canvasser. I am on my feet a great deal of the time, and have to use much energy in getting around. My cure is therefore all the more remarkable, and is exceedingly gratifying to me."

Mrs. H. N. Wheeler

MRS. N. S. WHEELER.

The mild and extraordinary effect of the world-famous kidney and bladder remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for more sickness and suffering than any other disease, therefore, when through neglect or other causes, kidney trouble is permitted to continue, fatal results are sure to follow.

We often see a friend, a relative, or an acquaintance apparently well, but in a few days we may be grieved to learn of their severe illness, or sudden death, caused by that fatal type of kidney trouble—Bright's Disease.

The Effect of the Sample Bottle of Swamp-Root.

"Having heard that you could procure a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, free by mail, I wrote to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle and it was promptly sent. I was so pleased after trying the sample bottle that I sent to the drug store and procured a supply. I have used Swamp-Root regularly for some time and consider it unsurpassed as a remedy for torpid liver, loss of appetite and general derangement of the digestive functions. I think my trouble was due to too close confinement in my business. I can recommend it highly for all liver and kidney complaints. I am not in the habit of endorsing any medicine, but in this case I cannot speak too much in praise of what Swamp-Root has done for me."

Springfield, Ohio, Feb. 21st, 1901.

SPECIAL NOTE.—If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the wonderful discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are getting better they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

You may have a sample bottle of this great remedy, Swamp-Root, sent absolutely free by mail, also a book telling all about Swamp-Root, and containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives, to the great curative properties of Swamp-Root. In writing to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

build, he succeeded in climbing the post and dislodging the placard; he bore it to the ground, and there, peering at it by the light of the lamp, he read two Russian words, the English equivalent for which is the well-known legend, "Wet Paint."

He is Looking for You.

"Hello, little stranger! What is the matter?"

The rough-looking wagoner softened his voice in speaking, for the child in the road was crying.

"I am lost! I can't find my father," sobbed the child.

"Is he a big man, with a long, white beard?"

"Yes; that's my father."

"It's all right then, because he is looking for you. Keep right along, and if you don't find him, he'll find you."

And the child dried his tears and sprang into the road again, for, if his father was looking for him, of course he could not fail to be in his arms again after a while.

Dear boy, dear girl, if you are trying to come to Christ, take courage. He is looking for you, too, and if you only persevere, you are sure to meet him in the way and to hear his gracious voice saying, "Come unto me."—Exchange.

How Walter Waited.

Eight o'clock was Walter's bedtime, and, like many other little boys and girls, he thought it came too soon. Just as he was building a fine large house of blocks, or chasing fire-flies on the lawn, the eight strokes would sound from the big, old-fashioned clock in the hall, and mother would carry her little boy off to bed.

"I'll be so glad when I'm fifty years old," Walter used to say. "Then I'm going to stay up 'all night long." Mother always smiled when he said this, and told him to wait and see.

One morning mother and father went off on a day's journey, not to return until nine o'clock in the evening, and as an unusual treat, Walter was to be allowed to wait up for them. The little boy was overjoyed. All day long he planned games for the extra hour before bedtime. Such houses he would build, and such fun he would have! When eight o'clock struck, he pointed his finger merrily at the big clock and laughed at it.

"Not to-night!" he cried gleefully.

Soon after, when he had built one fine house of blocks, he began to feel drowsy, but he wouldn't tell nurse. It looked so comfortable on the big sofa in the library, he thought it would be easier to wait there for father and mother.

So he climbed upon the soft cushions and snuggled down contentedly. Then he laid his curly head back on the cushions. It was so pleasant to wait here; by and by there would be a ring at the doorbell, and then he would rush to open the big door, and mother would kiss him—and father—and father—would—

Walter suddenly stopped thinking, for his blue eyes closed, and he was fast asleep. It was thus that mother and father found him when they came in shortly after nine o'clock; and how everybody laughed, even Walter, when he saw the joke! After that evening Walter made no more objections to going to bed at eight o'clock.—The Sunbeam.

A Homely Sermon.

The old tinker sat out under a shady tree, mending the kitchenware, and we children stood around him in breathless interest. We lived in a quiet country place, and his visit each summer was a great event to us.

Mother brought out an old tin dipper full of holes. The tinker looked it over, and shook his head.

"What you need is a new dipper, ma'am," he said. "There's some things that it's better not to fuss to mend. It's just wasting time and money. You'd better throw them away and get new. Don't forget that, children," he went on after mother had gone into the house. "It's a good thing to know how to mend and patch, but there's some things which have got so old and rusty and full of holes that it isn't worth while trying. There's some folks go on trying to patch up a bad temper all their lives. As fast as one place is fixed, another one gives out, and they're as bad as ever. What they ought to do is to throw the old one away, and ask the Lord to give them a new one."

"And would He do it?" questioned my little brother, eagerly.

"Of course He would," said the tinker. "Don't it say in the Good Book that He'll make us 'new creatures?' Well, that's what it means, and I know He'll do it, because He gave me a new temper, and made me contented when I used to be sour and sad."

"Will the Lord give us new dresses when the old ones are too bad to mend?" asked my sister, in a wistful way.

"I guess He always has, hasn't He?" said the tinker. "While you're little, He gives you a mamma and papa to get them for you, and He's given you two good hands to work with when you get big. So don't think the Lord's forgotten you, sissy."

The homely little sermon has come to my mind many times since I was old enough to know the meaning of "the new life." Let us leave off mending and patching the old, unsatisfying way of living. If we but trust our Father, there is a better way of life, with all the old worries and failures left out. Let us learn to pray in perfect faith David's prayer: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me."—Bible Advocate.

One day the mate of a trading schooner, overhauling the log, found that the captain had written in it, "Mate drunk to-day."

The mate expostulated with the captain, saying, "What is the use of putting that down?"

The captain said: "It happened. Why shouldn't I write it down?"

The next day the mate wrote in the log, in which afterward the captain found the

"You see," the book worm said, "there are three kinds of poets—real poets, magazine poets and Rudyard Kipling. The real poets write Edgar Allen poetry; the magazine poets write magazine poetry, and Kipling writes apropos poetry."

"Certainly not," said the worm, proudly, "I invented the word myself. Apropos poetry is the kind that is apropos."—Leslie's Monthly.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Helen J. Unsell, Frankford, Mo.: "I would like to join the Av. S., but am afraid I might forget the rules." (Coward!) "Like Ruth Day, I study at home with mamma for teacher. I have no brothers or sisters to go to school with me, and as the schoolhouse is a mile and a half away, my parents are afraid for me to go alone." (And I think they are right). "I am acquainted with one of your members, Alta Tucker, of Frankford; she is a nice girl. Mabel Bush, I have taken that trip you spoke of. Papa, mamma, a party of uncles and aunts and I boarded the steamer Quincy at Louisiana, Mo., and when we reached Hannibal, a party of friends came aboard. Then we sailed up the river" (Sailed?) "till we reached St. Paul, Minn. There was dancing in the cabin every night. When it grew dark and our boat passed others all lighted up, it was a beautiful sight. One night we passed the excursion boat J. S. I close with best wishes."

Margaret E. Burner, Benton, Ill.: "I am not old enough to join the Av. S., but mamma reads the letters to me. She says I may send this quarter for the Av. S. orphan fund. I will soon be old enough to belong to the society." (Do hurry up! This quarter brings the fund up to $26.50.)

Willard W. Jones, Jacksonville, Mo.: "I have read or heard read 'With the Children,' and enjoyed the stories and letters so much. I want to help a little to support the orphan, and inclose 25 cents. I have 2 brothers and 3 sisters, all older than myself. One sister lives in California; she is coming home to spend Christmas. I have 3 little nephews and one niece. I am 9. I am an associate member of the Endeavor. Put me on the Av. S. roll." (The other day Mary B. Chastain stopped in on her way to school—she's the girl that lives on the other side of the church from me—I am next to the church—and we have just put down a new granitoid pavement all around it—you ought to see it—and walk on it, it will be fun when it is coated with ice—it's cold enough for ice to-day—Margaret Burner said she was sitting by her fire when she wrote her letter; so am I—Well, Mary B. stopped only about as long as this sentence; she gave me a quarter for our orphan. And a few days later Bro. Geo. W. Dawson drove up to the gate; he didn't come to take me driving, but to give me $1.00 for the orphan. Total, $27.50—isn't that right? I felt pretty proud to get $1.25 from people living right here in Plattsburg, because, you know, they say a prophet hasn't much honor in his own town, at least if he lives in Missouri. Maybe I'm not a prophet. Lots of these Plattsburg people know about our trying to have an orphan supported by little children, and I'm beginning to feel sorry for some of them; they're trying to avoid meeting me on the street. But I'm not going to ask for their money. If there ever was an orphan raised with money that was just given because the people wanted to give, and not because they were badgered about it, that orphan will be the Av. S. Orphan. So nobody need tuck their heads when they see me coming; I'm not going to do anything to them. Now, I see I made a mistake up above; should have said $28.00; you can't be too careful.)

Jessie V. Underwood, Boyd, Ore.: "I have begun the Av. S. rules again. My poetry is from 'Evangeline,' history from 'Life of President Garfield.' I read a chapter in the Bible every day. On the 12th we had a big snowstorm, but I went to school anyway. Last night it snowed again and a sleet fell all to-day and made a fine crust on the snow." (If it was just on our granitoid pavement!) "At school, at noon, the boys chose sides and we had a fine snowball-fight. After that, the boys who live near the school got their bob-sled, and we coasted the rest of the playtime. I like to play in the snow when there's no wind and I have plenty of warm wraps. When the snow gets deeper, come and take a sleighride with me, and then get upset." (When I buy my new fur cloak with nine tails, I'll be there.) "I'll write again if you want me to." (If I want you to! What do you take me for? Of course I want you to! She sends 25 cents; $28.25.)

Harry Buckley, Lawrenceburg, Ky.: "I heartily agree with you when you say, 'It would be much nicer to support an orphan in this country.' So I'll go another dollar for the United States orphan, hoping it will be a little girl—a sweet little girl. It would be fun to let the Av. S. name it—vote on it as they did on the colors. Let us all pray for our orphan." (There are a hundred cents to the dollar in that kind of a prayer. Good for you, Harry; come again!)

Here are two of our oldest and dearest Av. S. friends: Gerald Dever and Mrs. Dever, Fort Worth, Tex.: "We are much interested in the missionary work of the Av. S. We add our small sum. Why could not each member give one dollar? Our missionary society keeps an orphan, and we have the largest Sunday-school in the city (the Tabernacle). We have been having the red and blue rally; last Sunday the attendance was 1,029. The Blues came out over 400 ahead, and will be given a banquet by the Reds Friday night. There are 100 in my class. Our Sunday-school is stirring the whole city. We inclose two dollars for the orphan." (Never could understand what becomes of those rally people when the rally's over. Total, $31.50. Who said we'd never reach thirty dollars? Ha, ha!)

Flossie Davis, Des Moines, Ia.: "Inclosed find 25 cents for the orphan; I would like to send more, but can't at present." (In that case a quarter means just as much to you as a thousand-dollar bill would to—well, to me, for instance.) "I'll warrant your Felix can't play the piano." (I don't warrant Felix for anything but yowling around the door in cold weather.) "Now, my cat can." (Name, please?) "One night when I was gone, mamma was in the dining-room and heard the piano going." (Perhaps if you had stayed at home it wouldn't have wanted to go. Mine knows better than to move from where I put it.)

"She went in to see who it could be, and lo, and behold! there sat the cat, spitting the keys. He is the smartest cat I ever saw" (but you never saw F.) "and he is quite vain; he likes to look at himself in the glass." (If my cat could see himself in the glass, as others see him—for these days he has taken an absurd liking to sleep in the coalpile and comes out every morning so black you hardly know he's yellow—I think he would lose his purr.) "I am reading straight through the Bible. I started the New Testament several times, but quit when I got to Luke." (Afraid of doctors?) "I think the Av. S. a good thing, for I know I would neglect reading the Bible if it were not for that." (It's hearing something like that that makes a person feel paid for lots of trouble. My head is so full of things I want to tell you, I can't hardly walk in it; but you see for yourself that our space is up. Remember we're trying to raise $50 for Little Joe. Prizes for the best letter of 1903, and the 4 best 1903 Av. S. reports, will be announced in January. I offer the same prizes for 1904, namely, "Red Box Clew" for the most interesting letter, "Adnah" for the 4 best kept consecutive Av. S. reports. I hope nobody will forget that Christmas is coming.)

DOES NATURE DECLARE THE SOUL IMMORTAL?

By F. E. Billington.

The choice of nature as our book of revelation for this evening does not signify a belief that the Bible is untrue or fallible. I believe that it is both true and infallible—the very Word of God. But there are some who reject the Bible as God's word. It is for the sake of such that the choice has been made.

Through nature God is speaking to us. Let us listen to her teaching concerning the immortality of the soul.

The existence of the soul needs no proof. I doubt the possibility of such a proof. It evades the sense of taste, of touch and of smell. No man ever saw a soul, yet no one doubts its existence or power.

Science tells us that "Nothing can move without contact with some substantial force." What, then, is the substantial force that acts upon the cells of the brain, and that controls the whole body of man? What is it that differentiates man from the animal creation beneath him? It is the soul which Drummond calls "a Living Organism," the ego, the inner living, conscious self, the breath of the Almighty.

The Bible gives no uncertain sound concerning the future of the soul, but what does nature teach us?

Our very conception of God is sufficient proof that the soul may exist apart from the body. All humanity looks upon God as Spirit—omnipresent, omniscient, eternal. If nature does not teach the future existence of the soul, why is the belief so prevalent? This belief is indeed not confined to those who read the Bible. It may be in the "happy hunting ground" of the Indian, the "Valhalla" of the Viking, the "Nirvana" of the Brahman, the "Heaven" of the saint or the Gehenna of the wicked; but somewhere, all believe that the soul of man shall dwell forever.

The first evidence that I shall bring you of the soul's future existence is its substantial nature. Science teaches us that substance can not be annihilated. Ages ago, perhaps a hundred thousands years, a seed was dropped upon the earth. It grew to be a tree, but a change of the earth's surface placed it where the sea covered it with sand, and later the volcano covered the sand with its liquid flood of melted rock. Beneath this weight of stone and silt the tree lay for ages. Year after year wrought its change until the entire tree became one piece of shining coal. The miner takes it from its hiding, and then it is taken to the gas plant and thrown into the great furnace and burned. Has the coal by this process been annihilated? I think not. Instead of coal we have coke, coal-tar, gas for our lights and some three to five hundred thousand compounds of hydrogen and carbon. The form of the substance has been changed, but all the elements of the tree and the coal still exist, though in different relations.

Now if the piece of dead coal can not be annihilated, much less can that "living organism" called the soul. It must exist throughout eternity. But existence is not life in its fullness, neither is eternal existence a synonym with eternal life.

Drummond has said that "eternal life is uninterrupted correspondence with a perfect environment." But where on the earth is such an environment? It can not be found. If it could be, what soul would have such correspondence? This environment is none else than the God of heaven, and eternal life is to have eternal fellowship with Him. Compare with this the words of Jesus when he said: "This is life eternal, that they may know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

A second evidence of the soul's future existence or life may be found in man's capacity for progress. Read the development of the mind in the discoveries and inventions of the last few years and then predict, if you can, the future. This present life is far too short for the soul of man to reach the limit of its capacity, and even if it were not, the body is in the way of such progress. Even a Newton, when he had sought out so many of nature's truths and laws, likened himself to a child playing with the pebbles on the shore, while the great ocean of truth lay undiscovered before him. Will the Creator, who has given to the soul such limitless fields and capacities, not sometime and somewhere satisfy its cravings? It cannot be otherwise.

Turning now to the incompleteness of the present moral government, may we not find a third proof of the soul's immortality? The law of sowing and reaping is a fixed principle of nature, but how seldom is it satisfied among men. Righteousness unrewarded and transgression unpunished! Error and sin on the throne and truth and piety in the dust! Surely there must be a time and place when and where the inequalities of this present world shall be made equal and the wrongs of earth made right. If nature does not touch such a truth, why is the belief in rewards and punishment so fixed in all the world? Sin can not go unpunished forever nor righteousness unrewarded.

Shall we look for other proofs of a future life? We may find it in the probational element in the life that we are now living. How truly indeed has another said, "The child is father of the man." If the child is a prophecy, may not our whole earth life be such? We are here fitting ourselves for eternal habitations. Here we are but children. There must be provision for the unfolding of the plant into the life-rose with its perfume and beauty, or the noxious, deadly weed, in preparation for the Judge's sentence, "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still," and "He that is righteous, let him be righteous still." The destiny of the soul is determined by its earthly probation.

Why has God made the earth and furnished it so lavishly? Man is the goal of creation, and his happiness and comfort the heaven's supreme pleasure. Shall God, who has wrought with so much care to provide for the wants of the soul, wantonly blot it out forever and ever?

Now as a last proof of this element of the human soul, let us notice its capacity for fellowship with God himself. It is the nature of man to be religious. His thoughts turn to God as the sparks fly upward. There is no race of people without religion; no people that does not call to heaven for help, protection and consolation. In many cases the worship is crude indeed, and sometimes revolting to the Christian conscience, but still the element of worship is there, and a longing of the soul for a fellowship which it is certainly not the purpose of God to disappoint.

Do I hear you say this is a mystery, this question of immortality? It is no more such than the life we now live, than nature all about us. Who can tell how the food we eat becomes flesh and bone and blood? Who can explain how the sap rises in the tree and carries life to its smallest twig? Or who can tell how from the same food one animal grows wool, another hair and another feathers? This is all mystery, but no one questions the facts. "Now we see through a glass darkly." May we not find in nature a figure of this mystery of life? On yonder twig I see a ring of semi-transparent material. It is a ring of eggs laid by an insect. When the sunny days of spring come, these eggs will burst out with life and the twig will be covered with worms. These disgusting and troublesome forms of life we call grubs. Watch one of them as it leaves the branch and makes its way to a safe retreat in some protected nook. Here it hangs its ugly form and enters the pupa or chrysalis state. After a few days or weeks the chrysalis breaks and out falls a sprawling, awkward bug, which soon develops into the most beautiful of butterflies. I can not, neither can you, understand this mystery that is wrought out before our eyes every day; but who can deny the reality?

This, to me, is a type of our own life and change. Now are we the despised grub; to-morrow, the "narrow house," the chrysalis, and then the unfolding of the soul into all the glory and splendor of the presence of God.

But how shall our feeble and corrupt bodies be preserved and remade when they have fallen into dust? The chemist can take the cup of precious metal, though defaced and containing impurities, and cast it into an acid and it disappears. He puts in another chemical and the silver or gold is thrown down—it reappears. He moulds it again and brings forth a perfect cup, a thing of beauty.

Now if the chemist of earth can deal thus with the vessel of silver or gold, can not the God of heaven, the great chemist of the universe, remould and glorify these vessels in which we live? Who is bold enough to deny God this power?

Friends, do you listen to nature's teachings? Do you hear the voice of heaven calling you and urging you to prepare for a home with God forever and ever and ever? That you may both listen and respond is my sincere prayer.

The Quiet Hour

Now away with worldly thoughts, domestic cares and business anxieties, while my soul rests awhile in the presence of God, and meditates on spiritual things.

The mark of a saint is not perfection, but consecration. A saint is not a man without faults, but a man who has given himself without reserve to God.—B. F. Westcott.

Heaven is your mark, Christ your way thither, the word the way to Christ, God's spirit the guide to both. When in this race impatience shall make you to tire, or ignorance to stray, or idleness or weakness to tumble, or willfulness to fall, may repentance raise you, faith quicken you, patience strengthen you, till perseverance bring you back to the mark.—Thomas Fuller.

What the religion of Christ desires of us is, not that we should alter the outward form of our life, but that we should infuse a new spirit into it, even the spirit of Christ. It is not that we should renounce the business or occupation or profession formerly ours, but that we should carry it on henceforth, realizing it to be a way in which God is with us, by which he is leading us, through which he will bring us to a promised heritage at the last.—Andrew Bruce Davidson.

Is it raining, little flower?
Be glad of rain!
Too much sun would wither thee;
'Twill shine again.
The sky is very black, 'tis true,
But just behind it shines the blue.

Art thou weary, tender heart?
Be glad of pain!
In sorrow sweetest things will grow,
As flowers in rain.
God watches; and thou wilt have sun
When clouds their perfect work have done.
—Lucy Larcom.

When the time has fully come for missionary work, even among the Gentiles, Paul is ready. When the time is ripe for the Reformation, Luther is ready. Behind all emergencies God sits and waits. His great right hand is full of men, and, when the hour strikes, he speaks to the crisis and says, "I have provided me a king." Men who do not know God, wonder at the opportune appearance of the right man at the right place, and just in the nick of time. It all comes naturally and inevitably in the order of Providence. When summer comes, the beasts of the field need shade trees to protect them from the heat of the sun. But the same sun that brings the necessity for shade, calls out the leaves to furnish it. There is purpose and unity in it all. The children of God never marvel at the meeting of the man and the occasion.—Charles R. Brown.

So I take my life as I find it, as a life full of grand advantages that are linked indissolubly to my noblest happiness and my everlasting safety. I believe that infinite love ordained it, and that, if I bow willingly, tractably and gladly to its discipline, my Father will take care of it.—J. G. Holland.

Father, give me such a sense of oneness with Thee, and of Thy constant and unflinching care, that I may, without fear or fretting, fulfill my appointed mission in life, trusting Thee completely for the results, here and hereafter!

An Electric Belt Free

Send Your Application At Once To The Physician's Institute.

They Will Send You Absolutely Free One of Their 100 Gauge Supreme Electric Belts, the Belt Which Has Made so Many Wonderful Cures—You Needn't Send Even a Postage Stamp, Just Your Name and Address.

Nine years ago the State of Illinois granted to the Physicians' Institute of Chicago a charter.

There was need of something above the ordinary method of treatment for chronic diseases, something more than any one specialist or any number of specialists acting independently could do, so the State itself, under the powers granted it by its general laws, gave the power to the Physicians' Institute to furnish to the sick such help as would make them well and strong.

Ever since its establishment this Institute has endeavored in every possible way to carry out the original purposes of its establishment under the beneficent laws of the State.

Five years ago the Physician's Institute, realizing the value of electricity in the treatment of certain phases of disease, created under the superintendence of its staff of specialists an electric belt, and this belt has been proved to be of great value as a curative agent. From time to time it has been improved until it reached that stage of perfection which warranted its present name of "Supreme."

This belt is the most effective of all agents in the cure of rheumatism, lumbago, lame back, nervous exhaustion, weakened or lost vital functions, varicocele, kidney disorders and many other complaints.

This "Supreme Electric Belt" is made in one grade only—100 gauge—there is no better electric belt made and no better belt can be made. Whenever in the opinion of our staff of specialists the wonderful curative and revitalizing forces of electricity will cure you we send you, free of all cost, one of these Supreme Electric Belts. It is not sent on trial, it is yours to keep forever without the payment of one cent. This generous offer may be withdrawn at any time, so you should write to-day for this free "Supreme Electric Belt" to the Physicians' Institute, at 1974 Unity Building, Chicago, Ill.

The Theme of a book on Sunday-school pedagogy entitled

Principles and Ideals for the Sunday School

By ERNEST D. BURTON and SHAILER MATHEWS

Such matters as the purpose of the Sunday-school, the Bible as a basis of authoritative teaching, the methods of teaching, the relation of the pastor to Sunday-school teachers, how to induce the pupil to study, the organization and administration of a graded school, the matter of examinations, and Sunday-school benevolence, are discussed.

Price of volume, $1.00; postpaid, $1.10. (Now ready.)

The ideas suggested by the authors of "Principles and Ideals for the Sunday School" has caused a wide-spread demand for a series of Constructive Bible Studies to fulfill the principles advocated in this book. To meet this demand the publishers have arranged for a series of text books embracing all of the departments from the Kindergarten to the advanced Bible classes. Send for a circular giving the complete details.

THE QUEEN OF SHEBA VISITS SOLOMON.—1 Kings 10:1-13.

Memory Verses: 1 Kings 10:6-9.

GOLDEN TEXT.—When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice.—Prov. 29:2.

Two Accounts.

For the account of Solomon's time of greatest prosperity and of his last years, read 1 Kings 9-11. The following are the principal topics:

Solomon as a builder (chapter 9).

Solomon's wisdom and wealth (chapter 10).

Solomon's sin (chapter 11).

A parallel account covering the same ground is given in 2 Chron. 8, 9, except that in Chronicles no mention is made of Solomon's degeneracy in his later years, his marrying many foreign women and taking hundreds of concubines and building "high places" for the worship of the heathen gods whom these foreign wives brought with them. The writer of the book of Chronicles was chiefly interested in the ceremonial side of religion. He tells in great detail of the temple furnishings and of the courses of priests for the service. Apparently he did not care to preserve to posterity the record of the degeneracy and idolatry of the very man who had set in motion the machinery of Israel's worship. It is to be noted, too, that the writer of Chronicles does not explicitly report the alliance with Egypt or Solomon's marriage with the daughter of the heathen king of Egypt. This Egyptian queen of Israel is mentioned in Chronicles only in connection with the statement that Solomon brought her out of the city of David into a house which he had built for her so that her heathen presence might not pollute the place which had been made holy by the presence of the ark (2 Chron. 8:11). The writer of Kings mentions the fact of her removal to her own house, but does not suggest this reason for it (1 Kings 9:24).

Comparing the two narratives, it is clear that one (Chronicles) is written from the point of view of the priests, dwelling on the details of the levitical system and questions of ceremonial purity and shunning, as far as possible, anything which would reflect discredit upon the great king who stood as the builder of the temple and the founder of the temple worship; while the other (Kings) views events from the point of view of the prophets, making more of righteousness than of ritual, and willing to record the sins even of the honored Solomon as a warning to future generations.

Solomon's Subjects.

Solomon's vast wealth was acquired partly from tribute sent in by the many kings who became his vassals, and partly from commerce. The conquests of David made Solomon the sovereign over a large territory. But this territory was not incorporated into the kingdom of Israel. The several local governments remained as before, and the kings of these little countries continued to rule. The only change was that they acknowledged the sovereignty of Solomon and paid tribute to him. He had no responsibility for the administration of their governments. They were simply a source of revenue. The wars of antiquity were quite generally motivated by just this sort of commercialism. Too often the rulers exploited their own people for their personal profit. But Solomon at least distinguished between the people of Israel and the heathen people who were in his power. In raising levies of workmen to carry out his splendid building projects, he took only the Amorites and Hittites and Perizzites and Hivites and Jebusites, but "of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bond-servants" (1 Kings 9:22). But even Israel had to bear heavy burdens to pay for all of Solomon's splendor. Rehoboam could not deny it when the people said, "Thy father [Solomon] made our yoke grievous."

Solomon as a Trader.

But in addition to this Solomon was a trader, a merchant-king. Doubtless it was from Hiram, king of Tyre, that Solomon learned the art of commerce in a large way. The Phœnicians, over whom Hiram ruled at Tyre, were the greatest merchants and mariners of the ancient world. With the forests of Lebanon behind them and the Mediterranean before them, they had both the materials and the incentives for ship-building. They had, too, a stern necessity for it, for their territory was too small to do more than furnish a point of departure and place of return for their expeditions. From them Solomon learned to be a trader in distant lands. "For the king had at sea a navy of Tarshish with the navy of Hiram. Once every three years came the navy of Tarshish, bringing gold and silver, ivory and apes and peacocks."

But Solomon had something to offer to the world which the Phœnicians had not. He had the wisdom of the Hebrew sage. This was a commodity which the world had not seen before. It caught the fancy of many peoples. The East dearly loves a proverb. An aphorism is sweet to its tongue. A riddle is a choice treasure. So it happened that the king's commercial transactions in distant lands were the means of carrying throughout the known world the fame of his wisdom.

A Royal Visitor.

From all quarters came the curious, attracted by the reports of the luxurious court and the wise king. Among them, and most notable of all, came the Queen of Sheba from far Arabia. The Arab, even above all other Orientals, admires the sort of wisdom for which Solomon was famous. Shrewd decisions of vexed questions (like the one in 1 Kings 3:16-28) are a delight to him, and gnomic utterances like Solomon's proverbs are his joy. Arabian literature is full of such things, and Solomon himself is one of their chief heroes. The stories of his exploits are elaborated into tales as marvelous as those of the Arabian Nights.

From such a people came the Queen of Sheba. She was not disappointed. Solomon's magnificence and wisdom were greater even than the report of them. So Solomon grew and prospered. But it was God who put into his heart all his wisdom and into his hand all his wealth. In his pride and power Solomon forgot this, and fell away into idolatry and sin. The kingdom was not taken from him. It was taken from his son. Thus often are our sins handed down to posterity. Every man owes it to the world to hand down his inheritance—of strength, character, capacity for service, culture—better than he received it. Solomon received a strong, rich, united and prosperous kingdom. He left a kingdom weakened by sin, corrupted by idolatry and by his own bad example, oppressed, dissatisfied and on the verge of revolt.

GIVE YOUR STOMACH

A NICE VACATION.

Don't Do it by Starving it Either—Let a Substitute Do the Work.

The old adage, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," applies just as well to the stomach, one of the most important organs of the human system, as it does to the man himself.

If your stomach is worn out and rebels against being further taxed beyond its limit, the only sensible thing you can do is to give it a rest. Employ a substitute for a short time and see if it will not more than repay you in results.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a willing and most efficient substitute. They themselves digest every bit of food in the stomach in just the same way that the stomach itself would, were it well. They contain all the essential elements that the gastric juice and other digestive fluids of the stomach contain and actually act just the same and do just the same work as the natural fluids would do, were the stomach well and sound. They, therefore, relieve the stomach, just as one workman relieves another, and permit it to rest and recuperate and regain its normal health and strength.

This "vacation" idea was suggested by the letter of a prominent lawyer in Chicago. Read what he says: "I was engaged in the most momentous undertaking of my life in bringing about the coalition of certain great interest that meant much to me as well as my clients. It was not the work of days, but of months. I was working night and day almost, when at a very critical time my stomach went clear back on me. The undue mental strain brought it about and hurried up what would have happened later on.

"What I ate I had to literally force down and that was a source of misery as I had a sour stomach much of the time. My head ached, I was sluggish and began to lose my ambition to carry out my undertaking. It looked pretty gloomy for me and I confided my plight to one of my clients. He had been cured by Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and at once went down to a drug store and brought a box up to the office.

"I had not taken a quarter of that box before I found that they would do all the work my stomach ever did; and as a rest or vacation was out of the question for me, I determined to give my stomach a vacation. I kept right on taking the tablets and braced up and went ahead with my work with renewed vigor, ate just as much as I ever did and carried out that undertaking to a successful issue. I feel that I have Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets to thank for saving me the handsomest fee I ever received as well as my reputation, and last but not least my stomach."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a box.

A VISION OF WORLD-WIDE PEACE.

—Isa 11:6-9.

None of our Lord's titles is more honorable than that of "Prince of Peace." He found a world of strife; he is making it a world of peace. He found hate ruling the hearts of men; he enthroned love in his own life and is making it the supreme force in the world. He found confusion; he is introducing order. He is overcoming evil by the power of truth. His dominion is expanding without bloodshed or violence, and of the increase of his kingdom there shall be no end.

There can be no proper and permanent peace on earth unless there is peace in the hearts of men. A rebellion may be put down by force. The flames of civil war may be quenched in blood. But that is not peace.

There cannot be peace in human society and in the commercial world until the men who make up society and who compose the commercial world are in their hearts at peace with each other. Martial law may be invoked to quiet disorder. Laws may be passed for the suppression of all undesirable demonstrations and for the regulation of the dealings between man and man. But peace cannot come in any real sense till men recognize that they are brothers.

The angels at the birth of Christ sang, "Peace on earth, good will among men." It was one announcement, not two. Peace on earth means good will among men. Good will on earth is the necessary condition of peace on earth.

How does Christ bring peace to men? Is it by taking away all of their troubles? Certainly not. The best of his followers sometimes have troubles which seem to be almost crushing. But he gives them strength and grace to bear their troubles and spiritual vision to see the sun beyond the clouds.

How does Christ bring peace to men who are struggling with each other in the bitter rivalries of business and society? Not by removing them from the field of action. Not by stopping the wheels of commerce. But by taking away from their hearts the spirit of selfishness, which is the root of bitterness and the source of all strife.

The Christmas season speaks to us of divine love clothing itself in human form and manifesting itself in human life. But not through Christ alone should the love of God be manifested to the world. God has created us in His own image, and Christ has re-created us by the restoration of our broken and marred images of God.

Every disciple of Christ ought to be, in some measure, an incarnation of God, a revelation of God to the world. To those who become so, a life of peace is assured. Troubles cannot vex them nor worldly strife disturb the serenity of their souls. Theirs is not the peace of stagnation, but of strong and effective activity.

Never was there a life more beset with external disturbances and vexations than the life of Jesus. Enemies beset him. Spies dogged his footsteps. A traitor in his own chosen band betrayed him. A frenzied mob, led by malicious enemies, put him to death. But for all that, never was a life more peaceful or a death more serene. Why? Because it was a life filled with good will toward men.

Let the Christmas season be a time for filling our hearts with good will toward all men. Fill them more than full, that they may overflow into other lives. So may the season be not merely an occasion for festivity and rejoicing—and it ought to be that—but also a time for renewing in our lives and in the world the well-springs of perpetual peace.

PENSIONING OUR VETERANS.—

Phil. 4:10-18; 1 Cor. 9:7-14.

(Ministerial Relief.)

Unless the churches give themselves to this loving ministry, we shall have an anomalous condition among us—a constantly increasing number of old men, who have spent their lives in the service of the churches, refused further employment, and left to eke out a living as best they can, or suffer for want of the actual necessities of life. The growth of interest in this cause, together with the increase of gifts for other benevolences, is one of the most hopeful signs of the times in our Israel.

I. The veterans do not murmur. Most of them can no doubt adopt the very language of Paul: "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content." They are not clamoring for a pension; they do not ask the dole of charity.

Their productive years have been spent in the ranks of the church militant. Salary was no attraction, any more than it was to the boys in blue and in gray. They gave their time, their talents, their all. And yet who has heard anywhere among them a chorus of complaint, or even a single murmur?

They were so quiet that their presence was scarcely suspected. They had to be discovered, and their urgent needs pressed upon the attention of a pre-occupied brotherhood, by one not of their number.

II. A generous maintenance is their right. No teaching of the Scripture is clearer. We do not have to stop and consider the claims of their cause. There cannot be any question as to the merit of Ministerial Relief for those who accept the Scriptures as their rule of faith and action. "If we sowed unto you spiritual things, is it a great matter if we reap your carnal things? If others partake of this right over you, do not we yet more?"

If the churches are slumbrous and indifferent, it ought to arouse them from their lethargy and neglect, to read, in the glowing words of holy writ, "Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel." The Lord has ordained it! "Why call ye me 'Lord,' 'Lord,' and do not the things that I say?"

III. The churches themselves are the greatest beneficiaries. Ingratitude mars the countenance and shrivels the character. But on the other hand, gratitude, justice, benevolence—these add a heavenly charm to the people that exercise them. Your gifts, although bestowed as a slight remuneration on the debt you owe, carry joy and gladness with them. You should see the faces of these veterans and their dependents, smiling through their tears. But "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

All virtue grows by exercise. If the veteran ministers could stand up, a mighty throng, and stretch out their trembling hands toward us, and show us the scars they have won in the combats of the Cross, and tell us with moving eloquence of their privations and penury, do you think we would not answer their appeal? And just as certainly, in answering it, in God's own time and way, we ourselves would be mightily blessed. "It blesses him that gives, and him that takes."

PRAYER.

Are we ungrateful or thoughtless of the welfare of the veterans of the Cross, O God? Forgive us, we beseech thee, and open among us the fountains of benevolence. Forbid that indifference and injustice should embitter the lives of these heroes; but grant unto us that gift above all others, a grateful heart. Comfort the forlorn and the helpless, and make them rich in the love and care of their brethren in Christ. Amen.

(Topic for Dec. 23, "Life's Marahs and Elims.—Ex. 15:22-27; Luke 19:37-42.)

Our Budget

—Christmas, so early?

—This is a premonition, that you may get ready for Christmas.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is in league with Santa Claus, in helping that benevolent old man to minister to the happiness of the people.

—If the paper seems to have grown to unusual size this week, it is to meet the exigencies of Christmas. We anticipate many such exigencies in the future.

—It is hardly necessary to hint to our readers the importance of handing a copy of the paper to a neighbor, who doesn't take it, or better still, send us his name that we may send him a sample copy. In this way you may co-operate with us.

—We are truly grateful for the kind words of appreciation we are receiving from so many of our readers. A few of these are printed elsewhere, and others will be printed from time to time as our space may permit, but we never take large space for these commendations, though we are very glad to receive them.

—The Hyde Park Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo., R. H. Fife, pastor, is to dedicate its handsome new building next Lord's day. The editor of this paper will be with them on the occasion.

—A. R. Adams has accepted a call to Fairfield, Ia., and is now on the field.

—The Board of Church Extension is in receipt of its 95th annuity gift in the amount of $100 from a friend in California.

—J. M. Rudy, of Sedalia, preached the union Thanksgiving sermon at that place on "The Providence of God and Our Country."

—J. T. Webb, who has been at Canton, Mo., called at this office last week on his way to Olney, Ill., where he is to take charge of the church.

—G. F. Assiter, of Wellsville, Mo., has accepted a call to the church at Martin's Ferry, O., where he expects to begin work by the end of the present month.

—E. S. Muckley, pastor of the Christian Church in Honolulu, H. I., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Christian Church, Portland, Ore., to begin Jan. 1.

—J. E. Sturdivant has been preaching for the church at Grove, Ind. Ter., where there is an organization but no building. An effort is being made to erect a house of worship.

—J. E. Stevens, who has held pastorates and evangelized in Kansas and Missouri and is now postmaster at Goodland, Kan., is being urged as a candidate for Congress in the sixth (Kansas) district.

—H. S. Earle, of Irvington, Ind., gives $500 to aid in the establishment of a Bible College in India. He was the first missionary of the Foreign Society. He was in its employ for seventeen years.

—Mrs. Allen T. Shaw filled the pulpit at Knightstown, Ind., last Lord's day in the absence of the pastor, who preached at the First Church of Peru. Many good things were said of her sermons, and a useful future predicted.

—Last week the Foreign Society received another gift of $500 on the Annuity Plan. This makes $7,500 during the month of November. F. M. Rains, Corresponding Secretary, Cincinnati, Ohio, will answer any questions concerning the plan.

—The semi-annual convention of the Whitman county (Wash.) co-operation is being held at Spokane, Wash., Dec. 5-13, in connection with the opening of the new building of the Central Christian Church of that city. B. E. Utz is pastor of this church.

—The American Christian Missionary Society has recently received $500 on the annuity plan, making $3,950 since the beginning of the new missionary year. For particulars on the annuity plan, write for booklet to Benjamin L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

ELECTRO LIGHT & CO., N.Y.

—The Seventh Street Church, Richmond, Va., is to be congratulated on securing one of our very ablest preachers in the person of J. J. Haley, of Cynthiana, Ky., while the church at the latter place is no less fortunate in securing as his successor W. E. Ellis, of Nashville, Tenn.

—R. A. Eubank, Sr., a venerable devout Disciple of Missouri, has just given our National Benevolent Association $2,500 on the annuity plan. Geo. L. Snively, 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, will promptly answer all inquiries concerning all methods of helping the helpless hundreds dependent on this society.

—J. T. Ogle wishes us to correct the statement in a recent issue that he had resigned at Guthrie, Okla. The work is prosperous and he has not resigned. We are glad to be able to make this correction, and hope it will be long before the former statement can be repeated with truth.

—J. J. Haley has resigned at Cynthiana, Ky., after nine years, and will go to the Seventh St. Church, Richmond, Va., beginning there Jan. 1. We are sure that not without a wrench will he be able to sever his relations with the church at Cynthiana, where he is so well known and loved.

—Last week the Board of Church Extension received $500 on the annuity plan from a friend in Texas. This is the ninety fifth gift to the annuity fund. The board pays six per cent to all persons who are 50 years old or more. For information concerning the fund, address G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—The Christian Endeavor Society at Braytown, where Willis M. Cunningham ministers once a month, last Sunday night after studying the conditions, needs and missions in India, decided to educate a child there for a native helper and preacher. Brother and Sister Mains will go from the society to Lexington Bible College, Jan. 1, 1904, to prepare for the ministry.

—The Old People's Home Board has planned a treat for the old ladies in the form of a Christmas tree. Perhaps there are those who would like to send tokens to these eleven old sisters at this glad season; if so, just send them to me before Wednesday, Dec. 23, and they will be placed on the tree.

"ETHEL D. HAYDEN, Cor. Sec."
344 W. College Ave., Jacksonville, Ill.

—The pretty little church at Smithville, Tex., was dedicated on Sunday, Nov. 29. Mr. Chalmers McPherson, of Waxahachie, delivered the dedicatory address, after which an offering of $524 was made. The church stands as a monument to the work that is being done at home through the Board of Church Extension. The property valuation is about $3,600. Ernest J. Bradley is the minister in charge at Smithville.

—S. W. Crutcher reports a pleasant and profitable year at Lamar, Mo. There have been 35 additions at regular services, 15 by baptism. He has been unanimously called for 1904 at increased salary. Work prospering. Brother Crutcher says there is a remarkable spirit of fraternity among the ministers of the town. No wonder; four of the seven are from Kentucky.

—Claude E. Hill, missionary under the American Christian Missionary Society at Mobile, Ala., writes as follows: "This has been our best month. Our audiences have been larger, and we report a goodly number of additions. Our accessions this month have all been first-class people. To-day I baptized five persons, four men and one woman. We are doing our very best. We have 69 in our Bible-school to-day, our highest number."

—Carl C. Davis, at work in St. Paul, Minn., under the American Christian Missionary Society, reports as follows: "Our Sunday-school attendance for November is as follows—49, 71, 93, 125, 122. At the rally program our basement was packed and the people delighted. Our regular services are not largely attended, yet we are getting a hold on a number of good people. We expect to hold a few weeks' meeting about February. I think our prospects are splendid."

—The preachers of the four churches of Christ in Columbus are very anxious to learn the names and addresses of all disciples coming to the city. There are believed to be several hundred now in Columbus not identified with any one of the four congregations. Will any one knowing of such, please send names and addresses, if known, to the undersigned? Also any students in the State University, the medical and law schools, and other institutions.—WALTER SCOTT PRIEST, Minister Central Church of Christ, Cor. 3rd & Gay Sts.

—W. W. Pew, who is now at Oroville, Calif., writes enthusiastically of that region as a garden spot even in that land of gardens, rich in gold, fruits and grain. He says: "My purpose is to call the attention of members of the Church of Christ who are coming west to this part of California so rich in natural resources. We found 23 members here struggling along without a dollar's worth of church property and making no apparent progress. We cast in our lot with them to try to establish a permanent work. They agreed to sustain us as best they could, but we need more help, and must have it. Will not some of you come this way, and cast in your lot with us and help to win a victory for Christ? If you cannot come yourself and have dollars to help build churches with, send some of them here and you will receive proper credit by the church and by the Lord. I will take pleasure in answering all proper inquiries concerning the place and the work here."

—M. W. Yocom, of Greenwood, Ind., writes: "After two years of happy work with the church here, I am closing my pastorate and will begin work with Martinsville, Ind., Jan. 1. I will spend December in a meeting with the forces here. This is a splendid field, and the man who comes will find a wide-awake and devoted people. The work has made very satisfactory progress in the past two years, having built and paid for an elegant house of worship. Our only object in going is to have a larger field."

—T. W. Pinkerton, missionary under the American Christian Missionary Society at Salt Lake, Utah, sends in the following report: "I know that we are slowly gaining. More people are manifesting interest in us and in the cause for which we plead. Many people are attending our services who have never before been under our influence. All departments of our work are enlarging. This field is hard, but I have faith that we will win. We must have an auditorium. When this is secured, I feel that success will be assured."

—We had hoped to have in this issue a brief Christmas sermon by Bro. C. S. Medbury, but the time for writing found him in the midst of preparations for moving from Angola, Ind., to Des Moines, Ia. The selection of Brother Medbury to succeed I. N. McCash as pastor of the University Place Church at Des Moines, will be unanimously approved by those who know him. He is a young man, who knows young people and has a warm sympathy with them. He has a splendid opportunity to do a notable service by continuing the great work which has been done under the leadership of Brother McCash.

—In response to numerous requests the address of the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, at the last Congress of the Disciples of Christ, at Des Moines, on "Church Federation: What Is It? And What Should Be Our Attitude Towards It?" has been printed in a very neat pamphlet, embracing, also, the letter of the author to Dr. E. B. Sanford, asking certain questions on the subject, and the latter's answers thereto. The question is still being agitated in many states, and it is believed that this address may aid the brethren in reaching substantial unity of thought on the subject, as it did in the Congress where it was first delivered. Price 15 cents per copy, postage prepaid.

—Your recent suggestion of a "Manual of Family Worship," is, in my judgment, the wisest and most timely thus far in the new century. It will greatly increase the number of family altars and enrich the home worship. By all means prepare it. I will undertake to put one in every home in my church.

R. H. INGRAM.

We have received a great many requests for the kind of work mentioned above. We are sure there is and will be a wide demand for such a manual, and shall begin at once the preliminary preparation for such a work. It will take considerable time to produce a book that will possess any permanent value. Meanwhile any suggestions concerning it will be carefully considered.

—We are in receipt of the fifteenth annual report of the Board of Church Extension, which contains 72 pages. This report is being mailed to all our preachers, who are engaged in active service. The report is a most interesting document. Illustrations are given of most of the 80 churches which have been helped this year to secure their church homes by the aid of this board. The report shows the best year's work in the history of the Board of Church Extension, that most useful organization in the permanent establishment of our work. A copy will be sent to any person who will notify the corresponding secretary, G. W. Muckley, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I have learned from various sources that R. E. Stanley, who was for a little while at Hope, Ark., is displaying a letter claimed to be a letter of commendation from me. I never wrote him but one letter, and that letter abounded principally in admonition to take careful "heed to himself" lest he fall again, with the hope and prayer expressed that he would be faithful. I regarded it then a risk, and a misfortune that any church had employed him, but was anxious that he should prove worthy. This letter was in response to a letter from him containing many emphatic protestations or good intentions and of repentance. How a letter of introduction or of commendation could ever have been manufactured out of anything written by me, I am utterly at a loss to conjecture. I write this only in the interest of the cause of Christ, and the protection of the churches. Pacific Christian please copy.—E. C. BROWNING, Little Rock, Ark., Dec. 1.

—J. P. McKnight, who recently left Oskaloosa, Ia., to seek a warmer climate for his wife's health, writes from San Diego, Calif., that Mrs. McKnight stood the long trip well, though she is still very weak. Speaking of his farewell to Oskaloosa, Bro. McKnight says: "My last Sunday at Oskaloosa was a great day. Both services were largely attended. At the evening service several of the nearby churches dismissed their services and came to ours. The people could not all be accommodated, of course, but we had a fine service. Fourteen were added during the day. We met the next night to baptize, and at the invitation there were eight more confessions. So we met Tuesday night, and there were four more confessions, making 26 in all, 24 of them were by confession. The church presented us with a purse of $50, as a mark of their love and fellowship. I find we have a very good church here [San Diego]. Brother Crabtree is doing a fine work. He is now in a meeting at Riverside. It was my pleasure to preach for him last Sunday night. I will preach again next Sunday for him."

—During the week of December 13 to 18, Dr. H. L. Willett will be at Liberty, Mo., in a series of lectures. The general topic will be, "Book Studies in the Bible." Following is the program:

Sunday, Dec. 13, "Genesis, the Book of Beginnings."

Monday, Dec. 14, "Isaiah, the Message of Prophecy."

Tuesday, Dec. 15, "Psalms, the National Hymnology."

Wednesday, Dec. 16, "The Synoptic Gospels."

Thursday, Dec. 17, "The Book of Acts."

Friday, Dec. 18, "The Epistles of Paul: Philippians."

Robert Graham Frank, pastor, in the name of the church, invites all who can to attend these lectures. The church will entertain those who will come, if names are sent at once to Bro. Frank.

—R. H. Ingram, of Creston, Ia., writes: "By the kindness of this church, wife and I recently made a short visit in Jewell county, Kansas. Here we met the writer's brother and two sisters—all that remain of a family of ten. We preached ten days for the church in Burr Oak with a fine interest and seven added by letter and statement. Jewell county has six churches and not one preacher. It is ripe for the harvester, but not a reaper. Preachers who can live on six or seven hundred a year can find ready employment. Write to me. Returning, Mrs. Ingram spent a few days with relatives in Jewell City, and a week in our old field of labor, Beatrice, Neb. The church here has extended a call for an indefinite period, and we enter on our third year on Dec. 6."

Helps in Systematic Bible Studies.

During the past few years there has been a growing interest in systematic Bible study, and the plans outlined in a number of recent books advocating betterments in Sunday-school methods, have created a keen demand for text books as a basis for more satisfactory work. The manual by Professors Burton and Mathews of the University of Chicago, entitled, "Principles and Ideals for the Sunday-school" (The University of Chicago Press), published a few months ago, has materially strengthened this demand, and led the publishers to consider means of supplying a series of helps for Bible study.

Plans are now being made for the completion of the series of Constructive Bible Studies (The University of Chicago Press), first announced several years ago. In its ultimate scope the plan will furnish Bible Studies suited to all grades of students, including volumes of a more advanced character adapted to the needs of adult classes and of students in colleges and theological schools. The scheme includes five series of books under the general title, Constructive Bible Studies, as follows: Kindergarten, elementary, secondary, academy and college, university. The supervising editors are President William R. Harper and Professor Ernest D. Burton. Two volumes have already been published. These are, one volume in the University Series entitled, "The Priestly Element in the Old Testament," by President William R. Harper, and one in the Academy and College Series entitled, "The Life of Christ," by Professors Burton and Mathews.

For publication early in 1904, is announced a volume in the Secondary Series entitled, "The Gospel of Mark," by Professor Ernest D. Burton.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Arkansas.

The Arkansas field has been and is yet greatly in need of preachers to do regular and steady work with churches. We are glad to welcome some new workers to our state. Bro. J. A. Arnold brought his invalid wife from Texas to her home in Arkansas, where she recently died. Our sympathy has been with Brother Arnold in his trouble and bereavement. He has lost several months' work during his wife's illness, but we trust he may be profitably employed soon in our state. He recently made a visit to the church at Newport.

Bro. D. T. Stanley, who recently held a very successful meeting at Okolona, enlisting 33 young men and women in the Master's service, is now in a series of meetings at Van Buren. He is a very faithful and able worker.

A Brother Edmonson, from Kentucky, passed through Little Rock last week, to visit Hope. I did not meet him. We need several preachers who can live on from four to eight hundred dollars per year, and possess staying qualities.

Brother Brooks, of Bald Knob, will transfer his work to the south of Little Rock, probably residing at Arkadelphia. Brother Brooks has done some good work, both at mission points and for more able churches.

A course of Bible lectures is now being conducted at the State University, Fayetteville, by H. L. Willett. We trust this is only the beginning of a larger educational work in Arkansas.

The corresponding secretary has just returned from Biggers, Ark. A new town in the northeast part of the state, where a church building is just being finished, it being the only house of worship in the town. I found there an enrollment of five, and left them with a membership of about twenty, and helped them to place their building enterprise on a safe basis.

There was never more favorable opportunities to use money to advantage in the Arkansas field. The mission work is in a very favorable condition if we can only support it. One of the best Christmas gifts a prosperous brother could make, would be to place a hundred dollars where it will probably bring thirty souls to Christ, and enable one man to remain in a field that would otherwise have to be without preaching, and possibly result in the building of a house of worship. It would be a small gift compared with His gift to us.

E. C. BROWNING.

Michigan.

I am pleased to note the special attention that is being given to religion in the home by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It has long been my impression that a failure to maintain family worship and systematic Bible instruction, is the greatest weakness of the religious world. We will never have religion in the church, in business, in politics or in society, until we have religion in the home. The home is the fountain out of which flows life into the various channels of activity. The character of that life is largely determined by the character of the home influences. Let us have Christian homes.

R. Bruce Brown has been looking up scattered Disciples in Gladwin county, and recently preached near Beaverton, where we have a few families. His message brought gladness to the hearts of those who had long been deprived of church privileges.

H. L. Maltman has accepted a call to Bloomingdale. Bloomingdale is fortunate in securing so good a man, and we shall expect good reports from that field.

F. T. Porter began a meeting at Cowden Lake, Nov. 29. Cowden Lake and Pierson are without regular preaching.

W. B. Taylor preaches every two weeks on Lord's day afternoon at Muir. The church at that point is planning for larger things in the future.

The work at St. Louis is prospering under the efficient leadership of J. C. Meese. A number of baptisms are reported at that place recently.

Some good preachers have located in Michigan in the last few weeks, and still there is room for more.

C. M. KEENE.

Cascade, Mich.

Florida.

S. B. Moore, Atlanta, Ga., recently closed a meeting at Ocala, where Brother Hanna preaches.

Brother Frost, minister at De Land, is able to preach again after a long illness. F. J. Longdon and wife are expected to return soon and he will resume his work as state evangelist. They have been in Pennsylvania all summer and fall seeking rest and health.

T. A. Cox, of Princeton, Ind., has been called by the state mission board to be state evangelist. He will begin work the first Sunday in December.

J. P. Rowilson, Macon, Ga., has accepted the work at Tampa. This is a new work, but promising. The A. C. M. S. has it under its wing.

Samuel J. White, who ministers at Hampton and Lake Butler, recently took unto himself a wife, the writer tying the knot.

Next Sunday closes the writer's fifth year's service with the First Church, Jacksonville.

J. T. BOONE.

Jacksonville, Fla.

Tennessee.

Perhaps the greatest sin of the Disciples of Christ is to be found in the unused or misused resources and forces. This should not obscure or minimize the excellency of the message with which the church has been intrusted. It is rather an argument for the worthiness of the plea. For Christianity could scarcely have survived this waste of the resources it has created and the forces it has a right to employ for its own extension. By its own inherent vitality it lives, grows, and conquers in spite of this waste and the unworthiness of some of its disciples.

It is the judgment of the writer that only about twenty-five per cent of the forces which the Disciples of Christ control, and which they hold in trust for the enlargement of the kingdom of God directly, are used for this purpose. Three quarters of a million for benevolences seems a large sum to those who look only at the history of the development of our offerings. But to those who consider the scope and content of our message to man and the wealth, culture and number of those who desire to be Christians only, this sum serves to reveal the vast unused resources which might be employed in the service of our Lord. This fact is peculiarly true in Tennessee. It may be equally true in states with which your correspondent is not quite so familiar. Of this we must not complain, however much it may be regretted. To those of us who know the fact, it is a challenge to greater fidelity. And this fidelity brings its own precious reward in seeing the number of heroic and liberal souls increased—especially in the heroism and hopefulness of our ministry. It is said that large bodies do not move speedily, but may it not also be true that small bodies must be content to move patiently, but with assured hope? The latter is pre-eminently true of our aggressive forces in Tennessee. We are not a large, but an heroic band, constantly winning new territory for our Lord. To indicate this fact, it may be mentioned that since our annual convention in October, the writer has dedicated the house of worship at Cardiff; organized a congregation of nearly a hundred members at Bristol; and a church of twenty at Briceville. He held two brief meetings in those places. Several hundred dollars were secured for buildings and lots. W. P. Crouch became the minister of the church at Bristol. E. C. Wilson will temporarily supply at Briceville. Besides this, one thousand dollars and more have been promised to our permanent fund. Well, we are moving but not rapidly. We are blessed by having three of our energetic ministers returning to our state—Bowewell, Crouch, and Crystal. The latter locates at Tullahoma. Among other ministerial changes we may note the removal of J. E. Stuart from Jackson to Harriman. He has a unanimous call to the church he left four years ago. Jackson is to be supplied temporarily by a new man, V. R. Smith, of Memphis. The work in Jackson is in a growing and healthy condition.

Meetings have been held by J. E. Stuart at Gleason; Robt. Stewart at Mississippi Ave., Memphis; W. E. Ellis at Harriman; A. A. Ferguson at Rockwood; Ira Boswell at Chattanooga; R. P. Meeks at Adamsville.

One of the hopeful facts in our religious advancement is the marriage of a preacher. Joseph Armistead, the talented minister at Woodland St., has taken unto himself a wife, and the congregation has received her most heartily. They expect his efficiency to be increased.

The missionary work of the state enters upon the new year most hopefully, having a nice balance in its treasury. Its friends are multiplying yearly. The missionary preachers are working heroically with one accord, and greater results may be confidently expected the coming year. The Lord has been good to us, whereof we are glad.

Nashville, Tenn.

A. I. MYHR.

Texas.

J. W. Gates has resigned the pastorate at Eagle Lake, and the church there is desirous of securing some one as his successor. A young man is preferred who is active in visiting and forming acquaintances. A man who is willing to commence on a moderate salary and labor for the upbuilding of the church and for the increase of his salary. Address W. H. Rather, Eagle Lake, Texas.

H. J. Dudley has resigned the pastorate of the church in Beaumont, to take effect Jan. 1, 1904. Beaumont is a city of 25,000 population, —a thriving city, full of business and enterprise, and a live, active preacher would do a fine work there. The church has a membership of about 75, who are in line with all aggressive work, and will co-operate with the pastor in all his efforts to build up the cause. Address H. J. Dudley, Beaumont, Texas.

B. F. Wilson has resigned the pastorate at Roswell, New Mexico, and is now in Texas, and we hope some church will seize this opportunity of securing a good pastor, and a fine preacher. Brother Wilson has had a taste of the Sabine waters, and like others drinking of these waters, he went away from Texas, and repenting of his sin (?) he has returned, confessing his waywardness, and with open arms, "seeing him a long way off," we welcome him back.

Homer T. Wilson, the efficient and popular pastor of the church at San Antonio, writes that he has been "bottled up" since the quarantine went on against his city, but that the sale of his book, "Sparks from the Anvil," is on the increase, and that the church is still growing in numerical strength and spiritual power. But these things are not surprising to those who know him.

The church at Austin, under the faithful and efficient ministration of Dr. J. W. Lowber, is gradually reducing her indebtedness, and is growing in strength all the while. Dr. Lowber is an optimist and always looks on the bright and beautiful side of things and sees the lovely traits of character in his fellow man. He is a happy man, and succeeds in making those with whom he comes in contact happy, too. A lovable trait of character!

The mission work of Texas is meeting with splendid success under the leadership of J. C. Mason as corresponding secretary, and it is believed that the year closing June 1, 1904, will mark our greatest success, and for which we are praying and working.

The brethren and sisters composing the church at Midland are talking of building a new church house commensurate with the demands of their thriving little city and the numerical strength of the church, and I am pretty sure that the new church house will materialize in the near future. Volney Johnston is the pastor of that splendid church, and he is in the habit of moving things where he goes. He is not only one of our best preachers, but one of the very best pastors also, and he understands how to take hold and how to manage—rather a rare combination, which makes him a valuable man.

Austin, Dec. 1.

B. B. SANDERS.

Washington State.

R. M. Messick is supplying at Colfax until January 1, when their new pastor will take charge of the work.

Neal Cheetham, who has been rendering such efficient service at Oakesdale and Rosalia, has led those churches to secure a pastor, and has returned to his home in Tacoma. Brother Cheetham is always welcomed in the First Church, where he is one of the elders.

Dr. J. M. Allen is preaching for the church at Cheney. Evangelist McConnell is reported as now holding a meeting there.

Dean Avenue Church, Spokane, is rejoicing in the splendid ministry of J. W. Allen. They have just received one of the best families from the church in Tacoma. The Spokane Central will open the auditorium of their fine new church Dec. 6. They will have one of the very best church buildings on the coast.

A ladies' aid society was organized at Oakesdale in October and they are doing good work.

The ladies' aid at Rosalia have over $100 in the fund for procuring new pews for the church.

Neal McCallum has secured a house in Tacoma and will move here about Dec. 1. He and his family will be a good addition to the Christian forces of the city. Bro. McCallum comes here that his children may have the advantage of our excellent schools and with the hope that his own health may be restored in the mild and even temperature of Puget Sound.

Sunday, Nov. 22, was a record-breaker in Tacoma church work; 21 additions to the First Church at regular services, and the largest audiences that I have had in this city. Every department of the church is prospering.

Tacoma.

MORTON L. ROSE.

Kentucky.

Joe Severance, Newtown, has been called to the Middlesborough church for 1904, and the secular papers indicate that he has accepted. Middlesborough needs a good man.

W. M. Baker, who has done a most successful work at Glasgow for several years, is reported to have accepted a call to Meridian, Miss. Sorry to give up Brother Baker and his excellent wife. He will do good wherever he is.

E. J. Willis was at Versailles on a recent Sunday, and on Dec. 6 Flournoy Payne preached there. Both are good men and either would be useful with the Versailles people.

Harvey B. Smith, who has preached here (Sulphur) for a number of years, has resigned and will probably go to Princeton for all his time. New Castle has had his services, a part of the time, and both churches regret to give him up.

Geo. W. Nutter, who has served the Millersburg church for several years successfully, has a number of calls for next year. Some of the most inviting are out of the state. We ought to keep him here. He belongs to Kentucky and we need him.

Geo. H. Farley has been preaching most acceptably at Burgin during the past year, and the church earnestly desires to retain him. They have called him for three Sundays and some congregation in reach of Burgin can get a good man for one Sunday by taking prompt action.

A. T. Felix, who has been preaching at Springfield during the past year, will remain there half his time and give the other half to Bardstown. Both are mission stations of the state board. Brother Felix is a fine young man and we hope for a good year's work in these important towns.

The Shelbyville meeting, in which J. J.

Haley helped for twelve days, was continued by H. D. C. MacLachlin for a week. At last report 52 had been added. By the way, Brother Haley is to go to Seventh Street Church, Richmond, Va. He has been very popular at Cynthiana for years and is a strong preacher.

J. J. Cole, the minister at Lebanon and Campbellsville, has married. His bride is a Corbin lady. Brother Cole expects to change his field the first of January and can be had by some church or group of churches in this state.

J. K. Osborne, our Harlan county evangelist, has suffered the loss of his eldest daughter. Her parents and husband will have the sympathy of a large circle of brethren and friends.

The Erlanger house will be dedicated in a few weeks. The house cost over $6,000 and Erlanger is one of our mission stations.

Ernest W. Elliott, Eminence, is at Athens, Ala., in a meeting. Have not heard what the results to date are.

The receipts from the November offering for Kentucky missions are just fifty per cent greater than those of last November. The gain is in increased offerings of contributing churches and in gifts from churches that did not send an offering last year. We have every reason to expect a substantial advance over the past successful year. We urge all our friends to remit promptly during December. We ought to make a new record in December receipts; we have made such for November. Prompt remittance from the congregations known to have taken the offering will insure this.

H. W. ELLIOTT.

Los Angeles Letter.

Three new churches have recently been organized in "our Italy." R. A. Hopper has started a new congregation at La Habra. A new church house is being erected at that center. We are the first on the ground. Cal. Ogburn has effected an organization at Ocean Park, a suburb of Santa Monica. J. R. Speck has enlisted a number of Disciples at Sawtelle, a village between Santa Monica and Los Angeles. He will minister to them till they are strong enough to employ a pastor.

J. P. McKnight, for several years the successful pastor at Oskaloosa, Ia., is in southern California for the health of his wife. It is hoped he may be located in one of our vacant churches.

J. M. Philput is in Los Angeles for a few days on his way to Phoenix, Ariz., where he will spend the winter recuperating his health. It is expected that he will be so charmed with this great southwestern portion of the United States that he will make his future home in these parts.

Grant K. Lewis, our general secretary for southern California, is assisting the Phoenix Church in a series of evangelistic meetings.

L. O. Newcomer, of Glendora, has recently held a meeting at Bisbee, Ariz., where an organization of the Disciples of the Master was effected. Brother Studley, who works in the mines, will minister to them till they are strong enough to support a pastor.

The churches at San Bernardino and Covina both have church houses in process of construction. It is expected that both houses will be finished and be ready for occupancy within a few weeks. They will add to the effectiveness of our congregations in both those places.

The First Church of this city will inaugurate a new work in the southeastern part of the city Jan. 1, 1904. A large, commodious and well located hall has been rented and money subscribed to support a pastor who will be put in the field, Jan. 1. The church owns a splendid lot upon which it is expected a building will be erected within the next year. This is a splendid locality, and it is hoped that there will be a prosperous church here within a short time.

The First Church is also engaged in the work of raising money for the purpose of securing a pipe organ for its auditorium. It is believed that this will be done in the next few months.

If you have any trouble with lamps—any trouble whatever—send for my Index.

I know of no lamp-disease that it does not cure immediately.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

W. E. Crabtree, of San Diego, is assisting the Redlands church in a series of evangelistic meetings. At last reports there were several accessions to the working forces of the Redlands church. This is a rapidly growing congregation. It has started a mission in a desirable suburb of that beautiful city.

Our work prospers in every direction. We thank God and take fresh courage and push onward.

Los Angeles, Cal.

A. C. SMITHER.

New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

While the work in these provinces does not show any startling progress, yet it plods along in the right direction and all the churches show a healthy spiritual life. Since we last reported, one church building has been dedicated to the Master's use under the auspices of the board, and as a result of the faithful and effective work of its evangelist, J. W. Robbins.

Less than five years ago the church at Nauwigewauk, comprising about eighteen members in all, decided that they would have a church building of their own, and with sturdy faith and independence they shouldered their axes, and went into the forest and cut the timber for the new church. From time to time when a day could be spared from the strenuous labor of the farms, they have sawed the lumber and framed the building, until now that it is completed, every rafter, joist and shingle speaks of loving Christian labor for the Master. They have asked no help from others and the house represents to them the labor of their own hand, and they love it the more on this account.

On November 22 it was dedicated, Brother Robbins preaching the sermon and leading the services, and two days later three were added by baptism to the membership. Further additions are expected.

These fruits of our labor encourage us to keep on hoping that at some time in God's future the larger results may come to us. We are away east here far from the heart of our movement, and get only faintly the benefit of its pulsation, but we glory in its vigor and gladly, though at times sadly, contribute to the numbers and brains of that movement.

We need all such so much at home in order that the radical and reasonable plea for Christian union may be strongly presented to our people.

We can see it coming with eye of faith only, in these provinces, and continue to hope, trust and work.

SOUTH PROSPECT FREED FROM DEBT: HOW IT WAS DONE.

The brethren who knew of the great struggle of this church against a mortgage will be glad to know that we are free from debt, and the first to fall in line with the Detroit resolution to pay all indebtedness on the churches before our centennial celebration.

As this was in many respects the best work I have seen done on a church-debt payment, I feel disposed to give some details of its special features, hoping it may be of benefit to some who are struggling against that most discouraging of all problems, an old church debt.

Fifteen months ago I came to South Prospect and found the congregation greatly discouraged. It was manifest that if a work be done in any way commensurate with the opportunities of the field the mortgage must be paid; to do this the congregation would have to be inspired and made to believe it could pay it, and then induced to do it. Along these lines I set to work.

The mortgage was $5,000, with about $500 floating indebtedness, including interest. We soon decided to pay off the latter, with $1,000 on the mortgage, and this was done last November. The Sunday the announcement was made that $1,000 had been paid, the congregation voted to pay the whole remaining mortgage of $4,000 the next November, i. e., the present month. At once we began planning and praying to that end. My desire was that each member have part in this fellowship, that all might rejoice together when it was accomplished, and this was kept constantly before the people with splendid results. All the year our motto was, "This one thing we do," pay off our church debt. To that motto we talked and prayed, both in public and private.

We soon began to enlist the separate organizations, securing the promises of a definite amount to be pledged on the first Sunday in October, the day on which the effort for pledges was to be made to the congregation. A number of individuals were also seen as to the amounts they would give. Prof. A. F. Smith was chosen to make the appeal for pledges and have general supervision of the whole work of raising the money, and he was to choose such helpers as he might need. Everything was in readiness when the time came to take the pledges. The ladies' aid pledged $500, Sunday-school, $400, C. E., $150, the young men's club, $100. Every dollar of these pledges was paid. Then individual pledges were taken that were so generous that we were all surprised and delighted.

The outside solicitation among the other congregations was the greatest task. South Side Church sent $60, West Side $40, and Hyde Park $25, thus relieving us of that work in these congregations. All the pledges above $100 were R. A. Long, $275, Dr. I. M. Ridge, $250, Judge Orear, $200, F. M. Lowe, $200, D. O. Smart, $100. During the entire campaign the cash collections in the Sunday-school never fell below $30 a Sunday; once it reached $83, and the last Sunday it was $150.73. This indicates the great interest felt in the work. I have never seen such an intense interest so long sustained.

So South Prospect is for the first time in her history free from debt. With an open field to labor for the Master, we are expecting great things. Rejoice with us. We are planning a jubilee to celebrate our release from debt. When you are in the city come to see us at South Prospect.

Remarkable Revival with Home Forces.

It is so seldom that we hear of a protracted meeting held by a local minister with home forces resulting in over one hundred additions that the following facts will be interesting.

Samuel M. Bernard, a true blue Kentuckian, graduated from the College of the Bible of Kentucky University in 1895, being but 21 years of age. For five years he served the Parkland Church, Louisville, Ky., leaving it 150 members stronger than he found it. Boulder, Colorado, heard of Brother Bernard and extended him a unanimous call. He accepted 11 months ago and has been wonderfully blessed in the short time he has been in this University center—177 having been added, making a membership of 450. In a recent revival conducted entirely with home forces, there were 107 additions. The following points go toward explaining this splendid victory and will afford useful hints for others:

1. A Liberal Spirit. A union revival had been held in October, in which our people stood little chance. A Baptist evangelist preached in three denominational churches, declaring only repentance toward God and faith in Jesus Christ. Our minister attended, prayed, worked, kept sweet. As soon as the meeting closed, he opened operations in his own pulpit, having the friendship of saint and sinner.

2. The Old Jerusalem Gospel. Or, we might say, the Antioch gospel that knows no name but the divine was preached fearlessly and lovingly. The people left the Baptist and Methodist revivals and came to hear the old truth preached without fear or favor.

3. Personal Work. At 4 P. M. each day in the minister's parlor the leading workers met, discussed the cases of those almost persuaded, prayed, went forth and won souls.

4. Uncle Sam's Aid. Every Friday night before retiring the minister would write letters to those almost persuaded. It is wonderful what good results came from the few cents thus expended.

5. Local Helps. Livery rigs, printer's ink, local singers were used freely and profitably.

6. Perseverance. Many said, "Let's quit" at the end of the third week. The preacher said, "No, there are victories ahead." The people followed his determined lead through four snow storms, foot-ball victories, strike excitement and other hindrances. At times the house, which seats 550 and can accommodate 600, would not hold the people.

7. God's Help. God's spirit was honored in every meeting and in private prayer. Thus the revival came down from heaven.

The church at Grand Island, Neb., which was destroyed by fire last March and since rebuilt, more beautiful and substantial than before, was dedicated Oct. 11 with most excellent services.

The building has an auditorium with a large gallery that extends nearly around the room, a study, class room, parlor, lecture room, kitchen, dining room, reception rooms, closets, and is supplied with city water and gas. It is heated by hot-air furnaces and will accommodate an audience of six hundred, with sliding doors closed, and over eight hundred when open. It has an incline floor and the best of church pews. The building is of brick, with brownstone trimming and beautiful art windows. It cost about $20,000 and is located in the best residence part of the city.

The amount needed to cover balance due on the property was quickly raised in cash and good pledges. Bro. J. W. Hilton, of University Church, Bethany (Lincoln) Nebraska, assisted the writer and was truly a master of the ceremonies.

Christian Church at Grand Island, Neb., and its pastor, Z. O. Doward.

Ohio's Capital.

About fifty of the leading pulpits of this city were occupied yesterday by representatives of the Anti-Saloon League and it is certain that a great deal of good was accomplished, looking to some needed reforms in this fair city, which is so under the domination of the saloon. It was stated by the gentleman who filled the pulpit of the Central Church that more than half of the townships in this state are now under local option, and have voted the saloon out. There will be an effort to have the coming legislature enact a ward option law, by which it is hoped to reach the larger cities in the state, and by driving the saloons out of the residence sections of the cities hasten the day when in every ward the abominable traffic will be a thing of the past. This beautiful city is as completely under the sway of the liquor business, with all its attendant evils, as any city I ever saw. From the top of one of the buildings, at a corner of two of the most prominent business streets, there flashes out nightly, in brilliant electric lights, the advertisement of one of the prominent breweries. Men, women and children cannot but notice this display, and its evil effect is obvious. The Christian people of this land should arouse themselves and do all in their power to save especially the youth from the fearful consequences of strong drink.

President Hunt, of Dennison University, delivered a magnificent address yesterday afternoon before about five hundred young men at the Young Men's Christian Association rooms on "The Young Man and the Problem of the Saloon." The address was treated under three heads: "The Problem of Personal Liberty;" "The Economic Aspect of the Saloon;" and "The Social Aspect of the Saloon." No young man could hear a lecture like that and go away with any other thought than that the saloon has not a single argument in its favor, but is an evil in every way and a menace to our country.

I have been having some delightful experiences in raising missionary money. This church was apportioned $50 for state missions. We raised $60. Our Bible-school was apportioned $15 for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. We raised $30. These sums are more than double the amounts of last year. We rejoice exceedingly and hope to see the old Central soon a living link church in both the foreign and home societies.

On the evening of Nov. 12 the Central Church gave the preacher and his family a most hearty and enjoyable reception. This function had been delayed on account of the failure to be earlier settled in our home. The lecture room of the church was thronged with people. The preachers of our other three churches were present and made happy addresses, as was also Mr. Dimmick, of the Wesley Chapel. Brother Williams, father of our E. T. Williams, of China, gave a history of the organization of the church. Brother Strickler spoke of the present condition of the church, and the writer, in his response to all the addresses, as to the future of the work. There was music by our splendid choir and an orchestra; readings by some talented elocutionists in the church, and finally some delicious refreshments.

The writer was the guest of our Bible-school superintendent, Brother Bassett, at the annual banquet of the Columbus Bible School Association, held on the evening of Nov. 9 at the Busy Bee restaurant. Covers were laid for about 150 people. After the feast of good things and the reports of the association for the past year, the principal address was delivered by Mr. Ernest Bourner Allen, the eloquent preacher of the Washington Street Congregational Church, Toledo. It was a manly appeal to the teachers and officers present to recognize the authority of Christ; to endeavor to acquire a more perfect knowledge of the word of God, and to seek such a spirit-filled heart and life that their influence would be felt more and more upon the youth of the land.

The Central Church is expecting to enter upon a protracted effort in January, with Mrs.

Princess Long to assist in singing. We hope for a good meeting.

The campaign that is on for the increasing of the circulation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is worthy the support of all our brethren. We have a large subscription list in Columbus and hope to very greatly increase it this next year. No Christian home should be without a religious paper, read carefully week by week. Here's hoping that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may double the number of its readers in the year of grace 1904.

Church Building in Arkansas.

Several good buildings have recently been erected in the state or are in process of erection. Fayetteville led off some time ago with a good house suitable to their needs. Ft. Smith will follow with what will be one of the best in the state. Texarkana is finishing a $20,000 house, just across the line on the Texas side. This will be ideal in its appearance, auditory excellence, convenience, etc. Its extreme floor extent will be 55 by 100, with basement under the entire building. It will be provided with furnace, kitchen, parlors, robing rooms, class rooms, etc. We have never seen a house of worship better planned. Little Rock will follow with an excellent house. Pine Bluff is planning improvements. Jonesboro is building on a scale commensurate with the growth of the city. Hot Springs is looking toward a down-town location with a good house. DeQueen is building on the best site in town, and they will have a good house suited to their needs. Antioch (P. O. Tull) is building a good country church. It is in a good neighborhood. Biggers, a new town, on a new road between Hoxie and Cape Girardeau, Mo., has built a new house, the first in town. These are all important enterprises.

Past, Present and Future History of the World

3 large volumes 8 1/4 x 11 inches. Bound in rich red three-quarter levant, stamped in gold, with gold-veined marbled sides and linings, and full gold edges. Over 1200 pages and 1000 illustrations; heavy paper, large clear type, wide margins.

This history is unique: 1st, the most comprehensive and compact history of the world ever produced; 2nd, it deals not only with events from the creation to the present day, but provides for history that is yet to be made for 21 years to come. The last volume is so arranged that pages, which we will furnish at the end of each year from 1904 to 1924, can be made a permanent part of this great work.

By Charles J. Little, Ph.D., LL.D.

Professor of Historical Theology in Garrett Biblical Institute, formerly Professor of History in Syracuse University.

No other two men are probably better able to deal with a subject of such vast scope, to eliminate the minor details and bring out the events which have a direct bearing on the progress of the world. Their historical knowledge, their facilities for getting at facts, their skill in treatment and arrangement of events, combined with their broad intellectual qualities, specially adapted them to the preparation of a subject of such great importance.

Over 1000 Historical Pictures

by Meissonier, Dore, Delort, De Neuville and others enhance the value of these volumes. The most important events, so graphically depicted by the authors, are made more interesting still by these famous artists. The pictures are stories in themselves. Scenes of battles, of great events, places of historical interest, portraits of famous men of all times, a color picture of "Flags of All Nations," historical maps, etc.

Complete System of Indexes makes this work invaluable as a reference-book. Any event or illustration can be found immediately. Contains record of events in chronological order and gives proper pronunciation of names.

Of course as we have just closed the books for November, we are able to say what we have receipted for during the month. We are extremely gratified to be able to say $1,562.90 or a little more than three times our November receipts last year. Just one half of our churches heard from and one-half of these have only partially completed their offerings.

Yes, thank you, California is going to take her place up next to the band wagon, right at the head of the procession.

Selma has set the pace at $1.50 per member. Sacramento comes in second with $1.25 per member. Then Fresno, Acampo, Corralitas and Healdsburg are following with $1 per member. This, when we think that last year Madison headed the list averaging 77 cents per member, means progress.

Now for downright hard work. Let us plan for more evangelistic energy and win this country for Christ.

A. C. McKeever is in a meeting with his home congregation, Fresno. The first four days reported twelve added.

The two Platts closed a two weeks' meeting at Selma with eleven added.

R. L. Johnson was getting a good start in the Fowler meeting when he received word that his residence and entire contents were burned. He asks for, and I am sure can have, all our prayers in his behalf.

Ernest Thonquest is in a meeting with J. W. Webb at West Park; three added at last report.

R. L. McHatton closed a good meeting at Healdsburg with five confessions, all young men and women, and is now in a meeting at Lakeport with good audiences.

J. M. Gallahorn and J. A. Carroll closed last week at Geyserville with six added, and are now in a meeting at Alexander Valley with four added the first week. We feel sure a pastor will be called at the close of this meeting.

Mrs. Clara H. Hazelrigg and daughter are to begin at Stockton, Jan. 3, and we look for good results. From there to Napa and we hope to keep them busy as bees for six months anyway.

ing, brought Bro. C. L. Hatch there several inquiries.

We shall visit Corning next week to inspect a body of 2,500 acres of land very carefully and if as represented will arrange for the planting of a Christian colony at the earliest possible moment.

W. W. Pew and wife at Oraville are open for a few nearby meetings in the interest of the building fund at Oraville. This is an important county seat and we need a property there as the first step for successful work.

One year ago we did not have a handful of dirt at Richmond, the new manufacturing city eight miles from San Francisco. Now we have $1,200, worth of dirt and a $1,200 house and only $740 of debt. That is progress also. Worshipping there is a congregation of 25 members: a Bible-school of 30, a Christian Endeavor of 18 or 20, a Junior and a Ladies' Aid. Eighteen months ago there was no one living on the site of Richmond; now about are about 300 children in the public school and 1,800 people living within three-fourths of a mile of the new church.

If one "Rev." R. E. Stanley claiming to be from Tennessee or Arkansas, shows up, you will confer a favor by notifying the sheriff of Contra Costa county, Calif., who has a warrant for his arrest. He professes to be a Christian preacher, is of good address and probably left the state via, Los Angeles and the south east. If he presents a letter with my signature, no matter to whom addressed, please take it up and send to me. J. P. DARGITZ, Cor. Sec.

MILLER.

Little Essie Miller, aged 5 years, died November 18, 1903. She was burned to death by clothes catching fire, one of the saddest sights I have ever witnessed. I was called to the home of the sorrowing parents to try to comfort them. The mother is a member of the church, living five miles in the country. D. E. PALMER.

WRIGHT.

My father, A. Wright, passed away this morning at Atlanta, Ill. A consistent Christian, he looked forward to dissolution as a glad release. Among his last words were, "I would be so happy if I could lay this body down and be at rest." He was a lifelong reader and friend of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from its earliest struggles. J. H. WRIGHT.

HASTINGS.

Mary, the little daughter of Bro. H. H. and Sister Lou Taylor Hastings, of 5251 Terry ave., St. Louis, died, aged 1 year 10 months and 7 days. Brother and Sister Hastings feel most deeply their loss, but as Christians they are comforted by the certainty of joining their loved ones in the sweet by and by. The father and mother have the sympathy of many friends. SAMUEL B. MOORE.

COFFIN.

Orvie J. Coffin, born in Fairgrove, Mich., September 24, 1873, entered into eternal life November 2, 1903. He was a charter member of West Bay City Church, which he served as elder and trustee since the organization. He was loved by all for his kindness and sacrificing spirit, being at all times ready to deprive himself for the cause of Christ. The church, mother and wife mourn their loss. A. IMMANUEL ZELLER.

West Bay City, Mich.

WELLS.

Alice Louise, the daughter of Mrs. Ida Wells, was born in Waverly, April 6, 1887, died at Jacksonville, Ill., November 25, 1903, after an operation for appendicitis. She accepted Christ at the early age of ten, and has since lovingly served him. Funeral service was conducted at Waverly by Brother Lyman, of Springfield, assisted by the writer.

Waverly, Ill.

SCHAEFFER.

Jennie Schaeffer fell asleep November 10, 1903, at Hiram, O. She was born at North Jackson, O., September 29, 1841. Her life's last energies were given to Christian work. She loved young people, and the influence of her Young Men's Bible Class is a precious memory to many a Hiram student. She was a woman of native culture and spiritual refinement. J. E. LYNN.

Springfield, Ill.

CAMERON.

Mrs. Helen Glegg Cameron departed this life at Ulysses, Neb., November 21, 1903, nearly 82 years of age. She was born at North Jackson, O., September 29, 1841. Her life's last energies were given to Christian work. She loved young people, and the influence of her Young Men's Bible Class is a precious memory to many a Hiram student. She was a woman of native culture and spiritual refinement. W. A. BALDWIN.

WOODSIDE.

Sister Mary Isabelle, wife of Brother William L. Woodside, was called to her final reward, October, 1903, at the age of 64. She was born in Monroe county, Indiana, in 1839, and came, with her father, Mr. Frits, to this county in 1848. She was a school-mate of Mrs. J. H. Garrison, and Brother Garrison has been in their home frequently. She was a Christian for more than fifty years. She was beloved by the entire church and community. Great throngs of people attended the funeral services held in the church by the pastor. W. H. WILLYARD.

La Harpe, Ill.

EWERS.

Mrs. Adaline E. Ewers (nee Betz), wife of James F. Ewers, one of the elders of the church at Sheridan, Wyoming, fell asleep in Jesus, November 19, 1903, aged 25 years and 1 month. She was born in Butler, Bates County, Mo., where she resided until about two years ago, when she removed to Sheridan. She joined the M. E. Church at the age of sixteen, but when the Christian Church was organized at this place, she united with it. She leaves a babe less than two weeks old, besides a grief-stricken husband, parents brothers and sisters. The funeral services were conducted by the writer in the new church building which she had so earnestly worked for and prayed to see completed.

F. E. BLANCHARD.

ETTA (MORGAN) BELLOWS.

Etta Bell Bellows died at her home, near Fort Scott, Kan., November 6, 1903, being 43 years of age. She was the wife of Edward Bellows, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Morgan. Besides her husband and two children, and father and mother Morgan, she has four brothers and two sisters who mourn her loss—F. A. and O. T. of Chicago, Leslie W. of England, Elmer of Carlisle, Iowa, Clara G. Wilkinson and Alice M. Wickizer. Funeral services were held at her home, after which the body was taken to Des Moines for burial, where she was laid beside the grave of a little daughter. Early in life she became a Christian. A faith both strong and beautiful was hers, and emanating from her was ever an influence inspired and sanctified by truth. Not a moment's warning was hers, and she needed not to know, for she was ready, her house in perfect order. Seized with a sudden sensation of weariness, they laid her down. The eye of mental vision had closed to earthly scenes. A few hours her spirit lingered in the clay tabernacle, then winged to immortal scenes where God clothed her with a body that pleased him. For more than thirty-five years this family circle of father and mother Morgan has been unbroken. As parents, they lived for their children, and they have lived to realize the saying, "They shall rise up and call them blessed." To them in their California home, though amidst the floral gardens and ocean breeze, this sorrow and darkness falls none the less with its awful weight. May a kind Providence, who giveth liberally, send grace sufficient for the hour to those who shall miss her most. D. A. WICKIZER.

IRWIN.

Robert W. Irwin, remembered by the ministers of Illinois especially, followed into the unseen his faithful wife, November 14, 1903. He fell asleep at the house of his adopted daughter, Mrs. A. L. Smyers, Des Moines, Iowa. Uncle Irwin was born February 15, 1819, and was, therefore, in his 85th year. He had been a member of the Christian Church for over seventy years. His home, at Belles Plaines, Ill., was open to every lover of Christ for almost a half century. He was a quiet man, and made no pretensions to publicity, but his joy was in serving quietly in every way that would further the cause of Christ. Many will be saddened when they hear of his death, but will rejoice in the triumph of the loving faith in Christ. I. N. McCASH.

McKINNON.

Mrs. Mary Eleanor McKinnon (nee Chambers), wife of Angus McKinnon, former principal of the commercial department of Drake University, and editor and manager of the Christian Century, died at Des Moines, October 28. Mrs. McKinnon submitted to a surgical operation for appendicitis, which proved fatal. She was the youngest of three children born to J. W. and Mrs. Mary A. Chambers, William, of Minneapolis, and Mrs. Grace Howe, of Los Angeles, brother and sister, survive her, as does her father, also. She was graduated with high rank from Drake University in the class of 1895, taking the degree of A. B., and was married June 27, 1895. She leaves her husband and son, Wendell, six years of age. Mrs. McKinnon inherited from her mother the strong intellectuality of the McCulloughs and Maxwells of her native state (Indiana), and the practical traits of her father. She enjoyed everything that was pure and noble; was discriminating in her tastes; showed a lofty order of culture in literature, art and religion. She was a general favorite in university circles throughout her whole college course. Her religious life was calm, prayerful, rich, and deeply entrenched in the love of God. While unemotional, seemingly, it had the fervor of a conscious, covenantal and spiritual union with Christ whom she loved. The last days of her illness were made luminous by her abiding faith. She rested in hope that whether she lived to reign as queen in her home, or fell asleep, she would never be separated from the heavenly Father. The services over her remains were held in the University Place Christian Church, and were attended by throngs of sorrowing classmates and friends. A host of absent ones, widely separated, will be saddened by the news of her demise. The church is enriched by her memories; the college adds one more to the roll of the permanently absent. I. N. McCASH.

Harrison, O., Dec. 3, 1903.

Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Warrensburg, Mo., Dec. 6.—The Wilson-McVay meeting has closed; 167 additions, 106 confessions, 20 from the denominations; others reclaimed and by letter. Great meeting in every way.—H. A. DENTON, pastor.

ARKANSAS.—Springdale, Dec. 1.—Please report the organization of a congregation at Summers, Washington county, Nov. 29 with twelve members; two were from the Baptists. Most of the little flock have never before had church privileges. The work is doing well at Springdale.—DAVID TRUNDLE.

CALIFORNIA.—Fresno, Nov. 29.—Chapman and Watton closed a two weeks' meeting here last Sunday night. Brother McKeever and the members of his congregation cooperated, and at the close Brother McKeever began a series of meetings in the Christian church. Eighteen added to date; five this forenoon. Prospects are encouraging, although the weather is foggy and disagreeable for this climate. Brother McKeever, as pastor at Fresno and as president of the state board, is doing a great work in California. He is growing in strength and spirituality as the year comes to a close. JOHN BALINGER.

Lakeport, Nov. 30.—The meeting is a week old; six confessions and five other accessions.—R. L. MCHATTON.

COLORADO.—Canon City, Nov. 30.—Two confessions here last evening.—WALTER KLINE.

GEORGIA.—Quitman, Nov. 27.—I have been with the brethren in this enterprising town of southern Georgia for the past week. I have held them a number of meetings in years past and my call on this occasion was for the purpose of encouraging and strengthening the church, which is about to lose Bro. J. F. Berry, who for more than fifteen years has been its main stay. We have some most excellent brethren here, men and women, whose characters are second to none in the community and who feel now that arrangements must be made in the near future for regular pastoral work.—T. H. BLENUS.

ILLINOIS.—St. Marie, Nov. 30.—I have moved here recently, and there is no Christian Church here at this time, but we have a fair chance of getting one soon. There is a Baptist Church here, but they have all gone to wreck. I have preached two or three sermons in their house, and they are now willing to turn over their house to us, and I will make preparation to organize soon.—D. L. PIERCE.

Petersburg, Dec. 1.—We have had 14 additions to this congregation during the month of November; 12 by baptism and 2 by statement. We are planning for a meeting in January.—W. M. GROVES.

Chicago, Nov. 30.—We have had six additions at the Chicago Heights Christian Church since last report; three by letter, three by primary obedience. The work moves very acceptably. We will begin a revival meeting soon.—H. E. TUCKER.

La Fayette, Dec. 3.—Meeting three days, and two confessions. Pastor E. A. Cary is doing the preaching.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON AND WIFE, singers and helpers.

Lawrenceville, Nov. 28.—We closed a successful meeting Nov. 23 with 20 additions. Wm. Oeschger, the minister of the Vincennes church, did the preaching. Brother Oeschger combines the fervor of evangelism with the culture of elaborate and technical scholarship. He is free from cant and rant. He preached the simple gospel with eloquence and enthusiasm. He is an ideal gentleman, as well as a preacher of great and growing power. The writer is assisting in a meeting at Vincennes.—L. H. STINE.

Waukegan, Dec. 3.—Have just closed a short meeting here with 8 additions; 2 baptized, 1 from Methodists and 5 by statement. This makes 24 additions to the church since I commenced the work here. We expect to resume the meeting after holidays.—J. H. SMART.

Newman, Dec. 2.—Nine confessions and one by letter in past two weeks. When sermons fail, Bro. J. G. McNutt's personal work wins. Newman is preparing to build.—WILL F. SHAW.

Paris, Nov. 30.—Just closed a four weeks' meeting at Big Creek, 10 miles southwest of here, with 57 added. Will build in the spring. When fully on its feet, this congregation will be in touch "all round the world." Bro. N. S. Haynes got his wife out of this band. Church is in good spirit. This has always been an "anti" church.—N. J. WRIGHT, Evangelist.

Cuba, Nov. 30.—Our meeting is one week old, and the writer is speaking to large houses. Prof. C. E. Millard, singing evangelist, is with us. His sacred pictures on the screen are very fine and a high order of art. Last evening he gave the "Holy City" to a great house, and pictures and song were very impressive and beyond description. This will be his address for two weeks more. We are looking and praying for a great ingathering.—A. L. FERGUSON.

Camp Point, Nov. 28.—Our six weeks' campaign in Kansas City, Kan., closed with 67 accessions; 15 of these go to the Central and 52 to the North Side. The meetings on the North Side are being continued by the pastor, Bro. C. P. Smith. We go next to Maryville, Mo. Brother Sprague will sing.—R. A. OMER.

INDIANA.—La Fayette, Nov. 23.—There have been 13 additions to the First Church of this city since my last report; nine by letter and statement, two from the Quakers, two young men by confession and baptism, one being from the Episcopal Church. Every department of the work here is growing and our audiences increasing.—C. H. TROUT, pastor.

Walcott, Dec. 3.—The church has paid off a debt of $550 this last summer, and has just completed decorating the building. The money for paying for the decoration has been raised by the ladies' aid society; $25 was placed in their treasury from lectures by the pastor.—EDWARD OWERS, minister.

Frankfort, Nov. 30.—We have just closed one of the most successful meetings ever held in the history of the First Christian Church of this city. Our pastor, T. H. Kuhn, did the preaching, and F. C. Huston, of Indianapolis, had charge of the music. There were 75 accessions during the meeting, making more than 100 since Brother Kuhn began his work with us last March. The great plea of the Disciples was never more powerfully, logically and eloquently presented to the people of Frankfort than in the fifty masterful sermons and special addresses delivered by Brother Kuhn during the meeting. The business men's meeting was one of the unique and most interesting features of the meeting. Through the personal influence of Brother Kuhn all business was practically suspended and business places, including the twenty saloons, were closed one afternoon between the hours of three and four, and seven and eight-thirty o'clock, that they might attend these especial services. Some of the business firms, with their entire force, attended in a

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly every body knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but, simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath, and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I got more and better charcoal in Stuart's absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

body. About fifty, bartenders attended these meetings. These meetings, with the special addresses of Brother Kuhn, became the comment of the city. We confidently expect great things in the near future.—Q. A. KENNEDY, Pres of Board.

Elwood, Dec. 5.—Closed the first week of a glorious meeting with forty added—nearly all heads of families and leading citizens. Expect over 100 additions. Jas Small, that genial and princely evangelist, is at the helm. Miss Una Berry, of LaFayette, Ind., leads our song service. She is a gifted soloist. Crowds growing, interest deepening, scores under promise and conviction. Pray for our abundant success.—L. C. HOWE, pastor.

Marion, Dec. 5.—The sixth week of the S. M. Martin meeting with the Tabernacle Church. We have in all 50 additions. Meeting continues another week.—E. L. FRAZIER.

IOWA.—Odell, Nov. 30.—One by letter last Sunday. Offering for Sunday morning amounted to about $200. This will clear the building of all debt. This is a splendid people.—H. JAS. CROCKETT.

KANSAS.—Stockton, Nov. 28.—The Church of Christ here just closed a four weeks' meeting held by Evangelist Clarence A. Hill and wife. This was considered the best meeting ever held here. Brother Hill is a great preacher, a deep, earnest Bible student. Because of his sermons the Church of Christ has more friends now than ever before. Mrs. Hill wins many to Christ by her songs. She is the best personal worker we ever had among us. We had in our meeting 15 accessions as follows: six baptisms, five reclaimed, two from Baptists, a minister and his wife, two by statement. We are now in a meeting with them at Plainville, Kan.—A. R. POE, pastor.

Asherville, Nov. 30.—At the Fair View church, ten miles from here, where we labor half time, we closed a three weeks' meeting last evening with six additions; three by baptism and three by statement.—F. A. EMERSON, pastor.

Glasco, Nov. 28.—I visited Milfordale, Bro. Eli Walker's charge, and preached two evenings and took one confession. This is the

FIFTY CENTS

A MONTH

A small bottle of Scott's Emulsion costing fifty cents will last a baby a month—a few drops in its bottle each time it is fed. That's a small outlay for so large a return of health and comfort.

Babies that are given Scott's Emulsion quickly respond to its helpful action. It seems to contain just the elements of nourishment a baby needs most.

Ordinary food frequently lacks this nourishment; Scott's Emulsion always supplies it.

field where I labored five years, some five years ago. Brother Walker is doing well.—J. N. BEAVER.

Dodge City, Dec. 2.—Our meeting continues with increasing interest. Seven added and an old serious difficulty adjusted to the satisfaction of all concerned. S. S. McGill is the efficient minister here.—T. L. NOBLITT.

Salina, Dec. 1.—Twenty-seven additions at our regular services since last report.—DAVID H. SHIELDS.

Coffeyville, Nov. 25.—I preached five nights last week at Coodys Bluffs, I. T. There were four confession.—W. F. FLOWER.

MICHIGAN.—Adrian, Nov. 29.—Our protracted meeting closed here on Nov. 18 with eight more baptized and two received by statement, besides those previously reported. I preached the Thanksgiving sermon at the union Thanksgiving service.—B. W. HUNTS-MAN.

MISSOURI.—Butler, Nov. 30.—Three added yesterday holding letters from Adel, Ia.—E. H. WILLIAMSON.

St. Louis, D. C. 1.—The Fourth Church has just closed a meeting in which 18 were added. F. G. Tyrell did the preaching. There have been four added at prayer-meeting and regular services since.—E. T. MCFARLAND.

Kirkville, Dec. 3.—There were four additions to the church here last Sunday.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Belle, Nov. 30.—Started meeting at Belle; three services and twelve additions; house crowded. Hope to have a great meeting.—R. B. HAVENER.

Edgerton, Nov. 30.—We are in a fine meeting here; two weeks and 23 added; 18 yesterday. We continue.—JNO P. JESSE, evangelist.

Alexandria, Nov. 30.—The meeting here has been running three weeks. Twelve additions up to date. Brother Ingoto, of Canton, preached four nights last week with ten additions as the result. He will return to-night to remain another week. We are expecting great things.—S. D. SEYMOUR.

Clinton Nov. 30.—Closed meeting last night. Fourteen additions yesterday; thirty-five in all. I consider this one of the best meetings I ever held, not of course as to the members, but as to what I feel meets the need of the church and the country. I begin a meeting at Hillsboro, Texas to-morrow.—F. O. FANNON.

Savannah, Dec. 5.—We recently closed a meeting here with 30 additions. B. F. Hill, of Plattsburg, did the preaching.—A. R. HUNT.

Maryville, Dec. 4.—Our meeting here starts off with bright prospects. Maryville is one of our best and strongest churches, numbering over 800 members. W. A. Fite is the present pastor. Brother L. D. Sprague, my singer, is open for engagements in January. Write him at California, Mo.—OMER & SPRAGUE.

St. Louis, Dec. 7.—First Church, 12 additions yesterday, eight confessions. Central, three by letter. Mount Cabanne, four by letter. Fourth Church, 21 additions in the meeting held by F. G. Tyrell. At Granite City, 17 added in a meeting by E. T. McFarland. Hammett Place, raised a thank offering of $700 for street improvements, etc.

NEBRASKA.—Omaha, Dec. 1.—DeForest Austin, of Bethany, Neb., is conducting an evangelistic meeting at the North Side church which is now in its third week. Bro. Austin is one of our young evangelists, but I cannot say too much in praise of his methods. He is an energetic and consecrated worker. His sermons, which are often illustrated by appropriate charts, are filled with sound instruction in the first principles of Bible study. Brother Austin found our congregation dispirited and scattered, owing to the fact that we had been without a pastor for some time. Already he has succeeded in reorganizing our forces and has given new life and hope to our people. Our new pastor, H. J. Kirschstein, of Hastings, Neb., who comes to us the last of this month, will find us in good working order owing to Brother Austin's work. The field at the North Side is a hard one, owing to local conditions, but Brother Austin has aroused an interest in the entire community and has a well filled house at each service.—C. S. PAINE.

NEW YORK.—Buffalo, Dec. 1.—Another young man responded to the gospel invitation last Sunday evening—a railroad employe. Our Sunday-school will give presents instead of receiving them Christmas.—B. S. FERRALL.

OHIO.—Bellaire, Nov. 30.—Yesterday we observed Children's Rally Day for America, and it was a rally indeed. The enthusiasm was high, the program fine, and the offering over $125—far the largest ever made here. Revival services began yesterday, with splendid congregations both morning and evening. Prof. J. Walter Wilson, who helped us so efficiently last year, is with us again. Good promise of large results.—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

Georgetown, Dec. 2.—Meetings at Liberty, assisted by Bro. Jno. Shouse, resulted in two confessions. Held meeting at Dover, Ky., with 10 additions, 8 baptisms.—J. D. HOUSTON. Collinwood, Dec. 3.—Two confessions last Lord's day evening. A special Thanksgiving offering by the church, amounting to $95.32. Boys' and Girls' Rally Day observed. Attendance at Lord's day school, 266. Collection, $16.27. Ohio Endeavor Rally Day observed by an interesting union meeting of Junior, Intermediate and Senior societies. All these events conspired to make the day one of more than ordinary interest. Collections in November for all purposes amounted to $316.44. A banner month.—D. R. KING.

Millfield, Dec. 3.—Our 20 days' meeting at Green's Run (Modoc P. O.) closed Nov. 22 with 49 accessions to that church. However, at the close one remained unbaptized because of sickness. Before beginning here, Nov. 27, we preached a few times in the United Brethren house. Two made the good confession here to-night, our meeting being just one week old, and prospects are now flattering for a good meeting. A young man, Brother Newton, preaches here monthly and is highly respected for his ability and goodness. We expect him here Dec. 5. My next meeting will be at Corning.—J. A. WALTERS.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.—Alva, Dec. 1.—I held a meeting here with seven additions. The church gave me a call to labor for them.—F. W. MOODY.

Cleveland, Nov. 27.—I recently closed my work at Fort Dodge, Iowa, and came to Oklahoma to engage in evangelistic work before locating again. Have been here about two weeks. There have been three baptisms and six added by letter and statement. Will continue another week.—JAMES R. MCINTIRE.

Guthrie, Dec. 1.—The First Christian Church in this city closed a fine meeting last evening, Nov. 30, with 15 additions the last evening; 12 of these by confession. There were 65 additions in all during the meeting, the larger part by confession. This makes 135 additions to the church since Feb. 1, when we entered the new church. Brother S. D. Dutcher, of Oklahoma City, did the preaching and Sister Harry E. Moore, of Wichita, led the singing. It has never been my pleasure to listen to a finer series of sermons, or to more faithful presentation of the great truths of the gospel. Brother Dutcher is a stronger preacher to-day than he ever was. He reaches the hearts and consciences of the people. He stoops to nothing unworthy of a Christian gentleman in the pulpit and relies upon the gospel, faithfully proclaimed, to accomplish its work. Sister Moore is without exception, the best leader of song for a revival meeting that I have ever heard sing. She combines the rare accomplishment of a fine soloist and chorus leader. The meeting lasted four weeks and had the strongest opposition that I have ever seen. Eight of the churches of Guthrie combined, built a large tabernacle and called the Oliver Brothers to lead them. In spite of all this we had fine audiences all the time. The music was a great feature. Sister Moore had a large faithful chorus, the best that I have ever seen in any church, strengthened by pipe organ, trombone, cornet and violin. Brother Dutcher has received a call to Omaha, and we are fearful that we may lose him from the territory. I have not resigned, as was reported in last week's CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST. Our work is very prosperous and we are happy.—J. T. OGLE.

ONTARIO.—Grand Valley, Nov. 30.—A few few evenings' meetings at Marsville, Ont., resulted in six additions, all by primary obedience. Miss Jessie Reid, of Grand Valley, assisted in song to the delight of all who came. The writer did the preaching, and was nobly assisted by several in the congregation.—L. A. CHAPMAN.

PENNSYLVANIA.—New Castle, Nov. 30.—Just closed a twenty-five days' meeting at the Central with 32 added, making 54 since we began here April 1. A good hearing and splendid interest throughout the meeting. J. A. Joyce, McKeesport, sang. The work here is taking on new life and good results are looked for.—W. D. TURNBULL, pastor.

WISCONSIN.—Lynxville, Dec. 5.—Preached last Sunday at Seneca, Wis., a strong Irish Catholic community. Was royally entertained at the home of Sister Elizabeth Bigelow. Her husband is an Episcopalian and a brother of ex Governor Bigelow, of Rhode Island. We have three members at Seneca, and others are quite strongly impressed with our position. I hope to preach there occasionally. The work at Lynxville progresses quietly and steadily. Our auditorium will be resented before long, and other improvements made.—ALLAN M. LAIRD.

WEST VIRGINIA.—Parkersburg, Dec. 1.—Closed a meeting here at First Christian Church on Wednesday evening, Nov. 25, with 60 persons responding to gospel invitations, as follows: Three by letter, 13 reclaimed, 17 by statement and 27 by confession. Of this number one came from the Episcopalians, one from the Baptists and four from the Methodists. Bro. H. F. Lutz, of Duquesne, Ia., did the preaching, which was clear, strong and scholarly. He is an excellent evangelist. While here he accepted a call to the church at Fairmont, W. Va. Our work moves nicely; one from the Baptists since meeting closed.—J. D. HULL, pastor.

Address at the Funeral of Gen. F. M. Drake.

By F. L. Moffett.

"And the king said unto his servants, know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?"—2 Sam. 3:38.

Truly a great man has fallen this day in Israel.

In the Old World a man may become distinguished by birth; he may belong to the royal family, though he has not a manly quality in his character; but in the New World new standards have come to be accepted and new ideals have entered into the minds of men. Men are finally estimated for their real worth, their manly qualities of character, their loyalty to the King, their kindness and their humanitarian spirit.

General Drake was a prince of the new type, and his life of philanthropy is a prophecy of a better age when the life of Jesus will be more universally appreciated and exemplified.

If we were given to boasting, we could say that none had a more noble lineage than he. The glory of his life, however, consisted in the fact that he was a noble descendant of a noble ancestry. He himself embodied the very highest ideals of manhood.

He was a man of deep convictions. On the great and fundamental things of life he was safely anchored; he was not driven by every wind that blew. He did not claim to know everything in the heavens above and the earth beneath, but he knew the essential things to the satisfaction of the soul.

He was a man of courage. There was not one drop of the blood of the coward that flowed in his veins. Whether crossing the plains or leading the forces upon the battlefield, or in the every-day duties of an American citizen, he was a man of valor. He was never afraid to stand for what he believed; it might be his political views or his religious views; he was true to the truth as God had given him to see it. He would listen to the views of others with absolute kindness and courtesy, and allowed all the liberty which he claimed for himself.

He was a man of integrity. No man was ever more honorable and upright in his dealings with men. He was open and fair; there was no hypocrisy in his nature, and he could scarcely endure it in another. He always met men in the open and expected them to meet him in that way.

"If it were in our power it would be introduced into every home where there is a child."

—THE INTERIOR

He had confidence in men. When he became your friend it required a practical demonstration of unworthiness to shake that confidence, and he never forsook a friend in need. His heart ever beat with sympathy with the great heart of humanity.

He was born to lead. When he crossed the plains in the early "fifties" with an emigrant train, his companions naturally gave to him the position for which nature had fitted him. He was made commander, and when they were attacked by the Indians he was a master of the situation, and led his weak forces to victory. When the war broke out and threatened the perpetuity of the nation, Francis Marion Drake organized a company for the Second Iowa Infantry but, failing to get into that because it was filled, Captain Drake's company was made a part of an independent regiment. Very soon he was made major. In 1862, in the month of August, he was commissioned by Governor Kirkwood as lieutenant-colonel of the Thirty-sixth Iowa Infantry. At Mark's Mills, with a force of twelve hundred men, he fought six times that many and was left wounded upon the battlefield to die. Six months later he rejoined his regiment, though he was compelled to use crutches.

Shortly after the war he began to practice law in Centerville, in which practice he was very successful, but soon the spirit of leadership began to manifest itself in new directions. With his keen insight he saw the necessity for railroads to develop the resources of the country and, organizing a company, he built what is now the Keokuk & Western, from Keokuk to Centerville, in 1872. He also built the Albia & Centerville, several branches of the Iowa Central and the Indiana, Illinois & Iowa. He was a man of large enterprise, and great success followed his career. He was at the time of his death president of the Centerville National Bank, of Centerville, and of the Farmers' and Miners' Savings Bank and the First National Bank of Albia.

The public life of General Drake was characterized by that fearlessness and integrity which was an essential part of his nature. In 1895 he was nominated by the Republican convention for the high office of governor, and that fall he was elected by a large majority. His administration was business-like and statesman-like.

I doubt not that General Drake will live longest because he embodied a noble type of Christianity. He was a large-hearted, noble-minded Christian gentleman. He was a great man in many ways.

He has been eminently successful in the field of finance, but his gifts have been lavish. Often he has been heard to say, "I believe in giving until you feel it;" and while the public had become accustomed to reading that General Drake had given from ten to fifty thousand at a time to the cause of education, it did not know how many times it was a sacrifice. He never made a promise in the way of benevolence that he did not keep, even though it cost him thousands in sacrifice to meet it at the appointed time. The university founded by him at Des Moines, Iowa, has been the one into which he has poured his whole life. His gifts to it began when the work was started there more than twenty years ago. The gifts to the church of his choice in various ways were innumerable. There is scarcely a needy place which did not receive assistance when properly presented. There were times when he would receive from forty to fifty letters a day from all parts of the United States asking for help of some kind. In every case every one received attention and a prompt reply. In his own home city many a man has been helped over a rough place, and many a needy person furnished with provisions by his kindly assistance. These facts were never learned from him, but from those whose overflowing gratitude would praise the name of their friend.

In his own city he has always had a great interest. In the year 1902 he carried out his plans in respect to his town own. A magnificent library building costing thirty-five thousand dollars was constructed, and a thousand dollars worth of books placed in it—all the gift of General Drake to the city. A forty thousand dollar church was also finished the same season, made possible by his large donation.

He was great in the councils of the brotherhood of Disciples. There has scarcely been a policy adopted by any of the departments of that great body without seeking his advice and profiting by his wisdom. The church and the nation have suffered a great loss in the death of F. M. Drake. He always planned large things for the kingdom of God, and it is a positive assurance of the Christian character of the man when I say he was never too busy nor too weary to talk over the interests of the church at large. With that broad vision which made it possible for him to see movements in all their various relations and achieve such great success, he viewed the mighty hosts of the kingdom. He saw the hosts marching to victory in this country and rejoiced in the part he was able to play in the realization of God's purposes.

General Drake was a great man in his bearing towards men, and in the spirit that he manifested. He was always optimistic; this grew out of his confidence in God and men. He believed in the mighty destiny of the church and nation, and had no sympathy with alarmists. He believed in the brotherhood of man, the solidarity of the race, hence his soul never took delight in the things which did not make for peace and unity.

The best place to know a man is at home and among his own people. Whatever weaknesses he may possess will be known there. General Drake was a princely man among his fellow-citizens, friends and neighbors of his home town where he has lived for more than a quarter of a century. It may have been a wonder to some that a man whose enterprises were of such a national character, and whose life was so identified with the state and nation, should not have resided at some great commercial center. Those who would wonder did not know the character of General Drake. He was simple in character and humble in life. He loved to mingle with those whom he had known through the years. He was a tower of strength wherever he was, and for that reason he was the constant associate of the humble; they loved him as they would a brother. As he would meet his friends upon the street it was always with that hearty handshake and words of kindness which were the expressions of a true man. If one should approach during office hours, he never failed to receive the kindest consideration. It was the marvel of all who knew him that no matter how busy he was with business involving large sums of money, he was never too busy to talk with the humblest citizen and make him feel that there was not the least intrusion.

The children could approach him as they would a father. He had no malice in his nature. When unjust, unkind and unchristian criticism came, during his administration as governor, from sources unexpected, no harsh words came from him, nor did it chill the streams of benevolence. His nature was too noble to be disturbed by littleness and narrowness. How he enjoyed the delightful fellowship of his own home! It was an inspiration to get a glimpse of his home life. No member of the family was too far away nor too busy to gather at the old home upon Thanksgiving and Christmas to enjoy each other's friendship and association.

He was a Christian. He believed in the Christ with all his heart. There were many problems he never tried to settle, but that simple faith in the Christ, and the inspirations he received from him, explains his life. He believed in the program of the Christ, and he did his utmost to carry it out. He cared not so much about the form of Christianity: he possessed its spirit.

He has left many monuments in brick which will perpetuate his name, but he will always live in the minds of those who knew him as a kindly character; it was a priceless heritage to have known him and to have been his friend. What inspiration comes from his greatness and his many deeds of tenderness and kindness! Noble Christian man—the world seems lonely without you—friend and brother, farewell. F. L. MOFFETT.

Centerville, Iowa.

The Board of Ministerial Relief desires to place on record its sense of loss and deep regret over the unexpected death of Ex-Gov. Francis M. Drake, of Centerville, Iowa.

From the organization of this board at Dallas, Texas, in 1895, Brother Drake was an active member, and by his wise counsel and generous gifts, aided in establishing this tender ministry.

We will miss his genial presence and able counsel in our meetings, but he has gone to his reward, and his works and deeds do follow him.

We wish to join with the many organizations of our brotherhood in which his wise counsels and generous gifts were felt, and with the whole Church of Christ in the expression of our sorrow and loss in the death of as good and great a man.

That a copy of this resolution be sent to the family and to our church papers.

The question of why one man succeeds and another fails, is a problem that has puzzled philosophers for centuries. One man attains riches and position, while his neighbor who started with seemingly the same, and better opportunities, exists in poverty and obscurity. No man can win success who is suffering from an irritating and nerve-racking disease, and the man who has the qualities of success within him, would be quick to recognize this fact and seize the best remedy to eradicate the trouble.

A person afflicted with a serious case of hemorrhoids or piles is handicapped in the race for power and advancement. It is impossible to concentrate the mental energies when this dreadful trouble is sapping the vital forces. To show how easily this success-destroying trouble can be overcome, we publish the following letter from a prominent Indiana man.

"When I received the former letter and booklet on 'Piles, their nature, cause and cure,' I was in a critical condition. Ulcers to the number of seven had formed on the inside of the rectum, culminating in a large tumor on the outside resembling fistula. I suffered the most excruciating pain, could get no rest day or night. After reading the booklet I sent to my druggist but he happened to be out of Pyramid Pile Cure just at that time. However, I obtained a part of a box from my brother-in-law and began their use. Five pyramids completely cured me. I procured a box later, but have had no occasion to use them. I have been waiting to see that the cure was permanent, before writing you of its success. I believe Pyramid Pile Cure to be the greatest and best pile cure on the market, and ask you to please accept of my grateful thanks for this invaluable remedy. I take great pleasure in recommending its use to any sufferer along this line. You may use my name if you wish for reference to anyone afflicted with this disease." J. O. LITTELL, Arthur, Ind.

You can obtain a free sample of this wonderful remedy, also the booklet described above by writing your name and address plainly on a postal card and mailing it to the Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich.

Dr. H. L. Willett at the University of Arkansas.

The faculty, the students, and the people generally owe Brother Willett a lasting debt of gratitude for the splendid course of lectures delivered in the chapels of the university on "The Beginning of Christianity." It is the universal opinion that nothing equal to these addresses has ever before been delivered in this institution. The students showed their appreciation by attending in ever-increasing numbers, and by co-operating with the lecturer in the Bible readings. Brother Willett has laid a foundation broad and deep for our proposed Bible chair work.

The morning lectures in the First Christian Church commanded the attendance and the most respectful attention of many of the most thoughtful and cultivated people in the town. Also the pastors of the city and many from the surrounding country heard with delight and general approval every one of the lectures. The speaker's modesty, great ability, fascinating discourse and unflinching fidelity to the truth won for him the love, the confidence, and the esteem of all who heard. He lives far above any poor words, either of praise or blame. Shakespeare must have had in mind such a man when he wrote:

"His years are young, but his experience old;
His head unmellowed, but his judgment ripe;
And in a word (for far behind his worth Come all the praises I sure bestow),
He is complete in feature and in mind,
With all good graces to grace a gentleman."

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

Popular Hymns No. 2.

By C. C. CLINE.

The ruling purpose of the author has been to give to the public a worthy successor of Popular Hymns. He has not sought to duplicate it, but to make a book as well adapted to the new methods of Church, Sunday-school and C. E. work as the first was to the conditions twenty years ago when Popular Hymns was launched upon its long and useful career. POPULAR HYMNS No. 2 is better than its predecessor, not because it contains better music, but because the music is better adapted to the present wants of all the working forces of the army of the Lord.

Evangelists will find the Gospel Proclamation in Song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

Choristers will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

Christian Endeavorers will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-inspiring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing. The Solos, Duets, and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. Superintendents who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church.

Pastors who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed will not find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed unless it be to keep in style.

Like its predecessor, IT IS AN ALL ROUND BOOK.

"The judgment in this case will be reversed and the defendant discharged," is the ruling of the Supreme Court of Missouri in the case of Edward Butler, who was convicted by the lower Court of attempted bribery. As Mr. Butler is by all odds the most prominent figure among the boodling politicians of Missouri and his conviction gave the liveliest satisfaction to good citizens of both parties, we shall consider the case at some length. The opinion of the Supreme Court, which is written by Judge James D. Fox, and concurred in by Judges P. F. Gantt and J. Burgess, is a formidable document of fifty-seven typewritten pages. It recites at length, the evidence upon which Mr. Butler was convicted. The chief facts upon which the conviction was based, and which have been neither disproved or denied, are as follows: On September 11, 1901, the City Council of St. Louis passed an ordinance authorizing the Board of Health to receive bids and let the contract for the disposal of the garbage of the City of St. Louis. On September 13, this ordinance was approved by the House of Delegates, and on September 17, it was signed by the mayor and went immediately into effect as it contained an emergency clause. On the evening of September 16, the day before the bill became a law, Ed. Butler called at the residence of Dr. Henry N. Chapman, a member of the Board of Health, and offered him $2,500 if he would vote to let the garbage contract to a certain company in which Butler was interested. Dr. Chapman refused the money. The following day the mayor signed the bill authorizing the Board of Health to let the contract. The contract was let to Butler's company and for more than two years it has been enjoying the benefits of it, during which time neither Butler nor any city official nor any citizen has thought of denying the validity of the contract or the ordinance under which it was let. It was chiefly on the testimony of Dr. Chapman that Butler was convicted of attempted bribery and sentenced to three years in the penitentiary. The defense has freely conceded the facts as above outlined, but has succeeded in winning from the Supreme Court a decision that Mr. Butler's conduct as above described is not bribery, and is not punishable as a crime in the State of Missouri.

The statute defining bribery, quoted by the Supreme Court, reads as follows (omitting non-essential clauses):
The Law and the Argument. "Every person who shall directly or indirectly, offer to give any money to any public officer of this state, or any city thereof, with intent to influence his vote, opinion, judgment or decision on any question which may, by law, be brought before him in his official capacity, shall be guilty of the attempt to bribe." Thus, there are three necessary elements which must be present in order that there may be a valid charge of attempt to bribe: (1) a public officer; (2) an attempt to influence his vote by money or its equivalent; (3) the vote which it is desired to influence must be upon some question which may, by valid law, be brought before the said officer in his official capacity.

The argument is summarized in the following brief paragraphs from Judge Fox's decision:

1. That under the provisions of the charter of the city of St. Louis there was no authority in the Assembly to adopt the ordinance introduced in evidence authorizing the Board of Health to let the contract for the sanitary disposal of garbage collected from the public streets and alleys of the city and from private premises.

2. That the testimony failed to show that at the date of the alleged attempted bribery the ordinance authorizing the letting of the contract for the removal of the garbage had been approved and signed by the Mayor, and for that reason there was no ordinance in existence at the time the alleged offer was made.

The Court holds, therefore, that there was no attempt at bribery, within the meaning of the statute, because the third of the above mentioned elements was lacking. And this element was lacking, first, because the municipal assembly did not have the right to authorize the Board of Health to let the garbage contract; and second, because the ordinance authorizing the contract, even if it was valid, was not signed by the Mayor, until after the offer of money by Mr. Butler. It is upon this ground that "the judgment of this case will be reversed and the defendant discharged."

We feel no hesitancy in saying that this opinion of the Missouri Supreme Court is one of the most remarkable documents of its kind on record. Whether the fault is with the wording of the law or with the interpretation of it, the result is as monstrous a perversion of justice as was ever perpetrated upon a helpless commonwealth. In all the fifty-seven pages of the court's decision, filled as they are with legal technicalities and subtleties and confusions, there is not room for a word of condemnation for an act which is none the less a blow at good government, if every word that the court says about the technicalities is true and pertinent. It is not denied that Mr. Butler offered money to a public official to influence his vote upon a measure which Butler himself and the official and everyone else supposed that official was legally authorized to vote upon. It is not denied that there was intent to corrupt a public official for purpose of private gain. It is not denied that the measure in connection with which that attempt was made has been enforced as valid during the intervening two years. But suddenly, when it is needed, a technicality comes to light to invalidate the ordinance and save from the charge of bribery the very man who has been enjoying the benefits of the contract awarded under this ordinance during the two years of its supposed validity. Is it not singular, and convenient, that this garbage ordinance should have been valid so long as Mr. Butler needed it to be valid, and that it promptly became invalid when its invalidity could serve him better? If all this is the honest result of applying the necessary technicalities of the law, it is strange that in the long decision of the Supreme Court there was not room for a word of regret that in this particular case the technicalities did not serve the ends of justice. It is not an unheard-of thing for a court to reprimand an offender and condemn his course, even when a legal technicality prevents his punishment. The Supreme Court of Missouri takes no such attitude toward Mr. Butler. There is not a word in this decision which would wound the feelings of the most sensitive boodler. The St. Louis Republic (Democrat) strikes the right note when it says: "This decision will have an effect in intensifying the importance of boodle as an issue."

If the Supreme Court's interpretation and application of the statute defining bribery is correct, let us see a few things which would not be bribery in the state of Missouri. It would not be bribery to offer money to a judge to gain his decision, if it fining bribery is correct, let us see a few things which would not be bribery in the state of Missouri. It would not be bribery to offer money to a judge to gain his decision, if it should later be decided on appeal that the court had no proper jurisdiction over that case. To be sure, the judge might think he was being bribed, and the one who offered the money might think he was offering a bribe, but both would be proved to be innocent and exemplary citizens, if a higher court should decide after two or three years that the judge had no real authority in the case. Again, according to Judge Fox's doctrine, it would not be bribery to offer money to a mayor or a governor to secure his signature to a bill which the legislative branch is about to pass, but has not yet passed; for the executive officer has no authority to act until the legislative department has taken its action. Again—and a still more interesting illustration—it would not have been bribery if Mr. Butler himself had offered to the members of the Supreme Court (Fox, et al) money or political influence or some other valuable consideration, to gain a favorable verdict in this very case, provided the offer were made before the appeal was taken from the lower court. The Supreme Court had no jurisdiction until the case was appealed—no more than the Board of Health had over the garbage contract before the mayor signed the bill authorizing the contract—so an offer before the appeal would not have been bribery, but merely a private transaction between friends. In fact, if this interpretation of the law is legitimate, all that we can legally expect of our judges, mayors, governors, legislators and lobbyists, is that they exercise a certain degree of prescience, and carry on their operations somewhat ahead of the official schedule. Let the lobbyists "fix" the law makers before the bills are introduced, and it will not be bribery. Let them "see" the executives before the bills are passed by the legislative bodies, and it will not be bribery. Let the boodlers buy the friendship of the higher courts before the cases are appealed, and it will not be bribery. If this be law, the golden age of boodleism is just beginning. What we have so far seen is only the first gray streaks of dawn. The new day of triumphant corruption will break when the enterprising lobbyists and professional corruptionists of this "imperial commonwealth" become fully apprised of the bearing of this glorious new principle of jurisprudence.

When is a Briber

With the coming of winter the Macedonian question assumes a new phase. The ravages of the Turkish soldiery are ended—for a time. But supplies of food are exhausted, crops are destroyed, houses have been burned, clothing has been carried off or wantonly destroyed, villages have been pillaged. Thousands of lives have been taken, but those who were spared are now confronted by a pressing lack of the means whereby they must live. They must be helped. They are Christian people, and they have a right to look to Christian people for aid. The Christian Herald, of New York, is raising a fund which will be used carefully and wisely, and the Macedonian Relief Committee, of New York, is collecting a similar fund. We gladly publish the following appeal sent out by the latter body. Money may properly be sent to either address.

What Paul saw in the spirit, the man of Macedonia, who called to him for help for his country, we have before us in the flesh. The suffering and destitution, resulting from insurrection in Macedonia, are extreme. Twenty-five thousand Macedonians have managed to cross the border into Bulgaria. Several times that number remain in Macedonia, homeless, their herds and crops destroyed, perishing of cold and starvation. Everyone is familiar to some extent with the conditions which have prevailed in that unhappy country for the last two years and more, the active agitation of the Macedonian revolutionists, the rising in rebellion of a portion of the Macedonian people, the attempt of the Turkish authorities to suppress the revolution with the utmost severity by overwhelming force. With the rights and wrongs of the Macedonians we are not now concerned, but we cannot help being concerned with the relief of fellow human beings and fellow Christians, of innocent women and children, who are perishing by the hundred and will perish by the thousand, most cruelly, unless Christian Europe and Christian America come to the rescue.

At this Christmas season, with its thought of peace and good will, of joy and merry-making, tens of thousands of villagers, stripped of everything but the clothes on their backs, are facing the winter cold without food. We appeal to you for contributions to aid the destitute and suffering Macedonians in Bulgaria and Macedonia. For some months, not less, certainly, than $1,000 a day are required to relieve the most pressing wants—clothing, food, fuel. Ten times that sum could be used to advantage. All contributions sent to the Trust Company of America as treasurer, 149 Broadway, New York, or Kidder, Peabody & Co., Boston, will be forwarded without expense. American missionaries in the field will superintend wisely and economically the distribution of all sums thus forwarded for purposes of relief to all sufferers without regard to race or religion.

Prof. William Ramsay, the eminent London chemist, has announced that under certain conditions radium has been changed into helium. The two elements were supposed to be as completely different as gold and iron. And now, since one chemical element has been transformed into another, the question is raised in hot haste whether any element may not be transformed into other; in other words, whether the dream of the alchemists is to come true by the transmutation of base metals into gold. The general excitement on this subject strikes us as premature. It does not follow, because radium gas gives the spectrum lines of helium, that lead may be turned into silver, and iron into gold, at a cost which would leave a margin of profit. Besides, even the radium-helium transformation is subject to limitations. Professor Ramsay says it would take two million years for a very small quantity of pure radium to be changed into pure helium. Even if iron could be turned into gold at the same rate, it would be several thousand times more profitable to sell the iron and put the proceeds out at interest. There is more money in iron and steel than in gold, anyway. Whatever may be the outcome of Professor Ramsay's discovery, our busy age will go right on turning steel and coal and leather and wheat into gold, not by chemistry, but by commerce.

Some Obsolete Types of Evangelism.

We have been stating, heretofore, what are some of the essential elements of New Testament evangelism. It may be well to state here, by way of contrast, some types of evangelism which, if not entirely obsolete, are certainly obsolescent. They are found now only in out-of-the-way sections of the country. We do not say they have accomplished no good, but we are quite sure that with the good they have accomplished, they have also wrought much evil.

One of these types was, when the "set time for favoring Zion" had arrived, in the judgment of the evangelist and the church, the preacher would indulge in harrowing incidents, in pathetic stories, in deathbed scenes, and in every way, by sermon, by song and by prayer, the appeal was made to the emotions. The efforts of the preachers to excite the emotions of the people were sometimes pathetic, if not absurd. When the sermon with its stories had failed to accomplish the desired result, we have known the congregation to be requested, while a song was being sung, to pass around and give the preacher their hands in token of their desire to go to heaven! Sometimes the method of voting is resorted to, by which the people present are asked to express themselves as to their ultimate destination, or their present intentions. The impression which all this makes on a thoughtful mind is not difficult to imagine; that any such person should be influenced by it to desire and purpose to become a Christian is scarcely conceivable.

But often the gospel is preached in a way to make men sincerely desirous of forsaking their sins and becoming Christians. In such cases we have known large companies of people to be invited forward, not to confess Christ, not even to confess their sins, but to pray and to be prayed for, that they may then and there receive the evidence of their conversion and of forgiveness, by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Some of the saddest sights we have ever witnessed have been scores of sincere, earnest seekers after the way of life, agonizing and praying, day and night, for weeks, under the expectation of some overwhelming emotion of ecstasy or divine power, that would lift them instantaneously from all shadow of doubt or fear, into the cloudless realm of certainty and of salvation; and failing to receive any light or any comfort until despair would settle down upon their hearts. Sometimes this has led to skepticism of the reality of all religion, and in other cases it has resulted in a feeling of despair as to their own salvation, thinking that while others might be saved, they were to be passed by. In such meetings the whole teaching has been to impress these seekers with the fact that they had done all that could be expected, on their part, and that it was only a matter of waiting upon God and beseeching Him to do His part.

We need not point out how remote all this is from, not to say antagonistic to, the New Testament process of conversion. There, God is represented as waiting to be gracious. He is seeking the lost in the person of Jesus Christ. He is ready to save all that will come unto Him through Christ. The power which the apostles relied upon to bring men to repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, was the gospel of Christ, "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." The mistake, in the type of evangelism indicated above, was, that the people were taught to look inward for some great sensation or feeling, instead of looking to Christ, by faith, and casting themselves upon His mercy, through compliance with the conditions upon which He offers to receive them. It was grievous injustice to the divine Father to represent Him as withholding pardon and peace from seeking and agonizing souls, when He is so ready and willing to grant forgiveness and peace to those who will accept Christ and surrender to him.

There is another type of evangelism that may be described as almost the opposite to that which has been mentioned above. Instead of laying all the emphasis, as above indicated, upon the divine side, and leaving nothing for the seeking soul to do, it almost neglects the divine side, and iterates and reiterates the conditions with which the alien sinner must comply, in order to be saved, until these are conceived of, often, in a mechanical way, and the whole process is too external and formal. Great stress is laid upon the outward confession of Christ, with the mouth, and in baptism, and little emphasis is given to the spiritual needs of the soul, and the deeper meanings of faith and repentance, and to the absolute necessity of a renewal of the heart by the regenerative power of God, in order to live the Christian life.

Sometimes this type of evangelism lays immense stress upon numbers, and at each invitation the people are reminded of how many have been added, and the desirability of making the number so many more. There is about this, too, that which repels thoughtful people as too mechanical, and too superficial, to be permanently helpful. This method, like the previous one, if not wholly obsolete, is rapidly becoming so. It was the result of the extreme reaction from the excesses of supernaturalism which had been indulged in by previous methods. It would be unjust to say that either of the types mentioned have commended themselves to the judgment of the religious peoples among whom they have existed. They have been abuses and extreme developments of teaching which lacked some of the essential elements of New Testament evangelism.

What the world needs, what the church is waiting for, is a type of evangelism which shall unite all the seriousness, the earnestness, the spiritual devotion, the prayer and the dependence upon divine power, of the original evangelism, with the clear presentation of the New Testament conditions of surrender to Christ, and with the proper emphasis of human responsibility in the matter of salvation. The evangelist who is to command the attention of thoughtful men to-day, must blend in his preaching and methods, this waiting upon God for His guidance and power, with an appeal to the human reason and to the human conscience, that is in harmony with the laws of man's mental and moral constitution, and his whole aim must be so to bring the power of God to bear upon the souls of men, that they shall surrender their wills to the divine Will, and find in Christ the solution of their deepest problems, the fulfillment of their highest aspirations, and the satisfaction of their profoundest needs. We have a number of such evangelists. May their tribe increase!

Philadelphia and the Christian Endeavor Conference.

We were accompanied by Bro. F. D. Power and a company of other Christian Endeavorers from Washington to Philadelphia, on Tuesday, the 1st inst. This visit was to attend the semi-annual or mid-winter meeting of the trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. There were, besides about sixty trustees, probably about two hundred active Endeavor workers in local unions from various states, also present, to participate in this conference. These meetings were held in the Parish House of Holy Trinity Church, which is the old Episcopal Church where Phillips Brooks began his ministry. It is a very large building, separate entirely from the church proper, used for all manner of meetings connected with the business of the church, and containing, among other rooms, a hall admirably adapted to our purposes. Dr. Tompkins, the rector, not only gave us a hearty welcome, but participated freely in the meetings, showing a most brotherly spirit in all his intercourse with us.

The Conference Idea.

These Christian Endeavor conferences are designed chiefly for two purposes: First, the cultivation of the spiritual life of the members and mutual acquaintanceship; and second, to discuss the practical problems which arise in connection with carrying on the work of the individual societies and the local, district and state unions. We were impressed with the great practical value of such conferences or institutes, and we believe they can be employed much more widely than they have been in every department of Christian work. The mass meeting, no doubt, has its place and purpose. As a means of inspiration it has no substitute. But when it comes to dealing with practical difficulties and how best to overcome them, the conference of workers is far superior. Dr. Clark, Secretary Vogt, Treasurer Shaw, Editor Wells, and other experts, conducted most valuable conferences covering every phase of Christian Endeavor work. They served to focus the light from the experience of every worker on every practical difficulty. The value of these conferences grows out of the fact that these leaders of local, district and state unions will carry home with them the ideas, suggestions, methods, etc., brought out in these conferences, and hold similar institutes in their own localities.

Three things received emphasis in all these conferences: (1) The value of the Increase Campaign, showing what success has attended the efforts thus far, and how this work should be continued; (2) the value of the conference or institute idea; and (3) the adaptation of Christian Endeavor to local conditions and needs. The total effect on the minds of those who participated in this conference is that Christian Endeavor is a wonderful instrumentality, possessing marvelous adaptability and power for developing the religious life and character of young people, in training them for Christian service, and in extending the kingdom of God. That is a wise church, and he is a wise pastor, that makes much use of this instrumentality for the building up of the church. We greatly desire to see a Christian Endeavor Society in every one of our Christian churches.

A Devotional Hour.

There was one session of the trustees alone, which deserves mention. Dr. Clark led the meeting, stating in the beginning we were not to discuss Christian Endeavor, or methods of any kind, but that we had met to wait upon God, to speak to Him and to one another, out of our hearts, and to be spoken to by Him. It was a very honest, candid, heart-to-heart meeting, in which each one spoke out of the fullness of his heart, not hesitating to mention his difficulties as well as his joy in Christian life. The spirit of fellowship which prevails among these trustees is as delightful as anything we have ever known. It makes one realize, anew, how strong are the bonds which bind Christian people together in spite of their denominational divisions. Is this not a prophecy of the time when such divisions will not be deemed necessary or even permissible in the furtherance of God's kingdom on earth?

A Visit to Mr. Wanamaker's.

On Thursday evening the trustees accepted the invitation of Mr. John Wanamaker, the merchant prince, to go out to his country home, "Lindenhurst," and take dinner with him and look at his pictures. A special car had been chartered for us, and we had a very delightful social time, going out ten miles to his splendid country mansion, where he and his wife and daughter welcomed us, and made us feel at home. Mr. Wanamaker is a prince of entertainers. His private art gallery contains many of the finest works of art to be had in this and other lands. It would be a respectable public art gallery, and will probably eventually be given to the public. The crowning works of art which he possesses, however, and those in which he takes most interest, are the great master-pieces of Munkacsy, "Christ Before Pilate," and "Christ on Calvary." It was while the trustees were standing in perfect silence in front of the latter, that Mr. Wanamaker quoted softly, and with great feeling, the verse,

"Oh, Lamb of God, thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power,
Till all the ransomed Church of God
Be saved to sin no more."

Someone started the verse, and we all sang it very softly. It was a very solemn and impressive moment.

The dinner served, and dispatched with many a story and many a wise remark—Mr. Wanamaker took us upstairs to his library, and showed us an ancient copy of the Bible and talked to us of the "Brotherhood" he had recently formed among the working men. He then helped to speed his parting guests back to the evening meeting, but not until he had given to each of the trustees, as a souvenir of the visit to his home, a copy of Charles Wagner's "Simple Life," suitably inscribed. It was a very pleasant visit, and gave us an opportunity of becoming acquainted with each other as well as with Mr. Wanamaker. A man who can conduct a twenty million dollar business annually, run a large Sunday-school, preach a funeral discourse now and then as he may be called, and identify himself with all of the public life of his city and state, and at one time of the nation, is no ordinary man; and this Mr. Wanamaker is doing.

Christian Endeavor Rallies.

In the evening rallies were held in different churches of the city. It fell to the lot of the writer and Bro. A. B. Philputt, of Indianapolis, to address a large meeting in West Philadelphia at the Tabernacle Presbyterian Church. Dr. Wayland Hoyt conducted us to the church and led the devotional exercises. In conversation with him on the way, we asked him if he did not believe Christian Endeavor to be one of the greatest movements in the last quarter of a century working for real Christian unity. He said he believed it was, and that he regretted very much that some of the religious bodies, including his own brethren (Baptists) had organized their young people in a separate organization. The Disciples of Christ, he said, had been very wise in espousing Christian Endeavor so heartily, and they would receive great benefit from it.

Welcome to Bro. Philputt.

We must not omit to mention a very delightful social occasion at the First Christian Church on Wednesday evening. The church had planned to extend a reception and welcome to its former pastor, A. B. Philputt, and Brother Power and the editor of this paper were invited to be present by the pastor, Brother Batman. Brother Power was prevented from going with us by sickness. We had the privilege of attending the meeting, in company with Dr. Montgomery, whose guest we were, and Brother Philputt. We arrived at the church at nine o'clock, and as Brother Philputt walked down the aisle arm in arm with the present pastor, he was greeted with the Chattanooga salute by the entire assembled audience. After a few moments of handshaking and social intercourse, Brother Philputt was called upon and made a very tender and appropriate address. Brief talks were made also by the writer and Chaplain C. Q. Wright, of the Navy. It was a very pleasant occasion. Brother Batman, the new pastor, has made a decidedly favorable impression upon the church, and his work starts off hopefully.

A Social Hour.

At a luncheon at the Windsor Hotel on Thursday, given by our local ministers to their visiting brethren, we had the pleasure of a pleasant social hour with Bro. Lewis G. Batman, First Church; G. P. Rutledge, of the Third Church; H. A. Blake, of the Sixth Church; C. C. Garrigues, of the Kensington Church; A. G. Baker, of the Fifteenth Street Church, and Brother Talmage, the editor of their paper, The Christian Herald. Brother Philputt was also present at the luncheon, and the hour together was much enjoyed in talking over the interests of our cause in the east. The brethren all feel that Philadelphia is an extremely difficult field in which to plant the cause of our reformation. Philadelphia impresses one, almost more than any other city in the country, as having become fixed in its ways. But even here, no doubt, with proper patience, wisdom and perseverance, churches may be built up according to the New Testament pattern, as we understand it. Conditions here are very different from what they are in the west, and this fact must be borne in mind in estimating the labors of the brethren in this eastern field.

"Mine Host."

We found a delightful home in the family of Dr. Montgomery, who had telegraphed us an invitation to make his residence our headquarters while in the city. The Doctor is one of the pillars of the First Church and stands at the very head of his profession as a skilled surgeon, and is widely known and esteemed as a man and a citizen. We have already spoken of the illness of Bro. Power, and of the care he was receiving from Dr. Montgomery and his family in their splendid home. We regret at this writing we are unable to report Bro. Power's condition, but we are hopeful for the best. We also had an invitation from Bro. Walter S. Burns, formerly of St. Louis, to stop with him and his family while in the city. On account of his residence being out in a suburb, we did not have this pleasure, but availed ourself of the accommodations of his office in the city, where he is manager of an important business.

The weather was very disagreeable during our trip to the east and our stay there, but in spite of this fact and of some temporary illness, the result of cold, we greatly enjoyed the visit, and shall carry with us many helpful lessons and pleasant memories growing out of it.

Why Did It Fail?

We publish on page 805 an interesting article by Brother E. A. Orr, of Sioux Falls, S. D., entitled, "A Study of Union Revival Effort." It will be noticed that the writer of this article makes no attempt to lay down general propositions about union revival meetings, but simply reports the results of one union meeting as those results are estimated by the pastors of the co-operating churches. The method is strictly scientific. A single meeting cannot of course afford a sufficiently broad basis of observation to support any very large generalizations, but it would be well if this method of scientific observation could be more widely applied to the results, not only of evangelistic effort, but of many other forms of church work. We might learn some things. Observe that in the case studied, the pastors had little fault to find with the evangelist's preaching, and were not disposed to criticize him personally. But the fact is that the results were insignificant compared with the effort and expense. There are a good many more questions which we would like to have had submitted to the pastors touching their own activities in the meeting, and especially the efforts which they made in following up those who professed conversion. Probably more revivals fail for lack of an effective "follow up" system than from any other cause.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Have you never noticed how swiftly the Niagara River flows above the great cataract, as if it were impatient to make the plunge whose deafening roar is heard for miles, and whose sublime spectacle has excited the wonder and admiration of the world? We are approaching the Niagara of the year, when its mighty current rushes over the precipice of Time, and empties into the gulf of the Past. How swiftly the stream seems to flow as it nears the precipice! Only a few short days more and the melody of Christmas bells will give place to the dirge of the dying year. What remains to be done in this eventful year of 1903 must be done soon. Let us not procrastinate what should be done this year until the next, for the next will have duties of its own to employ all our time. Neither let us be anxious about the year to come, for sufficient unto each year is its own evil and its own care. What unfinished tasks have we for this good year of our Lord? To these let us bend all our energies.

As with the years, so it is with human life. How long are the years of childhood—the lapse of time between Christmases—the children's festival, and between birthdays! In youth, and young manhood and womanhood, the years are still long, and the school period—will it never end? Lads and lassies long for their majority, and time moves at a snail's pace until it is attained. After that the days and the years are shortened, somewhat. But it is not until the mirror points out a gray hair, here and there, that the years seem to chase each other across the stage of time into the eternity past. O the pathos of that first gray hair, or that first line of care! Who cannot predict a total eclipse, when the light first begins to grow dim, and the eye must have artificial reinforcement? Then time becomes very precious to one who has set for himself any life-tasks, and the years rush swiftly on to the inevitable Niagara. Its roar seems to fill our ears, and the breath of eternity is felt upon our brows. But it is not sad, for beyond Niagara the stream flows on to its appointed destiny.

The secret of defying time and the passing years is to preserve the heart of childhood, in spite of whitening hair and furrowed face. As long as one looks with a child's eyes of wonder on the world, and on the universe, with all the marvels they contain, and retains the child's heart of trust in the good Father whose hand made and guides all, he can never grow old in spirit. He has become a partaker of the divine life, and enjoys eternal youthhood. Says James Whitcomb Riley, "I never go about alone in the world as just Riley—the Riley I am now. There is always beside me the little lad who used to be I, and I can think his thoughts, and live his hopes and his tragedies now, just as much as when I looked like him." Ah! that is the secret of Riley's childhood poetry, and of his youthful, buoyant heart! Blessed is the man who can carry his child-life along with him as a companion of his age, that he may be able to enter into sympathy with childhood, and into that kingdom whose typical citizen is a little child.

We have not yet sounded the depths of Wordsworth's saying that "Heaven lies about us in our infancy." If we realized that, childhood would seem more sacred and better worth our reverent study and imitation. Much less have we understood our Lord's statement, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." The humility, the confiding trust, the purity of heart, the teachableness, the eagerness to learn, of little children—these are essential conditions of citizenship in the kingdom of God. If we really grow in grace, we grow in likeness to childhood, in the traits above mentioned, and hence in our appreciation of childhood. Why should a citizen of a "kingdom which cannot be moved," be disturbed by the demolitions of Time, or the ravages of age? Let the swift years fly as they will. He is a child of eternity!

Notes and Comments.

In his Thanksgiving proclamation, Governor Yates, of Illinois, says the United States has "tolerated all civilized theology." Yes, we have been more generous than that. We have tolerated some semi-civilized and barbarous types of theology. There has been no end to our tolerance in the line of theological absurdities.

Bro. McGarvey is making some kindly criticisms on "Helps to Faith" in his department of Biblical Criticism in the Christian Standard. Most of his criticisms are based on a misapprehension of the kind of people the author of the book is addressing himself to. He does not pretend to deal with the scoffer, nor with the "fool," who "saith in his heart, there is no God." The book is dedicated "to all lovers of truth who are seeking a stable foundation on which to build a faith that will give strength, comfort, and inspiration for service here, and a triumphant hope for the life hereafter," and to such his arguments are addressed. It is noteworthy that the Bible does not argue the existence of a God, but declares it. It is always allowable to assume any truth, which, when stated, finds an answering response in an honest heart.

Referring to and quoting a statement from the book, that "No one has ever offered any possible explanation of the rise and progress of Christianity without the fact of the resurrection of Jesus, and the living Christ," Bro. McGarvey says:

If he had said reasonable explanation, or even probable explanation, he could have maintained his position successfully; but to say that no possible explanation of the rise and progress of Christianity, without the fact of the resurrection, has ever been offered, is to ignore the explanations offered by such authors as Christian Bauer, Straus, Renan, and even Harnack, now regarded by his admirers as the greatest living historian. I cannot well account for these statements of the author, and I suggest that in a future edition of his book he consider and reconstruct them.

With all deference to Bro. McGarvey's opinion, we would have to write under the explanations of Bauer, Straus and Renan, impossible. This is the verdict of criticism to-day, which utterly rejects the untenable theories of these men, and remands them to the junk pile of exploded speculations.

Gaspar, Melchior and Balthazar

By F. D. Power

"Whence come ye?" asks Herod of the wise men. "From the East." "And your errand?" "To find the promised King of the Jews." "A fool's errand; I alone am King of the Jews." "Nay, we cannot be wrong. We came under divine guidance. We followed the star." Then they tell their story. They had expected to find the Jewish prince in the Holy City, but finding him not, they resume their journey to Bethlehem.

Who are these wise men? Tradition says they they were kings.

"We three kings of Orient are,
Bearing gifts we journey afar.
Flood and fountain, moor and mountain,
Following yonder star."

In the great cathedral at Cologne they say they have the relics of these men, and they tell you their names—Gaspar, Melchior and Balthazar and show you their skulls, but there is no evidence that this is so. Wise men they were, belonging to a creed of hoary and venerable antiquity, magians, Persian priests. Truth-seekers they were. To be a truth-seeker is to belong to the noblest sect; none nobler unless it be a truth-finder. Yes, it is even nobler, for if an angel should put in one's hand Truth, or Search after Truth, he would be wise to take Search after Truth, so glorious is the quest.

There is deep significance in the homage of the magi. Philosophy has become Christian. Science does homage to Christ. The mind of the Master has not only entered the temple and made it the house of prayer, but has entered the temple of learning and sanctified it. Human wisdom bends before the child, becomes childlike, says in its greatest apostle: "I am but a child, picking up pebbles on the seashore and finding here and there a smoother or a prettier pebble than ordinary, while the great ocean of truth lies undiscovered before me." The whole universe leads to Christ. The heavens declare the glory of God. The stars speak of divine wisdom, order and harmony. The center of the solar system tells of the Sun of Righteousness. And these wise men are seekers after light. The magian system was called the system of light. "Light is eternal. The Lord of the universe is light," saith Zoroaster. "Light! Light! Give light, and let us die!" was the prayer of the ancient world. The wish for light, the longing for an epiphany, the desire for the manifestation of God, which is the desire of all nations, is represented in these three men. "The Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising."

What guides them? The star. God always aids us in earnest effort to solve the problem of destiny. A seeking sinner finds a seeking Savior. The father goes forth to meet the prodigal, and while he is "yet a great way off," his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell upon his neck, and kissed him." Somewhere in heaven is a star to lead every anxious, questioning, earnest-seeking soul.

"Jesus, my Savior, to Bethlehem came.
Born in a manger to sorrow and shame.
Oh, it was wonderful, blest be his name,
Seeking for me, for me."

How men have sought to get rid of the supernatural here! Speculations about the conjunction of planets—Saturn and Jupiter—a fiery Trigon in the constellation of the Fish, and all that. If "the heavens themselves blaze at the death of princes," there can be nothing impossible or even improbable about the story of the star. God says: "Seek and ye shall find." God provides for the ingathering of the Gentiles. God could place an angel with a torch in the skies to guide these men. Students of the stars, worshipers of the heavens, their astronomy, a science born of man's need of religion, was the pathway to the Savior. Under the serene and beautiful skies of the East, men, going forth like Isaac to meditate at eventide, would naturally associate with the mysterious worlds above them the thought of the dwelling place of Deity and fancy that these heavenly bodies in their mystic movement must have some strange relation to human life and destiny. This has helped men's faith. An undevout astronomer is mad. Some have talked with Goethe about, "Stars silent above; graves silent beneath." Some have declared with Prof. Clifford: "This is the end of my philosophy; a soulless earth looked down upon by a Godless heaven." Some have sung with Matthew Arnold:

"Now he is dead! For hence he lies
In the lone Syrian town,
And on his grave with shining eyes
The Syrian stars look down."

But God be praised, the great multitude have believed and followed the star. True science, reverent science, sees God as Galileo saw him in the straw on his dungeon floor. "How do you know?" a Bedouin was asked, "that there is a God?" "In the same way that I know whether a man or a camel has crossed the desert—by his footprints in the world about me." "Gentlemen, who made all that?" asked Napoleon on the deck of the ship, of the young officers who were proclaiming their atheism, as he waved his hand toward the stars. "We are going to pull down your churches and your steeples—all that recalls the superstitions of past ages, all that brings to your minds the idea of God," said a Red Republican of 1793, to a peasant of La Vendee. "Citizens," said the peasant, "pull down the stars then!"

The very stars look like promises.

God could never show us a thing he did not mean to give us. Jesus is himself the star that should come out of Jacob. To all the race he is the bright and morning star. God guides the magi by the star, as mariners are guided at sea.

What now is the quest? "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" Where is he? is the question of these ancient sages—a question which still challenges the human mind. He came. He walked a divine Being among men. He pitied, loved, counseled. He took upon him the form of a servant. He hung upon a Roman cross and died as we die, and was laid in a tomb as we are laid. He arose from the grave, from earth, and a cloud received him out of sight. Where is he? We want him. We pray not for things: we want God. We ask not for stars: we wish the sun. "What seek ye?" he asked. "Where dwellest thou?" We seek nothing but thee. "Mary!" She answered, "Rabboni!" that was all—all-saving, all-satisfying, all-sufficient, all in all.

Where is he? With us at this Christmas-tide, still here in the church, in the ordinances, in the worship, in the hearts and lives of his people, in the great movements of history, in the thought of the world, in the department of morals, in the realm of religion, in our domestic and social and even national life; having no home, yet in our homes, in our Lord's days, our Christmas days, our sick days, our sorrowing days, our days of gladness, joy and peace, in the world's life, the world's sorrow, the world's future—he lives, he reveals himself, his star is shining. What would the world be without him? What would your heart be without him? What would Christmas be without him?

"A rain-swept earth and a wind-swept sky,
And grey mists trailing low;
A wailing wind and a troubled sea,
With a moan in its ebb and flow:
And a soul at war with itself and God,
A heart surcharged with woe.
"A rosy light in a cloudless sky,
And a new born earth below;
A golden mist on a sapphire sea,
With an anthem in its flow:
And a soul at peace with itself and God,
A soul with love aglow."

What, finally, is the treasure-trove? "The star stood over where the young child was." The magians enter, and lo, a child—a child upon the breast of its mother. Is that all? All. All stars lead to day to Bethlehem. Here is the end of all wisdom, the end of all searching. Heaven and earth gather around the manger. All streams of prophecy converge here. All glowing lines of history radiate here. All the hopes of Abraham, all the dreams of David, all the visions of Isaiah are realized here. Back then to the child Spirit. Bend beside the cradle. The King comes as a child, and finding the Child we find the King.

A Study of a Union Revival Effort

The meeting of which this is a study, was held in a typical western city of more 15,000 population. There were eight churches, seven denominations uniting in the meeting. The evangelist is a man of fine abilities, far above the average in this respect. Indeed he enjoys a national reputation. The meetings continued three weeks, including four Sundays.

The evangelist had the confidence of the pastors uniting, and he was allowed to organize the Christian workers of the several churches in his own way. The direct and visible results were just 500 reported conversions at a cost to the community of over $1,200. The building, a commodious auditorium, cost nothing. So that all the money went into the meetings, the evangelist and his singer getting over $900.

The following list of questions was given to each of the eight uniting pastors. All these pastors returned signed answers, except one, the one not reporting having one of the smallest churches in the city, and being the greatest distance from the place of meeting. The lack of this church's report does not much effect the whole report. The answers were collected, as below, and reported to the ministerial association of the city holding the meeting. All were surprised and disappointed at the apparent meager results of the meetings.

But for the profit of the Christian public, the list of questions with the signed answers of the seven pastors in their own words, is appended. The reader can draw his own inferences. The writer submits this study in the hope that some such study and report of these union revival services will become more common.

The Questions With Their Answers.

1. How many names of reported converts did you receive?

Eighty-five, mostly children. 24 nearly all children. about 75. 19. 25. 33. 34. (Total, 295.)

2. How many have you received into your church?

Forty. None. 15. None. About 8. 12. 10. (Total 85.)

3. How many of those you received into the church were not already in touch with it through the preaching, Sunday-school or young people's service?

Not one. None. Nearly all were already in touch. None. None. None. None.

4. How many heads of families have you received?

None. None. None. None. None. None. None.

5. Give reasons for believing that you would not have received these through your local work.

Think nearly all would have been reached. No reason for believing that they would. Believe all could have been reached. Would have reached all. Believe all would have been reached.

6. What evidence have you that the meetings have added to the spiritual strength of your church?

Not much. None whatever. Attendance at prayer-meeting doubled. We have lost. None. None. None.

7. Is your church appreciably stronger financially?

Not at all. No. Possibly some. No. No. No. No.

8. Have you any reason for believing that the community, as a whole, was effected for good?

Some, but not greatly. No. The moral tone has been strengthened. Don't think so. Can't tell. Hope so. No. A very little.

9. What is your candid opinion of the evangelist—was he reverent, pious, meek, conscientious, unselfish, etc.?

All but the last. Matt. 7:1. Yes. Mixed.

10. What do you think of the method of reaching and receiving converts?

Don't like it—not thorough. Too superficial. Have no criticism to offer. Not spiritual, but mechanical. Amounts to nothing. Don't like it. Not good.

11. Was the preaching evangelical, doctrinal, and clear as to conditions of salvation?

Yes. Scriptural. Yes. Yes. No. No. Yes, but not always definite.

12. Do you think the method of raising money and the amount raised will have a good or bad effect upon the city?

Don't like it. Some were prejudiced on account of the amount. Bad. Wholly bad. Bad. Bad.

13. Have you any good reason for believing that the extra enthusiasm of the meeting was not due more to the great congregation of united Christians than to the new preacher and preaching?

No local men would have drawn the people. More to the large congregation. Due to both influences. To both. Due more to the united effort. To both but more to first. In part to both.

14. Do you not believe that the union of our churches under the leadership and preaching of our pastors, and with the same advertising and effort

(a) Would have added as much to the real numerical strength of our churches?

If it was done as well. Yes. It might. Yes, to mine. Cannot tell. I do. Yes.

(b) Would have added as much to our spiritual strength?

Yes. Yes. Impossible to state. Yes. Yes. Yes. Yes.

(c) Would the city have as much or more respect for the pastors?

More. More. Hard to tell. About the same. At least as much—perhaps more. More. Yes.

(d) Would have been better for the pastors intellectually, spiritually and socially?

Yes. I think so. Do not know. Don't think so. Yes. It would. Yes.

15. What will be the probable effect upon those who expressed conversion, but who do not identify themselves with the church?

Always harmful with adults. Evil as all similar experiences. Dealing too lightly with a momentous issue. In most cases bad.

Observations on the Report.

Of the 500 reported conversions, the names of 295 were turned over to the pastors, and 85 of these were received into the churches.

Those received into the churches, less than one-fifth of the whole reported, were young people and children. No heads of families. All were in fellowship with the church, and there is good reason to believe they would all have been reached without such special effort.

There is no evidence that the uniting churches were in the least strengthened financially, and only one pastor reports any signs of spiritual strengthening.

The evidence of any good effect upon the public is very doubtful. Now, five months after the meeting, political corruption, liquor-selling, gambling, prostitution, and worldliness among Christians are just as evident as they were before the meeting.

A large part of the time for each of the three services of the last Sunday was taken up drumming for money. There is a decided opinion that the method of raising, and the amount of money raised, had a bad effect, and that the money could have been more wisely spent.

The prevailing opinion now is that the churches, the pastors, the community, and especially the converts would have been better off if the meeting had been held by the pastors themselves.

Sioux Falls, S. D.

Robert J. Burdette, when asked what was his favorite text in the Bible, wrote:

When I was seventeen or nineteen years old I could have given it as glibly as a child recites the "table of fives." But that was thirty-six years ago, and since then my experiences have multiplied. When I think of a favorite text, half a dozen dear ones at once leap to my lips: "As thy days so shall thy strength be." Stormy days I want a cloak; cold days, I want the sunny side of the wall; hot days, I want a shady path; now I want a shower of manna; now I want a drink of cool living water; now I want an arbor of rest; now I want a pilgrim's staff; now I want a sword—"a right Jerusalem blade." My "favorite text!" I might as well try to tell which is my favorite eye.

England's Puritan Prelate By W. Durban

It has for many years been one of my great pleasures to assist visitors to England with my advice and some little useful information as to places worth seeing and how to reach them. It has been one of my most agreeable functions to prevent intelligent and eager tourists from sticking exclusively to beaten tracks, and so to save them from missing some of the most wonderfully interesting spots in this marvelous land of historic remains. I have sometimes almost wished to give myself up to the office of guide to such folk.

Our Wonderland up North.

In the far north of England is one of the glorious localities dear to English hearts, but generally neglected by rushing sight-seers. The beautiful old city of Durham does not often occupy a place in the program of a globe-trotter or a foreign tripper. Yet there are scores of places less worthy of a visit which everyone thinks "must be done." My mind just now dwells on Durham because it is a favorite point amongst the hallowed shrines of England with people like myself, who delight in history in all three of its tenses. This country, in the mind of the genuine student, equilibrates the preterit, the present and the paullopost-future. The true Briton is not a fossil, though some of our American friends fancy we are all mildewed in our cerebral compartments of being. We are rather over conservative, and yet we love American progressiveness, and half of us are even more radical than the average Yankee. Give us a little credit for all-round sympathy, for we love to dwell on three levels in turns. I revelled in the incomparable old Norman abbeys in Sicily (far more wondrous than those in Normandy itself), and at the same time, have, on this side, written much in praise of the astonishing modernity of Washington and Buffalo, of New York and St. Clair.

Roman, Saxon and Norman England.

I am constrained to choose Durham as the topic of this article because of the pleasure with which I have been reading a new book by the bishop of that diocese. Before speaking of the volume and its author, I must mention a few things which may induce visitors to this country to take the famous northern city into their purview. They would never regret taking this counsel. They should plan to see York, Whitby, Scarborough, Filey, Middlesbrough, Stockton, Darlington, Hartlepool, Lindisfarne, Holy Island, Newcastle and Durham on one round. A week would be thus delightfully spent, and on the Scottish border a day might be passed with the Roman Emperor Hadrian, and with the historian, Tacitus, and the great General Agricola, in inspecting the remains of the grand old Roman wall on the edge of the Cheviots and of Northumbria. This is the concrete way of learning history and of escaping from bondage to the abstract.

The City of a Millennium.

It is no exaggeration to call Durham a city of a thousand years. Indeed, its grand historic record covers more than twice that period, for the Saxons were strong in that region before the Roman invader came with fire and sword to devastate the land that had been so magnificently evangelized by Bede and Cuthbert. I must mention the striking and indeed unique position of Durham Cathedral. From the picturesque point of view, it occupies the first place among English cathedrals. Its west front overlooks the deep gorge through which the river Wear rushes past the city on its way to the sea, while close at hand frowns on the same cliff—lined to the summit with thick woods—the hill fortress known as Durham Castle, where in early ages dwelt the famous and dreaded Norman ecclesiastics, the Prince Bishops of Durham, who were really provincial kings, exercising power of life and death, together with their episcopal jurisdiction. The first church on the site of the present cathedral was built of wood, from branches of trees close at hand, by the Abbot Ealdhun, who had caused the body of St. Cuthbert to be brought here from Chester-Le-Street, the former site of the See. Soon afterwards, in A. D. 999, a stone church was built to receive St. Cuthbert's bones; and this stood till the following century, when the present cathedral was begun, of course under Norman auspices, by Bishop Carileph, and completed by his successor, Ralph Flambard. And what a glorious pile it is, hoisted up to catch the first and last beams of the sun, and towering up in its massive, yet graceful elevation so as to dominate a whole county! Those three noble towers on that commanding height, round the foot of which the Wear circles, almost making the hill an island, make up a more impressive "tout ensemble" than anything I have seen in the whole world of grand sanctuaries.

Dr. Handley Moule, Bishop of Durham.

A Grandiose Interior.

The massive appearance of the interior of this fane, derived chiefly from the immense thickness of the nave pillars, with their zigzag ornamentation, leaves on the mind an impression of "rocky solidity and indeterminate duration," as Dr. Johnson observed on his visit to Scotland. The most celebrated portion of this cathedral is the incomparable Galilee. Before the Reformation, certain parts of many cathedrals were called Galilees, because they were used as stations in the Easter processions, representing the spot where the angel said, "He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see Him." Durham contains by far the most superb example of a cathedral Galilee. This splendid addition to the building is 80 feet long and 50 wide. It is divided into a center with double aisles, by arcades of semi-circular arches on tall, slender, clustered pillars. The effect is enchanting. The clustered pillars have four shafts in each, two of which are of marble and two of sandstone. Near the center of this lovely work of the old masons, stands a plain oblong stone monument, inscribed with an intimation in Latin that it contains the bones of the venerable Bede, the father of all such as write English history.

Bishop Moule.

There have not, in modern times, been many Puritan bishops in England. The most pronounced of all, the sainted Dr. Ryle, Bishop of Liverpool, died two years ago. For some mysterious reason, a State Church bishop often seems to lose all the evangelicism he ever had, unless it is absolutely part of his religious being. If it is only a pious opinion, it is sure to dribble out of his soul under the impact of Erastian influences. The only prelate to-day of whom it can be positively predicated that he is fervently Protestant, is the Bishop of Durham, Dr. Handley Moule. I say this without any disparagement of Bishops Chavasse, of Liverpool, Bickersteth, of Exeter, and Boyd Carpenter, of Ripon. These are excellent Christian men, without any bias in favor of ritualism, but they certainly do not strike the public consciousness as enthusiastic champions of the Reformation. Their ecclesiasticism is colorless, though their spiritual tone is high. But the Bishop of Durham is one of the most Puritan of the theologians of the age. I am delighted with his new book,

"From Sunday to Sunday." It is intended for Sunday reading for "shut-ins," or for family devotion on the Lord's day, and it consists of brief discourses, which are little more than sermonettes, but which contain many homiletic germs. I trust that an American edition of the book will appear. One of the chapters is entitled "At the Door of the Eternal Tents." The bishop adopts the revised version of Luke 16:9, but translates still more closely from the Greek, and so we have the verse in this form, "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that, when it fails, they may receive you into the eternal tents." Surely this is a welcome double improvement on the meaningless old authorized version, "That when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations." No expositor or preacher could ever make any sense of that. But the accurate rendering is luminous with significance. Instead of "when ye fail," we should read, "when it shall fail;" that is to say, when it, the "mammon of unrighteousness," shall drop away at death. The rendering of the last words, "the eternal tents," presents a clear picture of the Lord's drawing. The conditions between death and resurrection are thus hinted at as transitional, not final. The holy places for the dwelling of the souls of the just are imaged as tents more than solid structures—tents pitched in the Garden of Bliss until the resurrection. In these abodes of bliss we may expect to receive a loving hospitality, a loving welcome on the part of those whom we have helped heavenward by our use of the "mammon" of earthly means and faculties, too often perverted to "unrighteousness." We may, under God, smooth the upward path, and bring the pilgrim happily home, so to speak, by our use of what the Savior has entrusted to our stewardship. If so, and if the subjects of our sympathy and aid have preceded us to paradise, they, the denizens and, as it were, the possessors of that blessed home, will personally welcome us when we come. They will, with thoughts of memory, gratitude and love "receive us into the eternal tents." They will hail us as those to whom they owed so much in the dear days below. What does the Lord manifestly imply? That the doors of the abode of the blessed in this encampment of paradise will be, and are, the scene of personal and welcoming interviews. Thus I have condensed the teaching of Bishop Moule on a momentous topic. To me it is intensely congenial, for all my study of Scripture has convinced me profoundly of the reality of the intermediate state. Thus I have never been able to accept as scriptural, any of the soul-sleeping theories, whether propounded by Archbishop Whately, or Edward White, or the Christadelphians, or Mr. Russell, of Allegheny City, or even by some of my own beloved brethren who have adopted conditional immortality views. I agree herein with the Bishop of Durham; but let every one of us be fully persuaded in his own mind.

A Christmas Sermonette for the Young.

By J. Durham.

"And he was subject unto them. And Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man."—Luke 2:51, 52.

1. God has prepared an unlimited number of examples of perfection in every department of nature.

(a) The perfected plan of the earth that it might in the best way serve his intended purpose.

(b) God perfected the plant life in plan and construction and in growth, completing the essential organs so that any one who looks at a flower is delighted with all the little parts—its color, symmetry, the waxing of the upper surface of the leaf to resist heat and moisture and filling the underside with little mouths that they may inhale for the plant life what we exhale for our life and health.

(c) We see among the birds and animals a symmetry and purpose that show God's ideal in that kingdom.

(d) We admire the star-lit sky, adorning its magnificent splendor, the mathematical exactness of its plan so that we also exclaim, "The heavens declare the glory of God!"

(e) So when God placed before us a perfection for human representation, it was in his Son as an example to us in fully developing a life nearest approaching God's ideal of human life.

2. "He was subject unto his parents." From this first statement we learn that God places the obedience to parents as the first item of a perfected life. God had said to Israel, long before this, when they stood about the thundering summit of Mt. Sinai, in his fifth commandment to them, "Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." And Paul writing many hundred years afterward to encourage the "young people" at Ephesus, repeats the commandment, and then adds that "it is the first commandment with promise." So in giving the law to Israel, there was only one commandment with a promise attached, and that was on parental obedience. History proves that obedient children make the best citizens, workers in the Sunday-school, in the church and every department of business. God knew his people could not go up and possess the land, nor could they hold it with their strength against the enemy with disobedient children. And to this day the Jewish children are the most parent-honoring, law-abiding, and the best in every department of morals and citizenship. The first step toward the ruin of a young person, is parental disobedience. The history of most criminals gives parental disobedience as the beginning of their downfall.

3. "He advanced in wisdom." Wisdom is knowledge rightly used. The Father filled him with heavenly wisdom as his years advanced. There is so much more knowledge than wisdom; you can gain knowledge by study, but your studied plans of wisdom may be failures. The patent office at Washington is full of unwise patents of no useful application. It is expected that wisdom will increase with age, but too many turn aside from every offer of wisdom to follow failures all their lives. "Advance in wisdom" is the second step in the typical life of a young person. "So teach us to measure our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom," and "if any one lack wisdom, let him ask of God." Paul's guarding thought, "Look, therefore, carefully, how you may walk not as unwise, but as wise." Then there is "earthly wisdom," "but that which is from above is first pure then peaceable, full of mercy and good fruits," etc. "Seek wisdom, it is the principal thing."

4. "He advanced in stature." Jesus then had bodily strength and grew in stature. Young people should avail themselves of such proper means as will give them healthy and vigorous bodies. Do nothing that injures the growth of a healthy body. God expects us to make a well-rounded and perfect stature.

5. "He advanced in favor with God." That is character, and character is what tells in the presence of God. Love is the basis of character, for what a boy or girl loves will make that life character, and character begins with the thoughts. "As a man thinketh, so he is," hence "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things." Here is the prescription thought for a beautiful character. No better record can we have than a life "in favor with God."

6. "He advanced in favor with men." That is reputation; that is what people think of us. A person may have a good reputation, but not a good character. Some people do not think they can please God and man at the same time. This is not true, for every man and woman admires the person that bears a true character, one that is "in favor with God." Strive for a godly character, and the reputation will take care of itself. The plant grows by food supply, so a life grows in stature, character and reputation by suitable food supply, and we may grow in favor with God, man, or the devil, just as we live. The person who seeks only popularity may go to ruin. A young person's wealth is not in gold, nor land, nor family relations, face, form or surroundings, but in obedience, holiness, goodness, humility and love. "Keep my commandments, write them on the table of thine heart, so shalt thou find favor and good understanding in the sight of God and man."

"Helps to Faith"*

BY T. P. HALEY.

I have just read with interest and profit "Helps to Faith," by J. H. Garrison. The purpose of the author is well stated in the following sentence: "To point out the original sources of faith, and to clear away some of the debris of outgrown theories, so as to make faith easier, has been the author's aim in all these studies." And right well has he succeeded.

In every chapter, the author, so well and so widely known as a graceful and forceful writer, is at his best. Part I. of the book presents "Some Facts on which Faith Rests."

It is clearly stated in the first chapter that "both the need and the capacity for faith in an invisible God grow out of the fact that man was created in the image of God, a rational, moral and self-determining being." He says further in this connection: "Taking man as we find him, what is he? The most obvious fact is that he possesses a body, with certain simple but pressing needs which clamor for attention." Instead of saying Man has a soul, it is truer to fact to say, Man is a soul and has a body. The soul or spirit is not the thing possessed, but is itself the possessor. From the facts of human nature it is further sought in this chapter to prove that there is One above us who is worthy of our love and adoration.

In chapter two it is sought to prove from "the disharmony in man's nature" the conflict between man's higher and lower nature, and man's inability to superinduce the desired harmony; that "man needs some sort of spiritual re-enforcement or help given to his higher nature."

In chapter three it is assumed that the very nature of God would compel him to reveal himself, and that he would begin the process by revealing himself to the individual and the nation best prepared to receive it. As the Hebrews were best prepared, he did begin such revelation to said race "for the benefit of all nations." This is one of the most interesting and satisfactory chapters in the volume.

Chapter four presents the author's view in his happiest vein of "Jesus as a Revelation of God." This is a fine chapter and leaves little to be said.

Chapter five. "Given Christ, Christianity follows." Jesus declared his purpose to build his church, which can not mean less than to found his religion on the fact of his unique personality. He argues from his intellectual superiority his moral perfection, his sinlessness, his conscious power to aid and to save all men, that "he and he alone is worthy to reveal God to man." Further on, in the sixth chapter, we have these words: "Do the facts permit us to conclude that this unique personality whose character is all that we can conceive God's character to be, whose power to redeem the world from sin is all that we can conceive God's power to be, whose claims on the faith and obedience of men are all that God's claim could possibly be and whose offer of salvation to all the sinful and sorrowing ones of earth is as large and generous as God's offer could be, is anything less than Deity himself?" This chapter is a splendid answer to the question, "What then shall I do with Jesus?"

In chapter seven, "Learning of Jesus," are presented in a most attractive and forceful way the great lessons which Jesus taught, and especially that concerning "the Fatherhood of God," a doctrine which needs much to be emphasized, for it means of course "the brotherhood of man." "At the Feet of Jesus," "How the Ideal is Made Real," chapters eight and nine, are fine chapters.

The tenth chapter deals with the meaning of Christ's death, and the purpose of the author is: "To present Christ's death in a way that will make it a help rather than a hindrance to faith." The fact is noted that the Cross of Christ is a stumbling-block to many beside the Jews who rejected him, and the chapter is an answer to such objections. The great object of his death is presented, the reconciliation of man to God, not God to man. As nothing so powerfully presents the love of God as the death of his Son, so the necessity of his death is granted.

This chapter is most satisfactory, more on account of questions it does not raise, and because it discusses the question which alone affects man, the voluntary death of Jesus as an exhibition of the love of God for men, while we were yet sinners.

Chapter eleven is on "The Nature of Faith and its Relation to Salvation." "What Must we Believe," is the twelfth chapter. "The Holy Spirit," the thirteenth, deals with questions with which the readers of our church literature are more familiar, but this in a most pleasant and satisfactory way.

"Christian Experience, or God in Us," the fourteenth chapter, ought to be carefully read and studied by the people, and especially by the preachers. The end and aim of Christ's mission is the reproduction in men of the life that was in him. "Christian experience is the presence and power of the immanent God, working in human lives to-day."

In Chapter 17, "Is Revelation Continuous?" it is held that the "Christian revelation," being made in a person, was completed in Christ. That inspiration, regarded as the spiritual qualification or divine impulse for recording revelation, was limited to the apostolic age. At the same time it is held that the Holy Spirit has not completed his work in the church and in revealing truth to men.

Chapter 18, "Christianity Vindicated by History," is a fitting close to Part I. of this most interesting volume.

Part II. presents "Some Obstacles to Faith." In this part are twelve brief chapters, closing with the "Creed of Unbelief." The following subjects are treated:

1. Objections Classified.
2. Origin of Moral Evil.
3. Election.
4. Sin, Salvation, Retribution.
5. Science and Revelation.
6. Revelation Progressive.
7. Abuse of Authority in Religion.
8. Conversion. The Old Doctrine and the New Light.
9. A Divided Church.
10. Moral Delinquencies.
11. The Slow Progress of the Kingdom of God.
12. The Creed of Unbelief.

To mention these is all that can now be done. This book ought to have a wide circulation.

ON FOOD

The Right Foundation of Health.

Proper food is the foundation of health. People can eat improper food for a time and not feel any ill results until there is a sudden collapse of the digestive organs, and then all kinds of trouble follows.

The proper way out of the difficulty is to shift to the pure, scientific food, Grape-Nuts, for it rebuilds from the foundation up. A New Hampshire woman says: "Last summer I was suddenly taken with indigestion and severe stomach trouble and could not eat food without great pain; my stomach was so sore I could hardly move about. This kept up until I was so miserable life was not worth living.

"Then a friend finally, after much argument, induced me to try Grape-Nuts food and quit my regular food. Although I had but little faith, I commenced to use it, and great was my surprise to find that I could eat it without the usual pain and distress in my stomach. So I kept on using Grape-Nuts, and soon a marked improvement was shown, for my stomach was performing its regular work in a normal way without pain or distress.

"Very soon the yellow coating disappeared from my tongue, the dull, heavy feeling in my head disappeared and my mind felt light and clear; the languid, tired feeling left, and altogether I felt as if I had been rebuilt. Strength and weight came back rapidly and I went back to my work with renewed ambition. To-day I am a new woman in mind as well as body, and I owe it all to this natural food, Grape-Nuts." Christian Socialism.

By Frank G. Tyrrell.

In some circles the word "socialism" precipitates a panic; it is misunderstood and misused. Nevertheless it is honorable enough in its origin. The dictionary tells us it is from the Latin socius, an associate, a comrade. Socialism was first used in connection with the later agitation of Robert Owen, from 1830 to 1840, and was meant to express the general tendency to develop a communal or co-operative organization of society, in place of the existing competitive state. Now the word has come to signify in general use that effort for a co-operative organization of society which would work through government, national, state, or local. It is not paternalism, but fraternalism. A socialist, of whatever school, is one who believes in the fraternal state.

It will help us somewhat to stop and think what "socialism" does not mean.

1. It does not contemplate a "grand divide."
2. It does not affect domestic relations.
3. It is not by any means antagonistic to religion.
4. It is diametrically the opposite of anarchism.
5. It is no violent, revolutionary gospel.

The Christian socialist seeks to bring about industrial brotherhood by means of social development. Evolution, not revolution, is his method.

Even a cursory examination of the teachings of Jesus Christ will show that a phrase often on his lips was "the Kingdom of God." He came to establish that kingdom on earth; his teachings were addressed primarily to individuals, but he was no narrow individualist. His ideal, and the ideal of all his apostles, was of a redeemed and regenerated earth. It can never be realized except by collective righteousness. As a writer in a recent symposium in the Biblical World said, "The perfect social state must be the corollary of the perfect individual life." In any broad and true interpretation of the message of Jesus, we must hold that he came, not simply to save a few individuals from a wrecked and lost world, but to save the world. He is to work upon it and in it until all its kingdoms are his, viz., the kingdom of government, the kingdom of trade, the kingdom of industry, etc.

The Christian Socialist is one who recognizes this broad gospel, and seeks to apply it. He holds that the state of society indicated by the term socialism, is simply the fulfillment and realization of the ideal of Jesus. As early as the year 1849, Henry James, Sr., argued the identity of socialism and Christianity in a lecture delivered in Boston. The Society of Christian Socialists, organized in Boston, April 15, 1889, under the leadership of W. D. P. Bliss, declared,—

"To exalt the principle that all rights and powers are gifts of God, not for the receiver's use only, but for the benefit of all; to magnify the oneness of the human family, and to lift mankind to the highest plane of privilege, we band ourselves together under the name of Christian Socialists." A brief summary of their principles follows: "All social, political, and industrial relations should be based on the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, in the spirit and according to the teachings of Jesus Christ." The present commercial and industrial system is not thus based. It is fundamentally selfish. Business, under the competitive system, is necessarily a school of selfishness. (The endless evils of mammonism, recklessness, overwork, involuntary idleness, intemperance, prostitution and crime, are fostered by it. We hold that united Christianity must protest against such an industrial order, and demand social reconstruction, which shall be in harmony with the great principle of brotherhood in Christ.

Christian Socialism is not one reform; it comprehends many reforms on one principle. Some of these are, public ownership of public utilities, direct legislation, woman suffrage, employment for the unemployed, the Bible system of land tenure, and a true municipalism. There is no reason on earth why the government should own and control the highways, and not the rail highways; why it should carry our mail, and not our express packages; why it should maintain our schools, and not our factories.)

Personally, I desire to affirm my ardent belief in the theory and practice of Christian Socialism. It holds the only tenable position with reference to the solidarity of society, and the application of the principles of Christ to the life of men. All our laws against the wild and reckless mammonism which riots among us, are mere palliatives of a disease that must be cured by radical treatment. It is possible to organize society and industry so that all men will come into life on an equality of opportunity; so that the fear of want which scourges men, and the greed of gain which inflames them, will be eliminated. It is possible and profitable to go into business, not to exploit your fellowmen, but to serve them. The time is coming when the counting-room will be as holy as the cathedral, and distribution and exchange as sacred as the eucharist.

(Disciples of Christ, above all others, should hail this movement, and join it with enthusiasm. We plead for Christian union; they plead for social union. Our plea is only a segment of theirs. Would God that the whole church might hear and heed the admonition—

"Fight not with the ghosts and shadows! let us hear
The snap of the chain links! let the gladdened ear
Catch the pale prisoner's welcome, as the light Follows thy ax-stroke through his cell of night!
Servants of Him whose mission high and holy,
Was to the wronged, the suffering, and the lowly,
Thrust not His Eden promise from our sphere,

Distant and dim beyond the blue sky's span.
Like John of Patmos, see it now and here,
The new Jerusalem coming down to man."

Wife Fell in Love With Husband "All Over Again."

The wife of a well-known attorney at law of Seward, Neb., tells a tale worth reading: "My husband was a soldier in the Civil War and was, as he called himself, 'an old coffee cooler,' and had always drank very strong coffee.

"About a year ago he complained of a feeling of faintness every time after climbing his office stairs, and was also troubled by terrible headaches that almost drove him wild.

"He gradually grew weaker and weaker until his affliction culminated in nervous collapse, and for weeks he seemed to be fading away from us, in spite of all our efforts.

"The physicians pronounced him strong and well with no organic trouble whatever, and there seemed to be nothing the matter except the complete giving out of his entire nervous system.

"The doctors decided that coffee was at the bottom of all his trouble and ordered Postum Cereal in its place. He improved daily since he quit coffee and began drinking Postum, and now says he feels better than he has felt for 20 years, headaches are gone, no more fainting spells and is gaining in flesh every day, and he seems so much younger and heartier and happier than he has for years that I have fallen in love with him over again.

"Now, for my brother's case; a few years ago he had a peculiar trouble. His tongue was swollen and sore at the roots and covered underneath with festers.

"He thought his affliction was of a cancerous nature, and his doctor was of the same opinion. He could scarcely eat anything and became so poor and run down, he was simply a nervous wreck. He consulted various physicians, but none were able to diagnose his case or help him in the least.

"At last a doctor to whom he applied said he believed my brother was coffee poisoned and advised him to quit coffee and drink Postum. He gave him no medicine, but told him to give Postum fair trial and return to him in six weeks. My brother had used Postum only about ten days when the festers disappeared from his tongue, and at the end of two weeks the soreness and swelling were gone and he began to pick up in flesh and spirits.

"He has never touched coffee since, but drinks Postum all the time and has never had the slightest return of the trouble.

"To look at my experience is it any wonder I can write a heartfelt testimonial for Postum?" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

News From Many Fields

Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia.

The preachers' meeting was held in Brother Power's study, Monday, Nov. 30. Present: Power, Bagby, Jones, Harris, Wright and Hopkins. Also J. H. Garrison, of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, who gave a pleasant and interesting talk. He said he enjoyed the Lord's day in Washington. He preached for Vermont Ave. in the forenoon, and Ninth St. at night. The brethren were pleased and edified. He thinks the whole country looks to the East, especially Washington. He reported 12 or 13 churches in St. Louis. Says they are looking forward to the World's Fair, and are trying to plan to overcome evils at the Fair. The site has been secured for a building for a religious exhibit at the Fair. J. Murray Taylor, of Madison, Ind., was also present. He reports his work at that place on the upgrade.

W. J. Wright was just home from a meeting at Martinsburg, W. Va. The meeting was hindered some by smallpox. There were 31 additions, 28 of them by baptism, 2 by relation, 1 from Lutherans. The church is much encouraged.

Brother Power had one confession and one by letter.

E. B. Bagby has had 52 weddings since Jan. 1.

C. C. Jones preached at Avondale. For the present he will go there every two weeks.

W. L. Harris just returned from Boonsboro, Md., where he preached two weeks in a meeting with the writer. There were three additions, one baptism, one from the United Brethren, and one from the Dunkards. Brother Harris is a good evangelist. He puts the old plea plainly but kindly, and had a good hearing. His clean, manly life has an influence for good.

Our Sunday-school at Waynesboro had 45 present on a recent Lord's day. This is our highest mark. We are preparing for a Christmas entertainment. The Sunday-school at Boonsboro will give part of their Christmas offering to Boys' and Girls' Rally Day.

We have a noble young man at Boonsboro who expects to study for the ministry.

Brethren Garrison, Power, Bagby and Taylor took part in the laying of the corner stone of a new chapel at Mt. Ranier, just over the District line in Maryland.

At Lansdowne, near Baltimore, the corner stone of a new church was laid on Thanksgiving Day.

Joseph Watson, the preacher at Vienna, Va., is working with his hands on the new church there.

All our Baltimore missions are well manned now. W. R. D. Winters is at Fulton Ave., S. R. Maxwell at Riverside Park, O. G. White at 25th St. We regret to lose J. O. Shelburne, but Brother Maxwell will be a worthy successor.

I was called to Jerusalem on Thanksgiving Day to attend the funeral of Sister Fannie Barington, a member there. She had been a great sufferer. She rests from her labors. Brother Gaff, the minister there, is ill.

J. A. HOPKINS.

New York State Notes.

A one travels throughout this great Empire State, with its immense industries and population of nearly eight millions, he begins to realize the wonderful opportunities of the great East. Your correspondent spent the greater part of November in Gloversville, N. Y. Gloversville and Johnstown, and the two cities are practically one, have a combined population of about 35,000. Here is the center of the great glove industry. Last year $15,000,000 worth of gloves left these cities. There is practically no poverty. Every one works on gloves. This is one of the industries which has not been cursed by monopoly. The machinery used is so simple that anyone who has the "knack" can have a little glove factory in the home. A good Singer glove machine and the dies for cutting, supplemented by deft fingers and long practice, suffice. One wonders who wears all the gloves. Our work in Gloversville is an example of what a few lone Disciples can do if they will. A little band, longing for the simplicity of the early faith, they first met in a house. Then they moved to a hall and enlarged their scope of usefulness. Under Bro. Gund, now in Ohio, they grew. Last fall Joseph Keevil went to be their pastor. They then met in a third-story hall, had about forty members and were badly discouraged. Under Bro. Keevil's vigorous leadership they bargained for one of the best corner lots in the city and erected the shell of a chapel on the rear of it. Last summer W. J. Wright, eastern evangelist, held them a fine meeting in which twenty-three were added. Later the building was completed, and I helped in the dedication Nov. 8. At that time, amid great enthusiasm, more than the full amount to pay for it was raised. We followed the dedication with a three weeks' meeting, and thirty-seven were added, among these some influential men of the city. Never have I seen greater enthusiasm and interest. People were anxious to know what we stand for, and gladly accepted the simple presentation of the gospel. In the last six months the membership has grown from forty to one hundred and twelve. Our state society is aiding the work there. We are going to have a strong work in that city. There are dozens of other cities of like promise. We must have the money to enter them. C. T. Fredenburg, of East Aurora, is the new pastor at Gloversville. Joseph Keevil goes to Green Point, Brooklyn, to take the place of his brother who has gone to Tennessee to take work in Milligan College.

In September a band of thirteen in the city of Dunkirk, N. Y., was organized into a church. They began with a Sunday-school of about fifty, which has grown to an enrollment of nearly eighty. They meet in a lodge hall. Bro. Beattie and Bro. Chester, of Buffalo, preach for them on Lord's day. We expect to put a regular pastor there by March 1 at the latest. Dunkirk is a city of 15,000, the home of the great Brooks' locomotive works, employing 2,000 men. The Protestant churches of the city combined have only about six hundred members. The churches are cold and the laboring men unreached. As soon as we can make ourselves known there, the people will come to us. The children are coming faster than they can be cared for now.

I have before me an appeal from Bro. W. R. Chase, of Cattaraugus, this state, urging me to come and hold them a meeting. He and his family are the only Disciples in that town of 1,500 inhabitants. There is neither a Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Episcopalian or Lutheran Church there. The only churches are three Methodist churches: Methodist Episcopal, Wesleyan Methodist and Free Methodist. Combined they have less than two hundred members. The Catholics meet in a little building and have only about twenty-five members. And it is a fine cultured town, too. Many fine men of the city are Christians but identified with no church. Among these the cashier of the bank and proprietor of the largest manufacturing plant in the place. Are we going to enter this place? Most assuredly. We will go on faith as we have no money in sight to put there. It looks as though a self-supporting church might come out of that situation. This is but one of the many openings in this great state. Disciples of Christ, look eastward! "The fields are already ripe unto the harvest!"

The work at Richmond Avenue, Buffalo, where R. H. Miller ministers, is moving. He reports twenty-five additions since taking the work last summer. They send $135 for state work from the church.

W. C. Bower, of North Tonawanda Tabernacle Church, is in a good meeting with home forces. There are some twenty additions to date. Bro. Bower is our new state superintendent of Christian Endeavor. We believe that under his leadership there will be increased activities among the young people.

W. G. Oram, the new pastor at Kensington, Brooklyn, is getting the work well in hand. This is a very promising field and we look for a strong church there in the future. Kensington is aided jointly by the A. C. M. S., the Disciples' Union of Greater New York and the state board.

Bro. C. C. Crawford, of Elmira, is holding a meeting for the Thompson Street Church, Buffalo.

Nearly every offering which has come in for state work so far has been larger than last year. Our resources must increase largely this year if we do the work which is before us. Let every church rally to the work in the Empire State.

In November your correspondent was called to assist in the funeral services of Bro. John E. Hough, of South Butler. Brother Hough had been a loyal Disciple for over fifty years. He was a man of large influence in his community, where he had been a successful merchant for many years. Bro. A. B. Chamberlain, of Auburn, preached the funeral sermon, F. T. Reid, the pastor, and myself assisting. Bro. Hough was a man of quiet beneficence. When the Columbian Avenue Church was started in Rochester, through Bro. F. P. Arthur, he gave $500 to that new work, and later $100 more.

We need about three men who can take work in small country villages at $400 or $500 and work up to something better.

Let every church that possibly can, plan to observe a day for state work in December or January, if it was not done in November.

STEPHEN J. COREY,
Cor. Secretary and Evangelist.

Indiana.

The leading cash payment on November offering comes from New Castle Church, E. R. Black pastor, $112.

The annual rally of the Butler Church, D. F. Harris pastor, was a great success. F. D. Bauer, of Ohio, and T. J. Legg, state evangelist, did the preaching.

During the past twenty months, the church at South Bend, P. J. Rice pastor, has built the Indiana Avenue Church, and maintained the preaching service at a total expense of $2,500, beside the regular congregational work of the mother church. Beside this, they have established a Sunday-school in a thickly settled district of the west end, which must soon become a church. And in the meantime South Bend has been a consistent supporter of state missions, as all other missions. Fine record. What church in the state excels it?

For a long time the Darlington Church has been in the background, but the state evangelist recently assisted the pastor, H. Randel Lookabill in a good meeting which leaves the church in a position to go forward in next year's work with all hope and confidence. The baptismal service was held in the Crawfordville Church. Brother Lookabill is one of our most promising young preachers, and those who know him best predict that he will fill worthily high trusts.

Bro. J. L. Thompson, pastor at Hebron, and secretary of the Second District, recently held a fine meeting at Shelby, a new town without any church at all, resulting in 17 additions to the 11 members we already had, constituting a church of 28 members. A lot has been donated, and a building will be erected. Two of the new members are a son and daughter of a resident M. E. preacher. Under the direction of Brother McKim, of Lowell, the work will be cared for.

The home board, through its missionary, recently organized a church of 48 members at Indiana Harbor. The consensus of opinion is that Indiana Harbor will in a few years be the Chicago of Indiana, and as the state board is already overwhelmed with calls, Indiana will appreciate the wisdom and foresight of the home board in getting in on the ground floor

A thousand dollars now at Indiana Harbor will be worth twenty-five thousand ten years hence. The whole second district is open territory to us, and the Disciples of Indiana never had such an opportunity.

Plainfield has called C. C. Redgrave, of Claysville, Pa. Martinsville has called M. W. Yocum, of Greenwood. Heltonville has called W. H. Alford, of Scottsburg. Shelbyville has called H. A. Pritchard, of Waynestown. Reusselaer has called J. W. Elam, of Indianapolis. New Carlisle has called W. L. McIlvaine, late of Kansas.

N. H. Shepherd is in a promising meeting with the mission church at Plymouth. This is an important point, and has suffered severely by removals, but there are some "never surrender" members there, and the whole state will be under obligations to Brother Shepherd for his timely, voluntary assistance.

The state evangelist is in a meeting at the South Mission, Terre Haute. This is a rich field for a new church. During the last few years, especially since L. E. Sellers has been pastor at the Central, and last year with L. V. Barbre at Second, the Disciples have made great progress in Terre Haute. A new church has been organized in the northeastern part of the city, and a building erected and dedicated. The South Mission is still a better field, and another equally as promising in the southeastern district. West Terre Haute, across the river, is also an inviting field.

L. A. Winn, of Milton, takes up the work at Brookville, county seat of Franklin county, with the whole county as a mission field. There are several weak churches, and groups of scattered Disciples in the county, and at present no resident preacher.

A. M. Hootman held a good meeting at Milton. We have not heard final results, but Brother Hootman always holds a good meeting. He is still serving the church at Logansport, his second year closing last September.

Englewood Church, Indianapolis, has called C. M. Oliphant, of Paris, Ill., to the pastorate. It is understood he will accept.

John W. Moody, of Seymour, has accepted a call to the churches at Byesville and Harmony, Ohio.

B. L. Allen has been reviving the church at Mooresville, Ind. This is good missionary work.

Edmond Miller, the new pastor at Windfall, has started out magnificently.

S. W. Traum, of Newcastle, has been called to Morris St., Indianapolis, made vacant by the resignation of B. L. Allen, to accept the field work and editorial department of the Indiana section of the Christian Companion.

The loss of C. S. Medbury is a stunning blow, not only to the Angola church, but to all Indiana as well. But Brother Medbury came to us from another state, and so we give him up, but ever so reluctantly. "The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away." But now, dear Lord, we are ready for another gift like Brother Medbury. We love Brother Medbury, but we still say, "The Lord's will, not ours, be done."

Bro. A. L. Crim, recently returned from Everett, Washington, where he had labored under the National Board, C. W. B. M., and has entered upon his work as pastor at Ladoga, succeeding Brother Brooks, who has entered the general evangelistic field. Brother Crim, all Indiana extends the heart-in-hand welcome to you. Brother Brooks, this is not your "good-bye and God speed." You have the Hoosier evangelistic brand on you, and you just stay with us. See?

J. J. Taylor is in a meeting at Cayuga. He has held good meetings recently at Middlefork, New Washington, Holton and Knox. Brother Taylor is in demand.

L. L. McKinney continues to hold good meetings, wherever called. He recently baptized an ex-Catholic priest, making the even 150 Catholics he has baptized.

Indiana acknowledges her indebtedness and thanks to Bro. G. L. Wharton for stirring up their pure minds by way of remembrance-of missions. Keep it up, Brother Wharton. It does us all good.

Everybody will rejoice with the church at

An Ancient Foe

To health and happiness is Scrofula—as ugly as ever since time immemorial.

It causes bunches in the neck, disfigures the skin, inflames the mucous membrane, wastes the muscles, weakens the bones, reduces the power of resistance to disease and the capacity for recovery, and develops into consumption.

"A bunch appeared on the left side of my neck. It caused great pain, was lanced, and became a running sore. I went into a general decline. I was persuaded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and when I had taken six bottles my neck was healed, and I have never had any trouble of the kind since." Mrs. K. T. SNYDER, Troy, Ohio.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

will rid you of it, radically and permanently, as they have rid thousands.

Attica in their renewed prosperity. The house newly painted and frescoed, the membership doubled, the church recognized in the city now. The state and district saved this church to the brotherhood, and if they had never done anything else, it is worth more than the cost. And church extension saved the building.

The Newcastle church, E. R. Black, pastor, has the record in missionary growth. Their contribution to state missions is $112 cash, and for all missionary purposes, nearly $900 for the year; besides $2,500 church improvements.

W. A. Ward last summer organized a church at Ohio Falls. They are now building a house of worship.

Crawfordsville has extended a call to Bro. Earl Wilfley, of Pennsylvania. It is understood he will accept.

New churches have recently been organized at Hardinsburg, Ridgeport, Ridge Farm, Shelby, Indiana Harbor, Byron, Russellville, Maple Grove, Terre Haute and Uniontown. Most of these are either in their new buildings, or buildings are in process of construction. The number of churches is increasing so rapidly that we can hardly keep up with count. Indiana will write the number of her Christian churches in four figures before the end of 1904. Mark that. If we only had the money to answer all mission calls from within the state, we would increase 200 churches during the next year. Hurry up the remittances, brethren, churches, Sunday-school Rally Day, and all.

T. J. LEGG.

Ohio.

This letter recently said, "There were 45,000 Disciples in Ohio in 1900." It ought to have been 1890. It has also been seriously called in question, by some who deserve a careful hearing, whether we have 83,000 Disciples in Ohio just now. It must be confessed that our ecclesiastical arithmetic is not very good. It is safe to say we will have 83,000 in Ohio soon.

The Franklin Circle Church in Cleveland prints a neat blotter announcing the church services with an invitation to attend. These are scattered in all the prominent hotels Saturday night. A good plan that.

M. E. Chatley leaves Fourth Avenue, Columbus, Jan. 1, and will at once go to Ravenna where he will succeed Dr. Fred Kline. We wish to inform Ravenna that they will find in Brother Chatley a most excellent man and preacher. Mrs. Chatley is a pastoral-helper of the right sort. We congratulate all concerned.

The Fourth Avenue Church, Columbus, has called Samuel H. Forrer, who was at Fostoria Church two years. He has been in Boston since September in school. He will begin at Fourth Ave., Jan. 1. This would seem to be an excellent fit, too. We are glad to have Brother Forrer back in Ohio.

Pittsburg gives to Elmore and Genoa, Dec. 1, W. N. Arnold. Brother Arnold is another Ohio man who has been away from home awhile and is mighty glad to get back. We all rejoice with him and extend a hand.

The La Belle View Mission at Steubenville, was dedicated last Sunday, Dec. 6. J. G. Slater, of the High St. Church, Akron, preached the sermon and took the collection. This is a mission of the Steubenville Church.

Trimble and Bishopville have a new rector. He is not an Episcopalian, however. His name is Rector—H. F. Elwood City, Pa., furnished these Ohio churches with a preacher.

F. F. Cook has closed his work at Marietta. He will not preach any more. For this we are all sorry. Geo. Ragan will hold a meeting at Marietta in January.

T. L. Lowe reports unusual interest at Athens, and that he will assist Washington C. H. in a meeting beginning with the new year.

Ghent and Granger churches have finally secured a preacher in the person of Medary Gorsuch who has served at Nashville for five years. Clark Braden, known everywhere, has become pastor of the McConnellsville Church, and is giving all his time to this point. The State Board lends assistance here.

A new church at Roseville, six miles from Paulding, is reported. It succeeds a defunct Newlight Church. It is composed of twelve members, and will be self-supporting. Chas. Darsie, of Paulding, was instrumental in this affair. Brother Darsie says the people of the community will lend moral and financial aid. Perhaps the "associate member" fad has reached that community. Brother Darsie is not built that way, however, and we would not think seriously of charging him with such work. This scribe has long since settled the question of the "pious unimmersed" for himself. It is this: Preach the whole gospel with a frankness, clearness and kindness that he will not be afraid to face in the judgment day, and led the pious unimmersed hear and heed or reject as they may elect. Some people need to read Prof. Dean's booklet on "Who let down the Bars." J. H. Bristol has resigned at Lancaster. He has done yeoman service there. He will evangelize till a suitable place may be open.

I have been selling "Non-Alcoholic-Flavoring-Powders" for the past six months, and have made $815.00. Every family buys three or four boxes. The flavoring-powders are better in every respect than the liquid extracts, and are lovely to sell. I do not have to canvass. People send to me for the powders. Any intelligent person can do as well as I, and average $30.00 per week. I get my flavoring-powders from the California Fruit & Chemical Company, St. Louis, Mo. Write them, and they will start you in business.

FOURTH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT FOR THE QUARTER.—The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting, upon them that fear Him.—Psalm 103:17.

The lessons for the past quarter cover almost the entire reigns of David and Solomon. The reign of Saul was merely a prelude to the Hebrew monarchy. With David was established the dynasty to which, by common consent, the throne of Israel always rightfully belonged, and through which was to come that greater King, the Prince of Peace, of the increase of whose kingdom there shall be no end. It is a remarkable fact that, throughout the varied fortunes of the Hebrew monarchy, no rival dynasty ever won the support of the people. Evidently, it was the purpose of God that this single line of royal blood should hold the undivided allegiance, and should become for the popular mind a synonym for rightful sovereignty over the people of God.

And yet the period during which the Davidic line ruled over all Israel was comparatively brief. David came to the throne as king only of Judah, and it was seven years before he could reunite the twelve tribes into a single kingdom. At the death of his successor, Solomon, the old line of cleavage between north and south again asserted itself, and the kingdom divided, never to reunite. To this brief period of less than eighty years we must look for those ideals and impulses which gave to the Davidic line a prestige that could be destroyed by centuries of misrule, sin and failure.

(In reviewing this period we shall, as usual, not follow the lessons one by one, but shall treat the history of the period as a whole. In conducting reviews, it is recommended that teachers do not attempt to review the lessons of the quarter as separate lessons, but rather review the whole period covered by the lessons.)

David's Reign.

1. Jerusalem Made the Capital.

When David came to the throne he was confronted by two problems: centralization and expansion. Gradually, during their wars for the conquest of Canaan, the twelve tribes had been achieving a degree of national consciousness and a feeling of unity. It had been Samuel's function to bring this unity to a point where an organized government over the whole people was possible. Saul further unified the nation to the point where the permanent dynasty might safely be established, but as yet there was no settled centralized government. When David had made good his claim to rule over the northern as well as the southern tribes, he took Jerusalem, an ancient and almost impregnable fortress of the Jebusites, and made it first the political, and then the religious capital of the united kingdom. The first of these results he accomplished by establishing his own court there; the second, by bringing up the Ark of the Covenant. Although the centralization of worship was not completed until after the building of the temple by Solomon, Jerusalem came at once to be recognized as the focal point for the political and religious activities of the nation. It thus became the point of departure from which David might proceed upon his policy of expansion.

2. David's Wars.

It was David who carried the Hebrew monarchy through its turbulent period. He was a man of war. In after years Solomon, in explaining to Hiram why David had not built the temple, said: "David, my father, could not build a house for the name of Jehovah, his God, for the wars which were about him on every side" (1 Kings 5:3). There were yet unconquered Canaanitish tribes within his own boundaries, and when these were subdued, there were Moabites and Syrians and Ammon-ites and Amalekites, against whom he waged successful war and at whose expense he enlarged the boundaries of Israel, until his name was known and feared from the rivers of Babylon to the great sea.

But there were yet other wars of a far more distressing nature. David had many sons, and the question of the succession to the throne was a cause of much bitterness and strife. The revolt of Absalom, the rebellion of Sheba and the plot of Adonijah furnished occasions for civil war, but from all of these wars, both internal and external, David emerged victorious. His strength was not in his thousands of armed men, but in the help of the Lord.

3. David's Religious Life.

With all the turbulence of his reign, and perhaps on account of it, David found occasion for a degree of intercourse with God which was not only a potent factor in his own character and career, but is still exercising its influence among men.

(a) God's covenant with David (2 Samuel 7:1-16), near the beginning of his reign, distinctly defined his attitude toward spiritual things. He was to remember how God had taken him from herding sheep on the hills, and had made him king over a great nation; he was to remember, therefore, that his first allegiance was due to Jehovah, and that no prospect of temporal advantage for himself or his people could justify any lapse from fidelity. David commits himself, personally and officially, to this theory of life: that righteousness is the only road to real success, and that disloyalty to Jehovah, whatever may be the immediate allurements, can lead to nothing but ruin. This principle is the corner-stone upon which the kingdom was built.

(b) David's great sin (2 Samuel 11), his confession (Psalm 51), and his joy in forgiveness (Psalm 32), constitute a distinct chapter in his religious history. That a great and good man could sin so grossly is a grievous revelation of the weakness of human nature; but the depth of his contrition, as poured forth in the great penitential psalm, and the record of his certainty of forgiveness and of the joy that came with that certainty, are not only memorials of an episode in David's spiritual experience, but are for all time a revelation of man's need of God, and God's willingness to answer the cry of the soul in distress.

(c) David's trust in God as mirrored in the most familiar, and perhaps the most beautiful, of all the Psalms (Psalm 23), was not the untried faith of the inexperienced soul, but the tested certainty that comes as the fruit of life-long experience. David began his reign with the covenant in which he bound himself to fidelity to Jehovah. That was trust, to be sure. But as his reign nears its end and he realizes that through all these troubled years God has been with him and has led his feet through dark valleys up to sunlit heights, and has restored his soul after every period of despair and depression, then he can feel and can voice a quality of faith which was impossible before. Such testimonies as these, coming from those who have devoted their lives to the service of God, and who at the end bear witness of His goodness, are among the most potent aids to faith for those who are yet young in experience.

Solomon's Reign.

1. Solomon's Inheritance.

Solomon, as David's successor, inherited four things of great value to any king: his father's benediction and wise advice; an undisputed title to the throne; a widely extended kingdom, at peace within and without, and a well-filled treasury. David transmitted to Solomon his greatest unrealized ambition: the project of building the temple. He delivered to him also his own ideal of life, that faithfulness to Jehovah is the first condition of success. There was peace throughout all the borders of the kingdom; the tribute of conquered peoples filled the royal coffers with the means of realizing all reasonable ambitions. The golden age of Hebrew history was at hand, the time of peace, prosperity, magnificence and progress in the arts of civilization. If it became also the age of decay and deterioration, it was only what golden ages have always been in this respect.

2. Solomon as a Builder.

The erection of the temple was the greatest enterprise of Solomon's reign. It was great, not only in magnitude and magnificence, but in its results. At last the worship became centralized in one place. The work of the priests was systemized as it could not have been before. Religion was gradually taken out of the hands of the people. It tended to become something which was done for them, rather than something done by them. But for the present, the splendor of the temple service and the joy of having erected so wonderful a house in honor of Jehovah quite obscured the dangers of perfunctoriness and formalism. Aside from the temple, and on a scale of equal magnificence, Solomon erected many other buildings, including his own palace and that of his Egyptian wife. The building passion was one to which Oriental monarchs were frequently addicted. Conquered peoples were enslaved and made to serve as workmen. It was by this means that Solomon was able to carry out his great projects.

3. Solomon as a Trader.

Solomon may be called the first of the merchant kings. The extension of his dominion gave him access to foreign lands, and his friendship with Hiram, king of Tyre, brought him in touch with a people who knew how to build ships, and were the grandest seamen of antiquity. His building projects demanded money, which could be gained by foreign commerce. His political relationships, involving marriages with many foreign princesses, drew him beyond the narrow circle which has hitherto confined Israel's interests, and made him a world character. By trade, by political alliances and by personal reputation, Solomon became an international figure, as no Hebrew monarch before or after ever was.

4. Solomon as a Sage.

Solomon's wisdom has become proverbial. Among the first actions of his reign was the choice of wisdom, when, in a dream, the choice of blessings was offered to him. The form in which his wisdom was expressed was that of proverbs and shrewd judgments, such as are particularly dear to the Oriental heart. Solomon was not the only writer of Hebrew proverbs, but, as probably the first and certainly the greatest of them, his name is forever attached to that form of literature. The principle which underlies these proverbs is the very simple philosophy of life that virtue always pays, and that sin is, therefore, folly. In the experience of the race it has been found that only as one takes a spiritual view of life and its rewards, can this principle be maintained, but the principle itself is forever true, and the strong and simple statements of it given forth by Solomon and the other Hebrew sages will be forever a moral tonic and a testimony to the moral order of the world. Not only the experience of David and Solomon, but the experience of good men in all ages, support the belief that, in spite of trials and troubles, "the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear Him."

BRIGHT'S DISEASE

Caused the death of Doctor Bright. Bright's Disease is simply slow congestion of the Kidneys. In the last stage the congestion becomes acute and the victim lives a few hours or a few days, but is past saving. This insidious Kidney trouble is caused by sluggish, torpid, congested liver and slow, constipated bowels, whereby the Kidneys are involved and ruined.

Drake's Palmetto Wine is a foe to congestion of Liver, Kidneys and tissues. It promptly relieves the congestion and carries it out of the Liver, Kidneys, tissues and blood. Drake's Palmetto Wine restores the mucous membranes to healthy condition, relieves the membranes throughout the body from inflammation and Catarrh and cures Catarrh, Constipation, Liver and Kidney disease to stay cured. It gives relief immediately, builds up vigor and health, prolongs life and makes it enjoyable. A trial bottle always gives relief and often cures. A trial bottle will be sent to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who will write for it to Drake Formula Company, 400 Drake Building, 100 Lake St., Chicago, Ill. A postal card will bring this wonderful tonic Palmetto medicine to you absolutely free. It is a boon to disease-laden, pain-ridden men and women.

—Isa 60:1-5.

What a strange reversal of conditions! After a most astonishing victory, a miraculous escape, celebrated with a mighty song, the Hebrews go three days in the wilderness, in the way appointed, and begin to suffer thirst. There is no water; and finally, when they come upon water, and seek to moisten their parched lips, lo! it is bitter! What an inexplicable vexation! If their God could throw the horse and his rider into the sea, if he could turn back the proud host of the pursuing, mocking Pharaoh, could he not save them from a trial like this?

And they murmured against Moses. Three days before, he had saved them from being swallowed up alive. Wouldn't you think that such a leader would be remembered kindly for more than three days, even if there were no wells of water in the path along which he trod? They might have said—they should have said, "Moses is not to blame; he is not disobedient to the divine mandate. Surely he is leading us in the way appointed, and he will find a remedy for our sufferings. And they are but trivial; none have perished. There is pure water somewhere." Has human nature changed very much since then? Do we not see the same ingratitude manifest in the lives of men now on earth? They can bear great calamities better than small vexations.

This swift alternation of experiences is no new thing, nor is it unusual. Who has not passed from mounts of victory into valleys of humiliation? How far was it, in the life of Elijah, the Tishbite, from the exaltation of his prevailing prayer for rain after the drought, to his fear and flight, and his despondency, as he flung himself under the juniper tree?

Precisely similar experiences have come into our lives. Have you never felt, if you have not also said, "All have gone after Baal, and I, even I only am left?" It is passing strange that this alternation should come, but it is still stranger that it comes to us when we are in the path of duty. Israel had not gone aside from the divinely guided way. If Moses had disobeyed, if he had led them into "By-path Meadow," like Pilgrim, then we should say, "Right! they have sinned, and bitterness is their chastisement." What a blunder it is to attribute pain and suffering to transgression! Pain often is a part of some penalty, but there is pain which comes to purify, to chasten, which has a ministry all its own, and does not stand in any way connected with the punishment brought on by disobedience.

Christ was no exception to this predominating law. He must needs suffer; and bare the sins of many. From the noisy acclaim of the volatile throng, who were ready to make him king, over whose garments he rode in an ecstasy of triumph, he turned aside to weep over the stubborn and rebellious city, ignorant of its day of visitation. He was applauded and enthroned; immediately after, he felt that he was despised and rejected.

From the bitter waters, their way led on very quickly to Elim, a place of palm trees and sweet fountains, and those who were sufficiently educated to remember and learn, must have reproached themselves that they whimpered with the rest. Whatever may be your present position, it is better farther on. The pure waters will be all the more refreshing, because of the taste of bitterness; and after the hot, wearisome journey, to rest under the shade of the trees will be an everlasting balm.

PRAYER.

Thanks be unto Thee, O God, for thy strange mercy. For victories we praise Thee; for the guiding pillar; for the conscious presence of One mightier than we; for the tribulation, the affliction, the bitterness, too; and for Elim, where we find rest in Christ. Amen.

The hopeful people are the busy people. Nothing contributes so much to cheerfulness as activity. The people who think missions are a failure are the people who never gave a dollar to missions, never read a missionary book, never attended a mission study class, never did a stroke of missionary work. The ones who are most hopeful about missions are those who are hard at work in the home or foreign field.

No one can study the growth of Christianity, both at home and abroad, without being convinced that it is a success and that missionary work is the most fruitful form of human effort. The fields are white with the harvest, and the harvest is being rapidly gathered.

Missionary optimism finds support both in the reports of actual work done and in the promises of God. But a small part of the total results of mission work can be shown by figures, yet the figures are significant. A century ago, William Carey was the only foreign missionary. Now there are 16,000 with 75,000 native assistants. The one little missionary society of that day has multiplied to 537 doing work in foreign fields. There are in heathen lands, 1,500,000 converts to Christianity, and twice as many more adherents who are not yet church members. Over a million children and young people are being taught in schools and colleges conducted by missionaries. The Christian world contributes $18,000,000 every year for the evangelization of heathen lands.

In addition to the results which can be reported in statistics, there are others which cannot be estimated in numbers. The leavening of China and Japan with Christian ideas, the increasing influence of Christ and Christ's standard of morality among those who do not profess allegiance to him, the enrichment of the spiritual life of the churches, which comes as a reflex influence from their missionary work—all these results are too subtle to be exhibited in tables of statistics, yet they constitute some of the most precious fruitage of missionary effort.

But even if we could see no visible results, there would still be ground for missionary optimism. Paul was an optimist, though pagan Europe lay ahead, and hostile Asia behind him. Carey was an optimist, though the glorious history of modern missions was all before him. Both of these men, and scores of others, were hopeful in spite of difficulties, because they knew that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. Not the easiness of the task, not the success already achieved, but the power and the promise of God is the great reason for missionary optimism. When Livingstone was asked what were the prospects in Africa, he replied, "As bright as the promises of God."

But with such visible tokens of God's help and power, surely there is less reason now than ever before for discouragement. Said Phillips Brooks:

"The opened world—the simplified faith! Surely he who despairs of the power of the gospel to convert the world to-day, despairs of the noontide just when the sunrise is breaking out of twilight on the earth. . . . For the first time in the history of the world, there is a manifest, almost an immediate, possibility of a universal religion."

Our Budget

—Thanks for appreciation of our Christmas number.

—Sorry it was delayed somewhat by reason of the stitching required for the sixteen extra pages.

—Suppose we try to make Christmas more Christian and less pagan, this year. If we associate with Christ's, then his spirit should rule the day.

—The year 1904 is going to be a great year for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. All the signs point to a large increase in circulation. St. Louis will occupy the center of the stage, next year, and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will enjoy special opportunities for keeping its readers posted as to what is going on.

—Remember our issue for Jan. 21 is to be our anniversary number, celebrating the completion of forty years of history. It will contain a large amount of historical information, interesting reminiscences, and pictures of leading men, past and present. It will be worth preserving as a record of the past. Those requiring extra copies should let us know at once.

—Dr. C. L. Pickett has reached Laoag, P. I., and is well pleased with the outlook for missionary work.

—J. M. Lowe has been holding a series of meetings at the Pleasant View Church, near Camp Point, Ill.

—A card from F. D. Power states that he has recovered from his recent attack of appendicitis and is back in Washington and on his feet again.

—I. J. Cahill spent a few days in St. Louis last week. He has been making a lecture tour in Missouri and Illinois under the St. Louis Lyceum Bureau.

—M. E. Chatley closes his three years' pastorate at the Fourth Church, Columbus, O., on Dec. 13. He has accepted a call to Ravenna, O., where he will begin at once.

—Eld. A. Flower is located at Tampa, Fla., for the winter. He writes that Brother Row-lison, from Macon, Ga., was expected there to take charge of the Tampa Church.

—J. Murray Taylor has received and accepted a unanimous call to be pastor of the H Street Christian Church, Washington, D. C. He will begin work there Jan. 1.

—M. D. Clubb, of Midway, Ky., will take the pastorate at Watsonville, Cal., beginning about Dec. 15. The new $35,000 house at the latter place will be dedicated about Jan. 1.

—Last week the foreign society received two gifts on the annuity plan, one for $1,000 and another for $500. F. M. Rains, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O., will give full information as to the plan.

—B. B. Tyler has issued a new edition of his little tract, "The Disciples of Christ, Who They Are, What They Are Doing." It is brief, comprehensive and enlightening, and can be obtained for 30 cents a hundred.

—L. L. Carpenter is one of the most popular of our preachers among the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST force. There are a number of reasons for this. One is that he very frequently sends us news. Another is that he sends it in as soon as it happens, while it is hot. Still another is that he sends it on a postalcard. See?

—President Carl Johan, of Christian University, Canton, Mo., visited the office of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST last week. He reports that the new college building will be ready for occupancy with the beginning of the next term in January. President Johan is now raising a fund of $10,000 to pay the balance of the cost of the building.

—J. H. O. Smith is in a meeting with his church at Valparaiso, Ind., assisted by Brother and Sister Harrington. This is the tenth meeting Brother Smith has held for this congregation. He writes, "I am somewhat weary this (Monday) morning, but happy with joy inexpressible, because I am witnessing day by day God's power over the lives of men."

—Mrs. Lydia Galbreath, Yale, Iowa, has made a bequest of $1,000 to the Benevolent Association of the Christian churches, whose headquarters are in this city. Brother Geo. L. Snively, the general secretary, served four years as probate clerk, and will gladly give his services in writing the wills of persons who wish to remember the Benevolent Association.

—The twenty-third annual meeting of the National Civil Service and Reform League, will be held at Baltimore, Thursday and Friday, Dec. 10 and 11, 1903. The members of the Civil Reform Association and organizations having similar object are very earnestly invited to attend. For entertainment and other particulars, address Elliot H. Goodwin, secretary.

—The Board of Managers of the National Sunday-school Association, which was organized at the Detroit Convention, has elected its officers in accordance with the plan which was proposed and adopted at that time. The following officers were elected: President, W. H. McClain, St. Louis; vice-president, T. J. Legg, Logansport, Ind.; treasurer, Howard C. Rash, Salina, Kan.; secretary, Charles M. Fillmore, Carthage, Ill.

—The University Church, Des Moines, recently adopted resolutions of respect and regret in view of the resignation of I. N. McCash as pastor. During the ten years in which he has served that congregation, he has done a wonderful work in the community and city and, best of all perhaps, with the university students. Such a congenial relation of pastor and people cannot be severed without many pangs on both sides.

—J. G. Creason has resigned the pastorate of the church at Norma, Okla., where he has been for a little more than two years. During that time there have been 180 additions, the church has grown from 180 to 320 and the offering for missions and benevolences have been more than doubled. The Territorial University is located at this place. Brother Creason will either do evangelistic work or will accept a pastorate within 200 miles of St. Louis.

—We call attention to the very interesting letter published elsewhere in this issue, from Bro. L. W. Spayd, who has recently returned from what he considers an unsuccessful missionary effort in South Africa. The conditions in that country rendered it impossible to establish a self-supporting mission as had been planned. His letter gives a splendid picture of the present situation in South Africa, and explains the outcome of the missionary project in a manner entirely creditable to all concerned.

—George A. Miller has been unsuccessfully endeavoring to resign the pastorate of the First Christian Church, Covington, Ky. He is going to Palestine with Dr. Willett's Travel Study Class next month, and expects to be gone about five months. As he did not think he could reasonably ask so long a leave of absence, he tendered his resignation, but the church unanimously refused to accept it. Brother Miller has been with this church for ten years and has made of it the strongest Protestant church in the city.

—Mrs. S. J. Smith, Centralia, I. T., writes that there is a little band of Disciples, few in numbers and dollars, that is trying to build a church in that little town. She says: "We have a lot paid for and foundation partially in, the work being done on it now. We have something over $100 on hand and about $200 subscribed. There is no church in the town, which numbers 600 people. I think if the brotherhood realized the possibilities of this new country, they would send us more of the Home Mission funds." Let the Missionary Board of the Indian Territory take notice and help this good sister in her efforts to establish a church in her town.

—We have received the eighteenth anniversary sermon preached by Brother N. M. Ragland in the First Christian Church, Fayetteville, Sunday, Nov. 22, 1903. Brother Ragland has for many years sent us these annual messages to his people, which we always enjoy reading. It is not difficult to understand how a preacher may build himself into the life of a community by such preaching. In this sermon Brother Ragland speaks hopefully of the establishment of a Bible Chair or Bible College in connection with the State University of that city. We congratulate both church and preacher on their long and pleasant relation with each other.

—"Dear Brother Garrison: "Will you let me say to the preaching brethren who may have applied, or thought of applying for the work in Cynthiana, Ky., that Bro. W. E. Ellis, of Nashville, has been called, has accepted the call and will begin his work here with the beginning of the year. He is to be congratulated, for a kinder, more appreciative people can not be found. For nine years we have walked together in unbroken love and happiness, and now I leave without the memory of an unkind word or look, and yet during that time they built a church that is a perfect gem! What can I say more? May God most richly bless this church and pastor, from this time forth forever more."—J. J. HALEY.

—Brother G. F. Assiter, of Wellsville, Mo., sends us a copy of the London Daily News with the following interesting item concerning it: "It had been reduced to practical bankruptcy by the pressure and cheap rates of other papers. Mr. George Cadbury and other rich Christian men bought it and determined to publish it with all racing news and betting eliminated. Failure was predicted, but the Christian people of the nation patronized it, the pulpits called attention to it, and its circulation was soon increasing at the rate of 1,000 a day. Then they determined to exclude all liquor advertisements. Again it sprang ahead and it has now an enormous circulation." We wonder if there is not some great American daily that would like to try that experiment.

—The Bible Teachers' Training School of New York City has been authorized by Miss Gould to offer prizes for the best essays on the following double topic: First, The Origin and History of the Version of the Bible approved by the Roman Catholic Church; Second, The Origin and History of the American Revised Version of the English Bible. $1,000 will constitute the first prize; $500, the second and $250, the third. The origin of this offer is interesting. It was the statement of Father Early of the Roman Catholic Church, in which he says: "The Catholic Church has never prohibited any of her members reading the Scriptures or the Bible. In every family whose means will permit the buying of a copy, there you will find the Authentic Version of God's words as authorized by the Church, and which has come down to us unchanged from the time of Christ Himself. But the Catholic Church does object to the reading of the Protestant Version which goes back only to the days of Henry VIII of England, and was then gotten up for obvious reasons." This most remarkable statement to come from a Catholic priest, and it has suggested, what is no doubt true, that there is a great deal of popular ignorance on the subject of the origin of the different versions of the Bible, which these essays are designed to remove.

—Last week the Board of Church Extension received a straight gift of $500 from Sister Rebecca Long, of Iowa. E. F. Boggess, of Cherokee Strip fame, and J. D. Corbitt, her minister, had much to do in securing this gift. The main appeal made to her was the homeless condition of nearly 2,500 of our mission churches. This is what her pastor said induced her to give the money. This sister is past the three score and ten, and is so crippled with rheumatism that she can only get to church about once in two weeks. It was a real sacrifice for her to give this money, but she did it because she felt the need of the homeless churches. Many others should imitate Sister Long and send special gifts to Church Extension. At the last board meeting only eleven loans could be granted, and these were all small amounts but one. Four churches in Oklahoma and twenty in the Indian Territory have asked help during the next three months. There are yet many applications on file that have not been granted and there are more than 8,000 churches in our brotherhood that have not yet responded to the September offering. Many churches that promised to take a collection have not yet sent in their offerings. It is hoped the matter will be attended to before the close of 1903. Remit to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—The committee for the Week of Prayer has sent out a splendid list of topics for the first week in January, as follows:

Sunday, Jan. 3, 1904. Sermons. The Kingdom of God, and the conditions of its Triumphant Advance. "Thy Kingdom Come."—Matt. 6:10.

Monday, Jan. 4. The Warrant, the Privilege, the Power of Prayer, and the Present Need of World-wide Intercession.

Tuesday, Jan. 5. The Church of Christ, the One Body of Believers, called of God to win the world to Christ.

Wednesday, Jan. 6. All Nations and Peoples, the One Human Family, loved of God.

Thursday, Jan. 7. Missions, Home and Foreign, Departments of the one Evangelizing Effort, under the one great Commission.

Friday, Jan. 8. The Family, a Divinely Prepared Foundation of Society's Existence and Well-Being. The School, called of God as a Prime Agency of Moral and Intellectual Training.

Saturday, Jan. 9. The Enthronement of Christ on Earth, the only Hope of Humanity's Highest Welfare.

Sunday, Jan. 10. Sermons. The Holy Spirit, God's Free Gift. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?"—Luke 11:13.

A New Church Dedicated in Kansas City, Mo.

It was the editor's privilege to spend last Lord's day with the brethren in Kansas City, together with the Saturday preceding. The occasion was the dedication of the new Hyde Park Church building, in what was once the old town of Westport, but which is now a fashionable part of the growing city. The growth of our cause in Kansas City during the last score of years has been one of the gratifying spectacles of church progress under conditions which the modern city creates. We remember well our first visit to Kansas City, but do not recall the year. The clay hills loom up distinctly in memory, and on one of them stood an old building which was pointed out to us as the Christian Church. This was early in the seventies. In 1879, when passing through the city en route to Colorado, on our first vacation, there were two small churches, living in not very fraternal relations. There had been multiplication by division. Soon after this came T. P. Haley, and with him a new era for our cause in Kansas City. The two churches became one, and since then multiplication has gone on by addition. It is given to few men to so deeply impress themselves upon a whole city, as Brother Haley has impressed himself upon Kansas City and on the whole state of Missouri. Others coming later have wrought nobly, but to this honored veteran, all his brethren gladly give chief honor for the splendid condition of our cause in Kansas City.

But far back beyond the dates we have mentioned, before Thomas Benton's prophecy of a future great city at the mouth of the Kaw had begun to have its fulfillment, some pioneer Christians, pushing their way westward as far as the Missouri River, had erected, in 1845, a church building at the old town of Westport. That building stands until this day, and the church has worshiped in it until last Lord's day. The church has had a varied history. Less than two years ago R. H. Fife was called to be pastor and at once began the agitation of a new building adapted to the new conditions that now existed since the neighborhood had become a part of Kansas City, and was being rapidly filled with an elegant class of residences. The work was begun last March. Being in Kansas City at

THOUSANDS HAVE KIDNEY TROUBLE AND DON'T KNOW IT

To Prove What Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney Remedy, Will do for YOU, Every Reader of the Christian-Evangelist May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for more sickness and suffering than any other disease, therefore, when through neglect or other causes, kidney trouble is permitted to continue, fatal results are sure to follow.

Your other organs may need attention—but your kidneys most, because they do most and need attention first.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, because as soon as your kidneys begin to get better, they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

The mild and immediate effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Swamp-Root will set your whole system right, and the best proof of this is a trial.

14 EAST 120th ST., NEW YORK CITY.

DEAR SIR: OCT. 15th, 1903.
"I had been suffering severely from kidney trouble. All symptoms were on hand; my former strength and power had left me; I could hardly drag myself along. Even my mental capacity was giving out, and often I wished to die. It was then I saw an advertisement of yours in a New York paper, but would not have paid any attention to it, had it not promised a sworn guarantee with every bottle of your medicine asserting that your Swamp-Root is purely vegetable, and does not contain any harmful drugs. I am seventy years and four months old, and with a good conscience I can recommend Swamp-Root to all sufferers from kidney troubles. Four members of my family have been using Swamp-Root for four different kidney diseases, with the same good results."

With many thanks to you, I remain,
Very truly yours,
ROBERT BERNER.

You may have a sample bottle of this famous kidney remedy, Swamp-Root, sent free by mail, postpaid, by which you may test its virtues for such disorders as kidney, bladder and uric acid diseases, poor digestion, when obliged to pass your water frequently night and day, smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, headache, backache, lame back, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, heart disturbance due to bad kidney trouble, skin eruptions from bad blood,

SPECIAL NOTE—If you have the slightest symptoms of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, and a book containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured by Swamp-Root. In writing to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

that time, we heard the brethren speak of the almost insuperable obstacles in the way of the enterprise. But Brother Fife's faith was superior to all difficulties, and it was of a kind that manifests itself in works. He got all the help he could from his weak church and from other brethren in the city, and went to work himself, becoming contractor and chief builder. His family—wife, three sons and two daughters—all caught his spirit and shared in the work. His carpenters, inspired by his example, worked twelve hours a day, and so the work went on, until a beautiful structure built of blue limestone, with beautiful memorial windows, seated, carpeted and equipped with elegant pulpit furniture, was ready for the dedication by last Lord's day.

The editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST having been invited to deliver the dedicatory sermon at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, was present also at the morning services, witnessing the exercises of one of the liveliest Sun-neuralgia, rheumatism, diabetes, bloating, irritability, wornout feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh, sallow complexion, or Bright's disease.

If your water when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is the great discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist. Hospitals use it with wonderful success in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients and use it in their own families, because they recognize in Swamp-Root the greatest and most successful remedy.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is for sale the world over at druggists in bottles of two sizes and two prices—fifty-cent and one-dollar. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

day-schools we have seen, and preaching to a good audience at eleven. This was the first service in the new church, and it was a happy band of brethren and sisters who met, whose joy was modified only by some anxiety as to the outcome of the afternoon meeting on which so much depended for the future of that church. It was the coldest day of the winter, thus far, but clear and bright. At the time appointed the main auditorium and lecture room were filled with representatives from the various churches in the city. The preachers present were, T. P. Haley, W. F. Richardson, Geo. H. Combs, J. J. Morgan, J. A. Dearborn, B. F. Hill, supplying for J. P. Pinkerton that day, G. W. Muckley, besides R. H. Fife and his son, Clyde Fife. Some of the other representative brethren of the city present and rendering royal service were, D. O. Smart and R. A. Long, of the Sixth and Prospect Church, and Judge C. W. Clark, T. R. Bryan and Fletcher Cowherd, of the First

A Missionary's Failure.

Till I went upon the ground and saw and experienced for myself, I could not have believed but that any industrious man could live by his toil in South Africa quite as well as in America. In times past, men have been able to do so. In times future they will again be able to do so. And even at present many are doing so. But the present situation finds the great army of toilers to consist of two classes—the employed and the unemployed. They are in the relation of two teams at baseball; only one party at a time can have its innings. If the one is employed, the other is unemployed. Immigration is so extremely overdone, capital is so inactive, that laborers are in distress as I never witnessed in America, although a personal witness of their distresses in the seventies and nineties of this country. There simply is not enough self-sustaining labor in the country at present to reach all around.

There are, as yet, no manufactures to speak of. In agricultural and stock-raising lines, only persons of considerable capital can make successful beginnings; while in the mining industry, upon which the country is now mainly dependent for civil progress and prosperity, only the very large capitalists can open the way. It was these capitalists who provoked the war between the English and Boers. But its conclusion did not bring to them the advantages they had hoped for. So now they refuse to employ their capital until they can bring to themselves the desired advantages by new schemes.

Before the war the gold-producing mines of the Transvaal numbered seventy. They employed ninety thousand unskilled native laborers and a great number of skilled white laborers. During its term, the war rendered the mines inoperative. At its conclusion every body fully expected an unprecedented revival of the gold-producing industry by the reopening of all the seventy mines previously worked, and by the opening of scores of new ones. Also, since the government of England generously set apart, last winter, about $170,000,000 for a revival of the country's prosperity, there seemed to be absolute certainty of a grand opening to skilled and even unskilled white laborers of foreign countries. Accordingly the expected immigration began to enter the country.

But how the immigrants are disappointed! Above a year has past and but forty-three of the seventy mines have resumed operations. After buying in the railroads and laying foundations of costly buildings, the government has suspended its works to enable mine owners to recruit the native laborers necessary to reopen their mines. Thus at present, neither is the capital of the government, nor yet of the mine owners, employed for the benefit of laborers. By official figures we learn that the immigrants for 1903 will number about 100,000, and they are mostly men, and skilled workmen at that.

In the midst of such conditions, the missionary found himself by Aug. 24, at Bulawayo, Rhodesia, Africa. He and son had been joyfully received into the home of Bro. John Sherriff, the godly man who had congregated the little band of Disciples and held them together in church fellowship. Said Brother Sherriff, "This is the home God has provided for you. Share it with us and be our leader in the Lord's work." A truer and more godly man I never met. I toiled faithfully with him for nine weeks. Within this period many of the gold mines in Rhodesia shut down, and discharged employees invaded the city seeking labor to find none, in most cases. Among them was Bro. Alfred Streader, an efficient elder of the Bendigo Church, Australia, who above a year ago had left his country to come to Brother Sherriff's aid in building up a fellowship of Disciples in Bulawayo. He had greatly encouraged the work. Though a skilled workman in several lines, yet unable to get self-sustaining labor in Bulawayo, as well as myself, we finally left on the same train, he for Johannesburg where he had been promised work, I for Port Elisebeth. At Port Elisebeth, we found no work at all. The railroads, mercantile houses, and other corporations, were seeking reduction of expenses by discharging clerical laborers, all that they could possibly dispense with, that they might tide over to more prosperous times.

The hard times, financially, are due in part to the capitalists dissatisfaction with the native unskilled laborers. They are forcing the government to enable them to import the cheaper and more reliable coolie laborers from India and China under the contract system. The citizens of the country have vigorously resented the proposition; but the hard times consequent upon the capitalists refusing to turn a wheel until their demands are approved, is bringing them to terms. The laborers will doubtless be imported. But considering that even now there are so many blacks demanding all the unskilled labor of the country at wages that are less than half the price of the common board of white men, it must fearfully compromise the purpose of England to make a white man's country in South Africa.

Again, it is doubtless true, also, as often imputed to the mine capitalists, that they are seeking to freeze out the many small stockholders of the companies. Deep and unfathomable are the ways of capitalists in our times. The English government in Africa can no more defeat their schemes than our government can defeat the schemes of millionaires in America.

I have never seen a time in America when I could not have found self-maintaining labor. But I utterly failed to find it in Africa at the present time. It takes, then, more than a willing heart and consecrated hands and brain, to maintain one's self in the South African cities. One must have remunerative employment, as well. Coming to the end of my funds I could but cable home for funds to return to America.

Nine weeks a foreign missionary! Well, fortunately two of the three natives Brother Sherriff baptized into Christ, were good interpreters. Through them I preached fourteen times to the natives. Three confessed Christ, two of whom were baptized before our return. The wife of one of the interpreters confessed Christ the day before our departure whom Brother Sherriff arranged to baptize later. Thus my mission, though so brief, was not unfruitful.

There are many things that I have learned, that I would like to relate, but will not now for lack of space. I hope, however, to be a more effective pleader for foreign missions than ever before, if possible. I am profoundly grateful to all who aided me with offerings. Sorry the returns seem so inadequate to the expense involved. Yet, so valuable has the information derived been to me, that I will refund to each his offering that will write me regarding it. This can not but satisfy every contributor to my missionary effort.

Am now ready for evangelistic work till next spring if any churches desire my services, or for a pastorate which I prefer in some town of good high school privileges, for the sake of my children. Address me till further notice at Algona, Iowa.

Sisters, the state treasury is again in need. Do you realize that we draw heavily upon it, especially in sending literature to instruct and encourage missionary effort? Do you realize, also, that in a very few months the conditions of membership in an auxiliary will read, "Not less than ten cents a month to national and five cents a month to state treasury?" In other words, the five cents a month to be paid to state work will no longer be optional. Will you not all be wise and begin to educate those who do not pay state dues now so that they may not be lost as members in full fellowship later?

Encouraging reports are coming in regarding C. W. B. M. day.

Columbia: "Brother Winders" preached a splendid sermon, offering nearly $25.

St. Louis: Central, Brother Cree preaching, offering almost $30; Tuxedo, Brother Bennett preached, offering not known.

Moberly: The pastor, J. N. Crutcher, preached the sermon, one confession at close; offering, $15; an attentive hearing. Mt. Cabanne, Brother Tyrrell in pulpit, offering over $30. Webb City, Pastor Bro. E. M. Barney preached an educating and convincing sermon; eight new members to auxiliary, collection not all in.

So women and dollars are daily being added. These additions mean souls for Christ.

Dedication at Brooklyn, Ia.

We met with the faithful band of Disciples at Brooklyn, Ia., on Lord's day, Dec. 6, and preached the opening sermon and dedicated their new house of worship. Their beautiful house represents a large amount of genuine sacrifice and devotion to the gospel of Jesus Christ our divine Lord. Brother Bailey, the faithful pastor of the church, has worked early and late to bring about this happy consummation. With the entire membership he greatly rejoices, in the success that has attended this good work.

It was a great pleasure to ask these willing, generous people to give. They responded so generously that the whole congregation was filled with great rejoicing.

A New Church Dedicated in Kansas City, Mo.

Church. Following is the financial statement read by Brother Fife:

The cost of the lot was $2,355, and the cost of the building, including stained glass windows and all furnishings, was $16,233.21. The amount paid on the total cost of building and lot, $18,578.21, is $10,107.50, leaving a balance due of $8,470.71. To meet the debt the church up to yesterday had $4,520, including a church extension loan of $4,000 and $520 in collectable pledges, made by members and friends of the church. The amount necessary to raise yet was $3,950.71, or approximately $4,000. Of the $10,107.50 raised previously, the sum of $2,860 was given by members of other churches in the city, and $7,247.50 was raised by the church congregation, excepting $1,950 realized from the sale of the old property.

To raise the needed $4,000 to put the new building in condition for dedication seemed to many an impossible task, and it would have been, but for a few Brother Greathearts whose ample means and deep interest in the cause enabled them to come to the rescue of their brethren at Hyde Park. Following the sermon on "The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," the whole amount was subscribed, and perhaps a little more. Special thanks are due to Brethren D. O. Smart and R. A. Long, whose inspiring words and generous gifts at opportune moments made success possible. But there were many smaller gifts which represented great sacrifices. The heroic and unselfish labor of the pastor and his family, more than anything else, perhaps, inspired the people to give liberally to the enterprise.

It was a great day for our cause in Kansas City, and all the churches rejoiced in it. That is a most admirable feature of our cause in Kansas City—the solidarity of the brethren and churches there. They all made the debt of the Hyde Park Church their debt and their concern until it was provided for. They all pull together. They are one church and one people in Kansas City. In this they have given an object lesson to the whole brotherhood. Following is the list of churches and preachers at present in that city:

First: Eleventh and Locust, W. F. Richardson, pastor.
Sixth and Prospect: Sixth and Prospect, G. H. Combs, pastor.
South Prospect: Twenty-second and Prospect, J. J. Morgan, pastor.
Forest Ave: Sixteenth and Forest, J. P. Pinkerton, pastor.
South Side: Thirty-first and Charlotte, T. P. Haley, pastor.
West Side: Twentieth and Penn, Clinton Aber, pastor.
Hyde Park: Main and Westport Ave., R. H. Fife, pastor.
Sheffield: G. E. Jones, pastor.
Colored Church: Twenty-first and Summit, W. H. Scott, pastor.

These are well distributed through the city. Besides these churches, there are the following missions under the support of the City Mission Committee.

Jackson Avenue: N. E. Corner Seventeenth Street and Jackson Avenue.
Ivanhoe Park: N. W. Corner Thirty-seventh Street and Michigan Avenue.
Vine Street: S. E. Corner Twenty-fourth and Vine Streets.
Budd Park: N. E. Corner Thompson and Quincy Avenues.
Bethany Commons: Seven hundred six East Fifth Street.
Mount Washington: (Without permanent location.)

Our Kansas City churches have been fortunate in securing the services of a very efficient city evangelist, in F. L. Bowen, who has served them faithfully for several years, and who has several of these missions under his direct care.

The great enterprise of the Sixth and Prospect Avenue Church, of which Brother Combs is pastor, to erect a hundred thousand dollar church, of which R. A. Long is the leader and principal donor, moves steadily on to its consummation. When this is accomplished it is bound to give additional solidity and prestige to our cause in that city. The union of the First and South Side churches in a similar enterprise is one of the probabilities of the future.

Very delightful was the social-fellowship the editor and his wife enjoyed in the home of Bro. W. F. Richardson and wife, which was our headquarters, and also in the home of Brother and Sister W. J. Hallack, and R. H. Fife and family, whose hospitality we shared. We only regretted that our limited time deprived us of the pleasure of sharing the hospitality of other Kansas City homes that are always open to us. May God bless the brethren in Kansas City, and lead them to still greater achievements in the future.

Ministerial Exchanges.

J. G. Creason, Norman, Okla., is open for engagements to do evangelistic work, or will accept a pastorate in Missouri or Illinois.

James S. Helm, a singing evangelist will be glad to correspond with evangelists or pastors looking to engagements after January 10. Address care Charles Reign Scoville, 1 Campbell Park, Chicago, Ill.

Guy B. Williamson and wife, Waverley, Ill., evangelistic singers and helpers can engage for January with a pastor wishing to hold his own meeting.

A. R. Hunt, Savannah, Mo., wishes to engage a good evangelist with singer, for January or February.

Walter M. Jordan, for the past five years pastor at Helena, Mont., wishes a pastorate in any of the middle states. Applicants for the church at Helena, may address Howard Pew, clerk.

E. R. Childers, Troy, Mo., has some time at his disposal and would be pleased to hear from any church, which may be in need of all or part of his services.

The Tonawanda New York Church is without a pastor, owing to the resignation of E. O. Tilburn, who has gone to Forest Ave., Buffalo. Applicants address A. A. Bellinger, 51 Grove St., Tonawanda, N. Y.

The church at Lewiston, Ill., from which Rollin C. Ogburn has resigned, wishes to secure a minister immediately. Address P. E. Hofflund.

W. J. Lhamon, dean of the Bible College, Columbia, Mo., can put churches within reach of Columbia in correspondence with an able preacher, with several years' experience, who wishes to locate in Columbia for University and Bible College work.

Springfield (Mo.) Letter.

The prophecy is being realized that, "South west Missouri would be heard from in the near future." No field in the entire brotherhood yields larger returns than this. The future is big with promise. Many eyes are in this direction, many feet are hastening this way. The delightful climate, the fertile soil, the big red apple, the luscious strawberry in great abundance—these are nature's way of spelling come. All this is underscored in double lines with a most delightful people to live among.

The country about us is in the midst of an era of great prosperity. The future years will disclose greater things for the southwest. Come and see.

Signs of an awakening along lines of church work are abundant and encouraging. Joplin's great victory thrills us with a new feeling. Other victories are possible because of this.

Church of Christ, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

"From victory to victory" has ever been the march of the church.

Our District Convention at Republic, Nov. 23-25, was full of the spirit of promise. More money was raised by pledges and apportionment than ever before for evangelistic work. The C. W. B. M. recorded under the leadership of Mrs. Ella B. Hall, of Springfield, most wonderful gain in every way. These women raised more money in the district than all the churches pledged for evangelistic work in the same field. Let us step a little faster, brethren. Our District Board is full of hope for the future.

Here in Springfield we are rejoicing at the close of a splendid three weeks' meeting, held by W. T. Brooks, of Ladoga, Ind., and his brother, Arthur Brooks, of Kentucky, singing evangelist. These brethren, pure in life and sweet in spirit, did us all good. The church was ready for the meeting, and additions were had from the very first service. The preaching was simple, scriptural, direct. The appeals were earnest, direct, urgent. The singing was spiritual, prayerful, good. The meeting grew quietly, but constantly, and was greatest the last day. There were 101 additions; 73 of these were confessions, 3 reclaimed, and the rest were by letter and statement. Great numbers were unable to get into the house at times. With ample room we would have doubled the number.

The evangelists left us in good condition, with nothing to apologize for after they were gone. C. S. Brooks, of Jefferson City, visited us during the meeting, and preached two sermons to the delight of all. He spoke on Lord's day evening to the greatest company of men ever assembled in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium. The men of our city were greatly pleased and stirred by his address. We are happy and hopeful. More than 230 members have been added during 1903. This is the greatest year in the history of the church. A new lot has been bought, and plans are being laid for a new church. To God be all the praise. Blessed be his holy name. We have other good things to tell in the near future. Listen. D. W. MOORE.

Uhrichsville, Ohio.

The accompanying cut shows the "revised edition" of the Church of Christ at Uhrichsville, Ohio. Here is a work of remarkable development. About eight years ago J. P. Allison became pastor. He had visions. He saw a large Bible school and an enlarged house. The brethren were slow to see. But time went on, the school and church grew. Classes had to be taken to private houses in the neighborhood. The pastor taught his class in the parsonage parlor. To remodel the house meant first the raising of the old house—a brick structure. This took $2,000, and no room was gained. Then an adjoining house and lot had to be purchased and the house moved. $2,500 had to be provided for this; but no additional room was gained. Then came the building project. The pastor had flattering offers in other fields, but he stuck to his post. The people rallied heroically. On Sunday, Nov. 29, Z. T. Sweeney was there. The building was done. A great sermon to a great audience; a great collection—$6,500. Neighboring pastors came to congratulate. It was a great day in Uhrichsville.

All to the right of the chimney in the cut is new. The building has a fine equipment of folding doors and rolling partitions. It can be arranged to seat 150 to 900. There are eleven class-rooms in the new part and five in the old part. This organization is only in its teens. The Bible school has from 400 to 500. There are about 500 souls members of the church. Uhrichsville and Dennison are twin cities. This church serves both places. The great lesson from this success in the kingdom of God is the value of a long pastorate. J. P. Allison is pure gold. He is every inch a man. His staying powers have brought this result. It could not have been done in two or three years. It ought to be said, too, that this is a great missionary church, having part in all our missionary enterprises with a liberal hand. It is also a good convention-going church. But these words are superfluous. The results at home tell that story. May God bless Uhrichsville and its noble pastor!

Collinwood, O.

C. A. FREER.

Bits From Buffalo and Thereabouts.

The interregnum at the Forest Avenue Church is to end on the first of the coming January, when Bro. E. O. Tilburn, of South Tonawanda, assumes the pastorate. The church expects great things from him, and we all hope that their expectations will be fully realized.

Bro. C. O. Crawford, of Elmira, has just concluded a three weeks' meeting with the Black Rock Church, resulting in five accessions, all young people from the Bible school. The aggregate looks small from a merely human standpoint, but just think of creating joy among the angels in heaven five times over! By the way, this plucky little congregation is in the midst of preparations for a new church building, to cost $1,500, more than half of which sum is already in hand, and to be ready for dedication about March 1 of the coming year. The history of this church involves consecration, courage and persistence worthy of all praise.

A chapter of the Brotherhood of Andrew

FORGET YOU EVER HAD IT.

Catarrh, the Most Odious of All Diseases Stamped Out, Root and Branch.

Catarrh is the most foul and offensive disease that afflicts the human race. Any one with social ambitions had better renounce them if he has a bad case of catarrh, for his presence, if tolerated at all, will be endured under protest. The foul and sickening breath, the watery eyes, the hawking and spitting and fetid discharge at the nose make the unfortunate sufferer the most avoided of human beings.

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are the hope and relief of catarrh victims all over the world. They go direct to the root of the disease and thoroughly eradicate it from the human system. They cleanse and purify the blood of all catarrhal poisons and under their influence all impurities are carried off. The blood becomes pure, the eye brightens, the head is cleared, the breath becomes sweet, the lost sense of smell is restored, the discharges cease and the sufferer again feels that he has something to live for. He is again a man among men and can meet his fellow-beings with satisfaction and pleasure.

The following letter from a St. Louis lawyer is only one of thousands received praising the merits and curative powers of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets. Read what he says:

"I suffered from catarrh for 15 years. It would be worse at certain seasons than others, but never failed to annoy me and cause me more or less misery during that period. About a year ago I got so bad that I thought of abandoning my practice. I was a nuisance to myself and all who came near me. My condition was very humiliating and especially so in the court room. I had tried, I thought, every known remedy; all kinds of balms, ointments, inhalers, sprays, etc., till I thought I had completed the list. I was finally told of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets by a friend who took pity on me and, as a drowning man will catch at a straw, I got some and began taking them. I began to improve from the first day and I kept up the good work you may rest assured. In six weeks I was as free from catarrh as the day I was born, but to make assurance doubly sure, I continued the treatment for six weeks longer.

"I have had no trace of catarrh in my system since. I am entirely free from the odious disease and feel like a new man. I write this letter unsolicited for the benefit of fellow-sufferers and you may give it as widespread publicity as you wish."

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50cts. a box.

and Philip has just been organized in the Richmond Avenue Church, whose influence promises to extend far and wide. The writer believes that this sort of organization is just what all these years has been lacking in our churches—an organization looking to trained helpers and united and methodical work. There are hosts of "brothers Philip" to be "found," and this brotherhood means finding, following and winning if possible.

The meeting held by Bro. W. C. Bower, at the Tabernacle Church in North Tonawanda, fructified in twenty-three accessions, and a fresh baptism of spirituality for the church.

The new church in Dunkirk is making creditable headway. The enterprise was undertaken by "two or three" who "gathered in His name," and after two months shows a membership of twelve, with over eighty in the Bible-school. "Where there's a will there's a way," especially when the way is God's way.

I learn that the Williamsville Church contemplates a call to Brother Tremaine, of Rochester.

Lectureship Announcement.

We are hoping to make the lectureship next April one of the most successful and profitable that has ever been held in the state of Missouri. This can only be made possible by the co-operation and attendance of the ministers. This may appear somewhat early to extend an invitation, but I believe the sooner we begin to plan, the larger will be the attendance and the greater will be the success. M. A. HART.

Harrison, O., Dec. 12, 1903.

Special dispatch to CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

ELWOOD, IND., Dec. 14.—Sixty-six additions in two weeks; continuing. Never worked with a better man than L. C. Howe, pastor.—JAMES SMALL.

JOPLIN, Mo., Dec. 14.—Harlow closed fifteen days' meeting at South Joplin with one hundred and fifty-six additions; thirty-one yesterday. Total for campaign since September sixth, nine hundred and eighty-two.—J. W. BAKER.

COLORADO.—Grand Junction, Dec. 8.—My first month in this work closed with November. There has been a marked increase in all departments, and it is especially seen in the Sunday-school and our audiences at all of the preaching services. I am glad to announce 10 additions, and will ask you to note a mistake in report from our state offering, either by press or committee. It was $42.50, and not $214, as announced. Our finances are in good condition, and on the whole, we feel there is a glorious future for the work here.—F. F. WALTERS.

Florence.—The meeting here, held by Ward Russell, the minister, with home forces, closed with 24 added to the church, 17 by baptism. We hope to begin our church building within the near future.—WARD RUSSELL.

ILLINOIS.—Roodhouse, Dec. 6.—We begun a meeting at White Hall last Monday night with home forces: 12 additions in first six nights, six by letter; one of these from Baptists. Other six by confession. Meeting continues this week.—O. C. BOLMAN, minister.

Elliottstown, Dec. 7.—Meeting five days old. Attendance large, attention best, interest good, additions three. Gospel preaching and encouraging prospect.—R. LELAND BROWN, evangelist, FRANK SHANE, pastor.

Virden, Dec. 10.—Closed a four weeks' meeting at Palmyra, Nov. 29, with 37 additions. Of this number more than 30 were adults, and a goodly per cent were heads of families. Bro. R. P. McPherson, of Rossville, had charge of the music and proved himself a royal workman as soloist and leader of song.—C. A. BURTON.

Lewistown, Dec. 8.—Rollin C. Ogburn, pastor of the Christian Church at Lewistown, Ill., has resigned, and the church desires to secure a minister immediately. There have been ten additions since the last report.—ROLLIN C. OGBURN.

Marcelline, Dec. 8.—Last night closed one of the most successful meetings in the history of the Christian Church at Marcelline, which resulted in fifty-one accessions to the church; thirty-five confessions, five from the Methodists, one from the Baptists, two from the United Brethren, two from the Lutherans, six reclaimed. The meetings were conducted by Rev. E. M. Carr, pastor, and Daniel G. Dungan, singing evangelist and artist on cornet. Both are students of Christian University of Canton, Mo. The meetings continued three weeks and church greatly strengthened. Church bids both pastor and singer God-speed.—CHURCH CLERK.

Fisher.—Dec. 1 we began our second year here. During our first year we delivered 118 sermons and had 47 additions. Are putting $2,000 on our building. Will dedicate in January and follow dedication with meeting with home forces. Church has raised more money for missions and other purposes than ever before.—S. ELWOOD FISHER.

Murphysboro, Dec. 4.—Our meeting of five weeks closed here last Sunday night with fine interest. Meetings were conducted by Evangelists Laurence Wright and Smith. These brethren found the church at a very low ebb, spiritually. Brother Wright is a plain, pointed preacher, understands the gospel thoroughly, and makes no apology for its claims. By his plain, yet kindly manner of presenting it, he soon won the confidence of the people. Brother Smith endeared himself to the people by his singing and strong Christian character. Twenty-three were added to the congregation, the church strengthened spiritually, and arrangements made for a good minister to be with us the first Lord's day in December. We most heartily commend the work of these brethren.—H. L. GRAFF AND R. R. COBBUM, elders.

Granite City, Dec. 5.—November has been the best month of my work here; 16 additions during the month, 9 last Sunday. My son Eugene is assisting me week day nights in a meeting with 17 added in first two weeks, making 52 in my work here, including my meeting in May.—M. MCFARLAND, missionary pastor.

INDIANA.—Knightstown, Dec. 7.—Two more added by letter at the morning service yesterday. All services well attended. The writer preached the union Thanksgiving sermon in the First Methodist church.—ALLAN T. SHAW.

New Albany.—Two confessions recently at the Park Church. Five accessions in a meeting of 12 days at Litchfield, Ky.—WM. A. WARD.

Hammond, Dec. 7.—Three additions by confession and baptism and one by statement here yesterday. All departments at their best.—C. J. SHARP.

Brazil, Dec. 6.—Prof. W. H. Waggoner closed a successful institute here last night to a crowded house. Observed the second anniversary of my pastorate here yesterday. Facts gleaned from report made to congregation as follows: Additions during year 73, of these 50 confessions. Officiated at 23 weddings and 24 funerals; amount raised for all purposes $4,545.58 of which $314.23 was for various missions and benevolences. We press on to greater things.—E. L. DAY.

Marine, Dec. 9.—Some time since the Central of this place granted us leave of absence to do some evangelistic work. Was gone six weeks preaching at Ambia, Bangor and Sanborn. There were in all 46 accessions. 36 by primary obedience. Since my return we have had seven accessions. We are hoping for great things this winter. They are almost in sight.—M. F. RICKOFF.

Ligonier, Dec. 11.—I'm in the "Old Orthodox Battle Ground." The war continues, as the sects here hate us with an intense hatred and will not attend our meetings. Was called here to settle the greatest difficulty I ever encountered. It was left entirely in my hands, and I'm glad to report order and harmony out of disorder and discord. I handled it vigorously and am glad to know I have the love of all parties concerned. We have called a pastor who will be here to-morrow. This is the third great trouble I've had to settle this year and all were successfully adjusted. It required five months to do it, hard work and sleepless nights, and yet with most people this kind of work don't count like bringing people into a church that is in harmony. These places are now ready for a great ingathering. Staunton, Ill., Jan. 4.—H. C. PATTERSON.

Marion, Dec. 13.—The S. M. Martin meeting with First Church closed to day with 65 additions in all; 31 baptized. Meeting continued seven weeks. The meeting has done the cause of New Testament Christianity in Marion great good.—E. L. FRAZIER.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Tulsa, Dec. 10.—Sister Alice M. Wickizer, wife of Bro. D. A.

Wickizer, of Bloomfield, Ia., is with us in a short meeting, beginning last Lord's day. We have had 10 additions to date; interest increasing.—S. WALLACE MARR.

IOWA.—Osceola, Dec. 7.—The following is a report of the church here for one month: Nov. 8, two additions, one confession, one letter; Nov. 15, eight additions, seven confessions, one letter; Nov. 22, nine additions, four confessions, five letters; Nov. 29, four additions, one confession, three letters; Dec. 6, three additions, one confession, two letters. Two of the above letters were from the Baptists. The debt of eleven years standing was canceled by the burning of the notes, amounting to $2,467.46, at our jubilee service last night. We have raised nearly $5,000 this year, and are free from debt. We begin a meeting to night, and expect Brother Perry Updike as evangelist. Now, we are free from debt, we hope to do something handsome for our benevolences. "Forward in good works" is our watchword.—H. E. VAN HORN.

Sac City, Dec. 7.—The church here is doing excellent work. A fine electric chandelier has been bought. The Sunday-school now enrolls 272 in the regular department, about 60 more in the home departments; an intermediate Christian Endeavor of about thirty members has been organized. Brother A. Martin is expected with us in January.—E. N. TUCKER, pastor.

Nora Springs, Dec. 7.—Six confessions yesterday; all excellent people.—G. A. HESS.

Dean, Dec. 9.—Brother W. R. Gill's meeting at our place is still in progress, nineteen sermons have been preached. The entire county greatly moved at the wonderful message being ably presented; seventy additions to date, mostly by confession. Great crowds attending and interest increasing.—G. W. PATRICK.

Cincinnati, Dec.—Brother W. H. Coleman, pastor, closed a good meeting here Sunday, Nov. 29, which lasted four weeks, with 14 additions, all by baptism but one. He was assisted in the meeting by Miss Pearl Wiley, who had charge of the music and is a very successful leader. They begin a meeting at Mt. Olive Church, four miles west of here, next Sunday.—J. H. MAY.

Barney, Dec. 3.—In a meeting at this place going on two weeks with good prospects. One confession last night. Will report again.—M. L. ANTHONY, state evangelist. Permanent address is Oskaloosa, Ia., 810 East 3rd Avenue.

KANSAS.—Cherryvale, Dec. 5.—We have just closed a meeting of twenty days here that is regarded the best ever held here by our people in their history of twenty-three years. There was no preparation, as the pastor was working on the house to try to have

THE PERPETUAL WAR

There is always a fight going on in every human body between health and disease. On one side are poor food, bad air, over-work, worry, colds, accidents. On the other are sunshine, rest, cheerfulness and nourishment.

The reason Scott's Emulsion fights so powerfully for health is because it gives so much more nourishment than you can get in any other way. Get in the sunlight and try Scott's Emulsion.

that completed, but failed, owing to the tardiness of the seating company. But we asked the people to go to work to save souls, and stated that we would only take free-will offerings for the expenses of the meeting, including the evangelist's support. The weather was clear most of the time, but we nearly froze out a few days, but the Lord blessed us wonderfully, and 59 were added to the church, nearly all by baptism and four more men than women. These were from among the best people of the city. The church is in the best condition in its history. The writer has been invited to return about the 27th and dedicate the house. Bro. C. A. Shive is the very popular pastor and will be called to remain another year at an increased salary. He is the only pastor who has ever remained here an entire year. They are happy and hopeful.—E. W. BRICKERT, Evangelist.

Marysville, Dec. 9.—L. W. Myers and wife were tendered a farewell reception by the members of the First Church of Christ, Marysville, Kan. In addition to a new and comfortable church, they have a fine new bell. One addition by statement last Lord's day, Dec. 6, at night service.—DANIEL GEORGE COLE, pastor.

Herington, Dec. 11.—Three additions by statement this week.—F. M. McHALE.

KENTUCKY.—Petersburg, Dec. 10.—Have accepted a unanimous call to continue here at Petersburg. Work here in good condition. Rally Day was a success. Recently closed a short meeting at Bellview; 14 additions, 10 baptisms, 1 from the Methodists, 3 reclaimed.—MILO ATKINSON.

MICHIGAN.—Saginaw, Dec. 7.—Splendid services yesterday. Seven added at regular services, also six new members secured for C. W. B. M., and a good offering taken for this cause.—J. S. RAUM.

Grand Rapids, Dec. 12.—Confessions and baptisms almost every Sunday, mark our work on Lyon Street. The most patient and considerate spirit controls our brethren, and our report will eclipse all other records in many respects. This will be sent in January. A. L. Martin has opened a good chapter in the Fifth Avenue Church, and we have great reason to thank God and take courage for the strong stealthy advance in our work here.—F. P. ARTHUR.

MISSOURI.—Unionville, Dec. 7.—Please report three additions recently from here. Also two at Lemonville, a mission of this church. One confession under Bro. W. A. Moore and one from the Methodist Protestant Church at last Sunday's services.—GRANVILLE SNELL.

Bolivar, Dec. 10.—I closed my work at Lees Summit last Sunday. Had one confession when I made farewell address. On Saturday evening the church gave me farewell reception. The young men of the church presented me with a beautiful military set. Have been here three nights. Four additions to date. Bright outlook for successful meeting.—KING STARK.

Moberly, Dec. 7.—Preached C. W. B. M. sermon yesterday. Offering $15. One confession at close of sermon. Our Christian-Endeavor is now the banner society of the local union.—J. N. CRUTCHER.

Kirksville, Dec. 10.—We had four additions to the church here last Sunday.—H. A. NORTH-CUTT.

Excelsior Springs, Dec. 7.—I am just home from Excelsior Springs, Mo., where I have been for the past three weeks helping the pastor, Jesse Gresham, and his good church in a meeting. The audiences from the beginning were good, and the interest deep and lasting. The church had been well prepared for the meeting. Brother Gresham is doing a fine work and is held in the highest esteem by the entire community. There were 43 additions, 26 by confession and baptism, and the interest became so deep and widespread that the pastors of all the churches have united in a union revival meeting.—ROBERT GRAHAM FRANK, Liberty, Mo.

Kansas City, Dec. 10.—Just closed a short meeting at Bluff City, Kan. This little church begged so hard for the meeting that our board permitted me to hold it. Nineteen added; all but three new to us, and all grown people. This is a little congregation, but they are pure gold. They will locate a pastor now. My next meeting will be at New Hampton, Mo., with J. T. Alsop.—T. W. COTTINGHAM.

Belle, Dec. 7.—Meeting eight days' old, and 35 additions. House crowded and people turned away.—R. B. HAVENOR.

Pleasant Hill, Dec. 8.—Since last report we have had three confessions—one of them went with her people to the Baptist church—four by letter and two by statement. There are others who will unite with us soon. We had Brother Abbott with us Nov. 29 and we raised nearly $40 for state work. We have evidences of growth, and are hoping for greater things.—J. D. GREER.

Sheridan, Dec. 10.—Our meeting here is moving along finely. Splendid audiences and much interest manifested. A number of confessions. Brother McKenzie, pastor of Grant City Church, is preaching strong sermons. Our large chorus is doing good work. Brother Ward, of Drake University, is the earnest pastor of this church. We pray for many souls before the meeting closes.—F. HOWARD SWEETMAN AND WIFE, singers.

Cowgill, Dec. 11.—Two confessions recently in this work. Our little band of workers is struggling hopefully. The ladies of the church gave me a nice donation of money, honey and fruit. Go thou and do likewise to your pastor.—J. W. MONSER.

St. Louis, Dec. 14.—Compton Heights, one by letter yesterday; First Church, six confessions, one by letter; Mount Cabanne, two by letter; West End, three by statement. E. T. McFarland of Fourth Church reports 26 up to date in his meeting at Granite City.

Richmond, Dec. 11.—The brethren here are just completing a splendid home for their preacher, composed of eight elegant rooms, besides bath-room, pantry, porches, and a fine basement, 34x14 feet, the entire property costing in the neighborhood of $3,000. They have a fine church building worth $20,000, and are in splendid condition for effective work for the Master. Since the present minister took charge of the work here, there have been added to the church about 75 persons. We recently organized a Junior Y. P. S. C. E. with 32 members.—C. C. HILL.

Mound City, Dec. 10.—I have been preaching half time at Fairfax since Sept. 1, and have had 18 additions during this time; two by letter and one by statement last Lord's day.—C. N. COLE.

NEBRASKA.—Hebron, Dec. 7.—Our meeting at Liberty Ridge moves along nicely. Four confessions last night, six in all. Many went away deeply impressed, feeling they ought to obey the gospel. We look for more to follow. Bro. S. W. Jackson, pastor of Cotner University, is held in the highest esteem, both in and out of the church. The house could not hold the people that came.—E. W. YOCUM.

NEW YORK.—Buffalo, Dec. 8.—A young lady united with the Jefferson Street Church of Christ last Sunday evening, coming from the Baptists.—B. S. FERRALL.

OHIO.—Harrison, Dec. 12.—W. D. Bortle, of Milroy, Ind., held a meeting at Miami, O., in November that resulted in four additions, with more to unite in the near future. This is a limited field, and Brother Bortle held one of the best meetings this church has ever enjoyed. He is highly commended.—W. L. BUCKLEY.

Alliance, Dec. 7.—Recently closed a meeting here with 16 baptisms and 8 otherwise. Since then 5 more confessions. During my first year here $3,691.19 raised for all purposes. Contributions made to our various missionary enterprises. There has been some growth spirituality, but, alas, too slow. Our Bible-school was doubled in attendance and is in a healthful condition.—A. B. MOORE.

Millfield, Dec. 11.—There have been four confessions, one from the Methodists and two by statement in our meeting here.—J. A. WALTERS, evangelist, CHAS. NEWTON, regular minister.

Fayette, Dec. 14.—There were 18 confessions yesterday; 27 first two weeks; 23 baptisms. Shearer and Harrold, evangelists.—W. S. COOK, Pastor.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.—Tecumseh.—

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles, and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate, people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

One received from the Baptists, Sunday, Dec. 6, making 37 since I became pastor. Asked by the church to remain as pastor since closing first year, Oct. 11.—J. D. WILLIAMS.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Sandy Lake, Dec. 9.—We closed our meeting at Shamburg, Pa., Sunday night, the 6th. We had 20 baptisms, and organized with 22 members. They will meet every Lord's day for Sunday-school and worship. They seem to be a hopeful little band. Bro. W. H. H. Monroe is the elder.—THOMAS MARTIN.

An Old and Well-tried Remedy

The Pulpit

THE COMING OF THE KINGDOM THROUGH CHRISTIAN UNITY AND FELLOWSHIP.

Eph.

By C. P. Goodson, Pastor of the Kingshighway Cumberland Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, Mo.

Of preaching much upon this subject, there seems to be no end. But there's a religious unrest permeating all church life, and this agitation is the forerunner of the profoundest revolution in the history of the world. The question of the hour is one and universal: The coming of the kingdom of God. All writers are interesting themselves on kindred topics. All church judicatories are busying themselves with the question—Pan-Presbyterian Alliance. The question has long since outgrown present day organized church systems. All social reform looks to Christ for its savor. Political science is to be rewritten upon the principles of Christianity. In all walks and conditions of life, Christ must and shall have the pre-eminence. He is the recognized universal and essential character. His message is one of hope and life to all classes. His purpose is the redemption of every life in the whole world. He knows no race or country. "The field is the world." The commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by?"

Church Once Ideal, Became Degenerate.

The primitive church was the ideal church. Christ's prayer: "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me," (Jno. 17: 21,) was the passion of his life, in order that the "world might believe." This was realized in the early church. "They were all of one accord in one place." What result? Thousands were added daily to the church. But soon men exalted themselves, people turned from the Christ to follow men. One cried, "I am of Paul," another, "I of Apollos," and still another, "I of Cephas," forgetting that "Paul may plant and Apollos water, but the Lord must give the increase." Down the centuries they have ever looked for a man. One has said, "I am of Luther," another "I of Calvin," "I of Wesley," and so it has become a corrupt church with more than 160 different sects in this country alone, and the day—yesterday—was when each was fighting the other, spending more time making proselytes than presenting the gospel of salvation from sin, through repentance and faith in the Christ. Little wonder that Bedlam has prevailed, and that from this confusion men have turned by the tens of thousands till the churches have at last waked up to the fact that men are not at church on Sunday. The trouble has not been so much with man, for man wants the gospel, but he is sick of sentimental sectarianism. We are reminded of words of a president of an institution of learning which promised to be a great university: "The men who least comprehend what I am trying to do, are in this institution. The professors, each considering that his department is the only really important one, and they have never conceived the idea of building up a great university."

Alas, how true with the denominations! They have lost sight of the great world plan of God, in trying to build up their own sect. At a convention in London, a man rose to speak, when some one called out "Get up higher," to which he replied, "I'm a Baptist; you can't get higher than a Baptist." And in my journey through otherdom, I found that the little, narrow, bigoted church members were not all confined in the Baptist quarters.

Away with such. Come out of it by getting a vision of Christ's church and the world. Pity the man or the sect that because of preconceived prejudices shuts himself in from truth, which is offered from other sources than his own denominational "garden."

"From this hour I ordain myself, loosed from limits and imaginary lines; Going where I list, my own master, total and absolute. Listening to others, considering well what they say, Pausing, searching, receiving, contemplating, Gently, but with undeniable will, Divesting myself of the holds that would hold me."

"Let there be many windows in your soul, That all the glory of the universe May beautify it. Not the narrow pane Of one poor creed can catch the radiant rays That shine from countless sources. Tear away

The blinds of superstition; let the light Pour through fair windows, broad as truth itself,

And high as heaven. . . . Tune your ear To all the worldless music of the stars And to the voice of nature, and your heart Shall turn to truth and goodness as the plant Turns to the sun. A thousand unseen hands Reach down to help you to their peace-crowned heights.

And all the forces of the firmament Shall fortify your strength. Be not afraid To thrust aside half truths and grasp the whole."

But One Protestant Church.

Let me not be misunderstood. Loving my own best, yet never disloyal to any, I am not indifferent to the fact that present day methods and sects are to become a thing of history. Where the man who has not admitted that the church has lost its hold upon the great mass of people, and, too, where the denomination that is not face to face with the fact that few young men are entering the ministry. The per cent of young ministers graduating from our educational institutions is smaller every year.

The Roman Catholic Church has taught Protestants a great lesson, but they are loath to hear. When the Persians were preparing to march upon Greece, the Greeks found difficulty in getting soldiers. "Feuds, jealousies, party spirits, kept the kingdom divided. Argos hated Sparta, and for that reason would not join the confederation. Thebes was jealous of Athens, and the Cretons refused assistance. The Corcyreans made promises, but were insincere, while Gelon, the "Tryant of Syracuse," offered large enforcements, provided he be made head or commander-in-chief of all the allied forces. That's the condition of the churches to-day. Presbyterians are willing and ready to unite their forces with the Methodists and Baptists, in fact all others, if they be given controlling power. So are all. But when it comes to giving in of name and place, there is difference of opinion. But while the church remains as it is, the institutions of evil flourish. Theaters, saloons, gambling-houses and others of doubtful fame are filled upon the Sabbaths, a wholesale slaughter of the innocents, while Christians are at their denominational homes, listening to some discourse on the superior elements of their sect.

Federation Through Organization and Co-operation.

There's a brighter day for the church. Denominations have done a good work, but the vision of larger possibilities has appeared, and sects, so-called, are beating "their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks." The times are ominous with new methods for world conquest. The spirit of the business world is permeating all church life, and man has come to see the necessity of

SPECTACLES A THING OF THE PAST

"Actina," A Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. C. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all afflictions of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance, known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, Massachusetts Bld., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "'Actina' saved my mother, who is eighty years old, from an operation for cataracts."

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My honest opinion of 'Actina' is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eye from an operation."

Mrs. R. Elkins, Neal, Kansas, writes: "I am pleased with 'Actina.' It cured my granulated sore eyes."

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "'Actina' has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 203 B, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely free, a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's "Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General," and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

applying the principles of Christianity to every department of life. There has never been such consecration and Christian activity. Organization is the watchword, and co-operation the signal for effort. To make business, men put seventy small concerns into one great store, and multiply their profits a thousand fold. A university springs up in the western city within a night, all because it filiates a thousand lesser institutions with it. So the church is coming to see that business methods must be put into effect to make it the great success which it should be. Strife and contention are giving place to brotherhood and fellowship. A federation of churches is the next forward move. The young people's movements have precipitated it. The Young Men's Christian Association, Christian Endeavor, the Students' Volunteer Movement, the World's Student Christian Federation, and last, the Religious Education Association. All these are evident signs of new movement. Verily this is no dream of a dreamer that dreams that he dreams. The times are its sure proof.

Till then what? Let the movements already begun among denominations of the same creed and name, be hastened. Let there be not thirteen Presbyterian bodies in the United States, but one great Presbyterian Church, one national Methodist Church, and one universal Baptist Church. Let there be no effort to put ten or twelve different churches in a small town of two thousand people, but only one church, that other ministers, all too poorly paid under such conditions, may go into the fields where thousands are without a religion which helps man here to attain his highest self. Why should three Presbyterian bodies spend money and time and men trying to build three churches upon three blocks that all but touch each other, when children can see its folly. Personally I am ready to make any sacrifice to help such a union churches, and stand pledged to foster such a spirit as long as there remain life within. May God speed that day of days, for surely his kingdom is and can but be one, "A kingdom divided against itself cannot stand."

The Holy Spirit and the Human Mind. By Ashley S. Johnson, A. M., L. D.D., President of the School of Evangelism, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn. (Published by the author. $2.)

Of works on the Holy Spirit there seems to be no end. The subject is a confessedly difficult one, and easily lends itself to a vague mysticism on the one hand, or to an arid materialism on the other. The author of this book believes he has been able to throw no little light upon the subject. We regret our inability to share this opinion. The work abounds in scriptural quotations, but one is often puzzled to know what application the passages quoted have to the subject in hand. The two criticisms we would make on the book are: First, that the Scriptures are quoted in this indiscriminate way, so as to leave the reader in doubt as to the meaning to be attached to them, and of the author's position; and second, that when the author's position is stated, it does not seem to harmonize with the teaching of the Scriptures quoted. This defect, as it seems to us, grows out of the fact that the author seems to be all the while combating a particular theory of the Holy Spirit, and while guarding against an extreme on one side, he seems to run into an opposite extreme. There is a strong disposition to limit the work of the Holy Spirit to the five senses: for instance, after quoting a large number of important passages bearing on the work of the Holy Spirit and teaching a rich doctrine of His indwelling, illuminating and comforting power, the author adds: "No theory of the Holy Spirit's work in conviction and conversion that eliminates the voice, the language, the eyes, the ears of a man, and the use of them by the Spirit in making known His message, can be true." This is quite self-evident, but does the author mean to say that the Holy Spirit is shut up to the use of our physical senses in His operation on the human spirit? This would seem to be the author's position.

Quoting the passage from Paul about "The natural man receiving not the things of the Spirit of God," the author says, "By the natural man, I mean the body." This is a most remarkable interpretation of that passage. While the book tells many truths in connection with the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, it must be said in all candor that it seems to us to represent a view of the subject that is no longer held and taught by the ablest and best minds among us.

Present Day Evangelism. By J. Wilbur Chapman, New York. (The Baker & Taylor Co. 60 cents net.)

This book may be pronounced timely, in view of the present widespread interest in the subject of evangelism. It will be found stimulating, too, especially in awakening an interest on the subject, and intensifying the sense of responsibility in the individual Christian to win others to Christ. The chapter on "Personal Evangelism" is especially suggestive. The author tells of a preacher who asked his board of officers how many of them had ever led a soul to Christ. Only five of the fifteen present stood up to say that they had had this joy. We would not wonder if that is above the average, in the average official board. In any event, there is room for vast improvement. While there may be found lacking some features of evangelism which our readers would think important, many features of very great importance are stated and enforced in a very clear manner, and on the whole it will stimulate the work of evangelism.

More December Magazines.

Country Life in America is gorgeous and resplendent in its Christmas finery. The most notable feature is eight pages in color, the very perfection of three-color half-tone printing, illustrating some of the most popular and useful Christmas flowers and greens.

The Outlook's December magazine number is its fifteenth annual book number. Under the direction of Mr. Mabie, and in part from his pen, there is a very adequate and instructive survey of the season's literary output. In this issue, also, there is the first installment of what is certain to be an important serial by Jacob Riis on "Theodore Roosevelt, the Citizen."

The Atlantic Monthly opens with a thought-provoking article by Dr. T. T. Munger on "The Church: Some Immediate Questions." The scope of the paper is broader than its title. Not only some immediate questions are considered, but the whole trend of modern organized Christianity and the probable outcome of present tendencies. In its immemorial absence of illustrations, the Atlantic stand dignifiedly apart from all the other Christian magazines that appeal to the eye with their polychromatic splendor. It stands apart from them, too, in pure literary quality and flavor.

The Woman's Home Companion has a good Christmas number, with stories by "Josiah Allen's Wife," Tudor Jenks, Eden Philpotts and others, and no end of practical suggestions for Christmas presents, Christmas entertainments and Christmas dinners.

The Cosmopolitan presents fiction by Maarten Maartens, Edith Wharton, H. G. Wells and others, a study of Zionism, an article by Lady Henry Somerset on "British Social Life," and a prophecy of the development of New York between 1903 and 1909, when the city will celebrate the three hundredth anniversary of the arrival of Henrich Hudson, by John Brisben Walker.

The Review of Reviews gives a comprehensive survey of all the important events of the past month. Naturally a good deal of space is devoted to discussions, both editorial and otherwise, of the Panama matter. There is also an interesting review of Morley's Life of Gladstone by W. T. Stead, who characterizes it as "the life of pious Aeneas by fidus Achates" and commends it as genuine literature, and not an overgrown political pamphlet, as might have been feared.

The North American Review has shown commendable enterprise and fairness by publishing so promptly authoritative articles on the Panama revolution from representatives of each of the three distinct points of view, the American, the Colombian and that of Panama. (We despair of finding the proper form of the adjective from Panama.) Ernest Crosby, who does not believe in war under any circumstances, has an article showing what he thinks would have happened if the south had been allowed to secede. He thinks slavery would have died out and the southern states would have voluntarily come back to the union.

The Biblical World contains an address by Prof. E. L. Curtis, of the Yale Divinity School,

A FAIR OFFER.

No doubt every one of our readers has noticed the offer of a free sample bottle of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine, which appears in our columns every week.

This offer strikes us as being a remarkably fair one, and we advise all of our readers who need the medicine to accept the offer and write for a sample without delay.

Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine is certainly a wonderful medicine. It will quickly relieve and permanently cure the most stubborn case of constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia or any form of stomach, liver and kidney trouble.

The fact that you write for a free sample does not place you under the slightest obligation to buy some of the medicine afterwards. Write at once for the free sample to the Vernal Remedy Co., 19 Seneca Building, Buffalo, N. Y., and the sample will be sent you promptly and gladly.

When you write for the free sample, you will confer a great favor upon us, by mentioning the fact that you write at the request of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Family Circle

Daniel Webster's Creed.

The Christian Intelligencer recently published for the first time, a letter from Daniel Webster to a clerical friend, Rev. Thomas Worcester, enclosing a statement of his belief, which is interesting as coming from one of the greatest intellects of the past century. Following is the letter and confession:

Boscawen, Aug. 8, 1807.

DEAR SIR:—The other day we were conversing respecting confessions of faith. Some time ago I wrote down for my own use a few propositions in the shape of articles, intending to exhibit a very short summary of the doctrines of the Christian religion as they impress my mind. I have taken the liberty to inclose a copy for your perusal.

I am, sir, with respect,

Yours, etc.,

D. WEBSTER.

THE CONFESSION.

I believe in the existence of Almighty God, who created and governs the whole world. I am taught this by the works of Nature and the word of revelation.

I believe that God exists in three Persons; this I learn from revelation alone. Nor is it any objection to this belief that I cannot comprehend how one can be three, or three one. I hold it my duty to believe, not what I can comprehend, or account for, but what my Maker teaches me.

I believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be the will and Word of God.

I believe Jesus Christ to be the Son of God. The miracles which He wrought establish, in my mind, His personal authority and render it proper for me to believe whatever He asserts; I believe, therefore, all His declarations, as well when He declares Himself the Son of God, as when He declares any other proposition. And I believe there is no other way to salvation than through the merits of His atonement.

I believe that things past, present and to come are all equally present in the mind of the Deity; that with Him there is no succession of time, nor of ideas; that, therefore, the relative terms, past, present and future, as used among men, cannot, with strict propriety, be applied to Deity. I believe in the doctrine of foreknowledge and predestination, as thus expounded. I do not believe in those doctrines as imposing any fatality or necessity on men's actions, or any way infringing free agency.

I believe in the utter inability of any human being to work out his own salvation without the constant aids of the Spirit of all grace.

I believe in the universal Providence of God; and leave to Epicurus, and His more unreasonable followers in modern times, the inconsistency of believing that God made a world which he does not take the trouble of governing.

Although I have great respect for some other forms of worship, I believe the Con-

I have discovered the marvelous secret of Nature for curing all disease. I can make you well, no matter what your sickness; I can make you strong and well, no matter how weak or crippled you are. With my wonderful discovery I cure every known ailment of the human flesh. There is no ill or ailment under the sun which my marvelous discovery will not banish, and it restores to the perfect bloom of health every poor and unfortunate sufferer.

I am curing thousands who had given up all hope of life. I am bringing joy and happiness into hundreds of homes. If you suffer from kidney and liver disease, lung and stomach or heart trouble, consumption, constipation, rheumatism, neuralgia, blood and skin disease, catarrh, bronchitis, paralysis, diabetes, syphilis, lost vitality, nervous debility, insomnia, blood poison, anemia, female weakness and ailments, eczema or salt rheum, headaches, backaches, nervousness, fevers, coughs, colds, asthma or any disease or weakness of the vital organs, write me and I will cure you and make you well. To me and my marvelous remedy all systems and all diseases are alike. It matters not how long you have been afflicted; it matters not how hopeless and helpless your case may seem; it matters not what doctors have said or what remedies have failed to cure you, write and tell me what you wish to be cured of, and I will cure you. I will mail you a trial package free of my marvelous Vital Life Fluid that will convince you that my discovery will quickly make you strong and healthy as if disease had never touched you. Write me to-day. Your life may be at stake and you not know it. My private address is Dr. C. Sargent Ferris, 5150 Strawn Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio, and I personally assure every person who writes me, be they rich or poor, a prompt and courteous answer, and enough of my wonderful discovery free to convince them that I have truly discovered the secret of long life and perfect health.

gregational mode, on the whole, to be preferable to any other.

I believe religion to be a matter, not of demonstration, but of faith. God requires us to give credit to the truths which He reveals, not because we can prove them, but because He declares them. When the mind is reasonably convinced that the Bible is the Word of God, the only remaining duty is to receive its doctrines with full confidence of their truth and practice them with a pure heart.

I believe that the Bible is to be understood and received in the plain and obvious meaning of its passages; since I cannot persuade myself that a book intended for the instruction and conversion of the whole world should cover its true meaning in such mystery and doubt that none but critics and philosophers can discover it.

I believe that the experiments and subtleties of human wisdom are more likely to obscure than to enlighten the revealed will of God, and that He is the most accomplished Christian scholar who hath been educated at the feet of Jesus, and in the College of Fishermen.

I believe that all true religion consists in the heart and affections, and that therefore all creeds and confessions are fallible and uncertain evidences of evangelical piety.

Finally, I believe that Christ has imposed on all His disciples a life of active benevolence; that he who refrains only from what he thinks to be sinful, has performed but a part, and a small part, of his duty; that he is bound to do good and communicate, to love his neighbor, to give food and drink to his enemy, and to endeavor, so far as in him lies, to promote peace, truth, piety and happiness in a wicked and forlorn world, believing that in the great day which is to come there will be no other criterion of character than that which is already established—"By their fruits ye shall know them."

Friends.

"Lincoln has nothing but plenty of friends," was often said of the young Illinois lawyer. Poor in purse as he was, he was rich in his friendships, and he rose largely by their aid. "Win hearts, and you have hands and purses," said Lord Burleigh, cynically phrasing a great social principle.

No young man starting in life could have better capital than plenty of friends. They will strengthen his credit, support him in every great effort, and make him what, unaided, he could never be. Friends of the right sort will help him more to be happy and successful than much money or great learning.

When Garfield entered Williams College, he won the friendship of its president, Mark Hopkins. Years afterward, when President of the United States, he said: "If I could be taken back into boyhood, to-day, and have all the libraries and apparatus of a university, with ordinary routine professors, offered me on the one hand, and on the other a great, luminous, rich soul like mine, such as Doctor Hopkins was twenty years ago, in a tent in the woods alone, I should say, 'Give me Dr. Hopkins for my college course, rather than any university with only routine professors.'" * * *

Those who would make friends must cultivate the qualities which are admired and which attract. If you are mean, stingy and selfish, nobody will admire you. You must cultivate generosity and large-heartedness; you must be magnanimous and tolerant; you must have positive qualities; for a negative, shrinking, apologizing, round-about man is despised. You must cultivate courage and boldness; for a coward has few friends. You must believe in yourself. If you do not, others will not believe in you. You must look upward, and be hopeful, cheery and optimistic. No one will be attracted to a gloomy pessimist.

The moment a man feels that you have a real live interest in his welfare, and that you do not ask about his business, profession, book, or article merely out of courtesy, you will get his attention, and will interest him. You will tie him to you just in proportion to the intensity and unselfishness of your interest in him. But if you are selfish, and think of nothing but your own advancement; if you are wondering how you can use everybody to help you along; if you look upon every man or woman you are introduced to as so much more possible success-capital; if you measure people by the amount of business they can send you, or the number of new clients, patients, or readers of your book they can secure for you, they will look upon you in the same way.

If you have friends, don't be afraid to express your friendship; don't be afraid to tell them that you admire or love them. If you love anybody, why not say so? If you enjoy any one's company, why not say so? It costs you nothing; it may mean everything to your friend, and to your friendship.

A lady was asked how she managed to get along so well with disagreeable people. "It is very simple," she replied; "all I do is to try to make the most of their good qualities and pay no attention to their disagreeable ones." No better formula by which to win and hold friends could be found.—Success.

The Joys of the Home.

We often hear of the burdens of the home. Young people before marriage are warned of the trials that await them, and after marriage they are frequently pitied on account of the numerous embarrassments of home life. We should hear a little more of the helps, and not quite so much of the hindrances of the home. There are trials, of course, connected with the bringing up of a family, but what blessing has not also its burden? It is through trial that we develop everything that is worth while of character or of position. And, on the other hand, it would be well if we would make a little more of the real joys of the home, and pay a little less attention to the trials. How many there are, husbands and wives, whom the home has saved! What mother and father cannot recall incidents in their lives when the thought of children has steadied and stimulated to noble endeavor! Lord Erskine, when a young man, was called upon to plead a case before the most influential men of England. He spoke so brilliantly, that a friend asked him how it was that he could do so well. Erskine replied, "When I rose to speak, I thought I felt my little children all pulling my gown and saying, 'Father, speak well; you are to make our bread now.'"

A Beautiful Idea.

"Why, auntie!" exclaimed the children, as they found the dear old lady out of doors, "you are putting some of your choicest rose bushes out here in the back yard."

"Yes; and I'm going to put geraniums and pinks and other things that will bloom all summer out here, too, children," and a tender look dimmed the twinkle in the kindly eyes, while she nodded toward an upper window in the dingy wall of a tenement house opposite.

"I know they'll be almost out of sight from our house, but there's a woman sits sewing at that back window, day after day, week in and week out, and I'm fixing this corner for her. No, I don't know her; only she's always busy and tired-looking, and maybe the flowers will put a bit of brightness into her life."

Who can tell what memories, what hopes, what lessons the beauty of the blossoms and their fragrance bore to that poor little upper room through the long summer days! And how many ways there are of making pleasant corners to gladden tired eyes, if only we were not too selfishly busy to notice the eyes or plan the corners!

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

I have always said that the main object of our Advance Society is to form the habit of good reading. 30 lines of poetry and five pages of history a week, are homeopathic doses. Still, it is wonderful, when you come to think of it, how much history you read if you keep to it five years. But when you double your dose, everything counts high. May Speece, of Bucklin Mo., has just sent me her fifth report; at the close she writes, "Summary of one year's work in the Av. S. Number of chapters read in the Bible, 985; pages of history read, 1,726; lines of poetry, 119,915." (And then preachers who read nothing but newspapers, will get up and preach out of the gleanings of past years, and wonder why they don't interest their congregations better! How can a preacher, who never spends time loading up his brain with fresh fuel of facts and human interests and delicate sentiments, keep from burning out? Doesn't he know when he preaches without freshness and without thoroughness, that he is boring girls and boys who have 119,915 pages of history rustling in their minds? Oh, you preachers—DIG!)

Mary Haymaker, Wichita, Kans. "Have you decided on what day we are meet at the World's Fair? Are we to wear our colors? I inclose $1.25; I want a gold Av. S. pin, and the remainder is for our orphan." (I am not sure, but think the day will be June 23rd, 1904; the place will be announced in good time. If we raise $50, we must have our little orphan right there with us. The gold pin, which I have ordered for you, cost 90 cents, which leaves 35 cents for little Joe, bringing the total, so far, up to $32.10.)

Alice Kindred, Belding, Mich. "Mamma and I send a dollar for our orphan. Papa and mamma support two in India for $35 a year. We are sorry for orphans. Mamma says I am old enough to join the Av. S. now. I was nine on Oct. 14, (Hurrah!) and I had a birthday party that evening. Mamma gave me 'Black Beauty.' It is a good book. I hope everybody will read it. Now I will tell you what you didn't understand about Macatawa. We were there in June. The Tabernacle was not open as there were no meetings, but we were to get in anyway and see. We could not get inside because of the high fence." (Alice refers to the time she and her grandpa Hieronymus were taking a walk through the woods.) "They are building a new church here." ($33.10.)

Sophronia Dickinson, Newaygo, Mich.: "Inclosed find 25 cents for the Av. S. orphan from an old Grandma, who loves to read 'With the Children.'"

Mabel Irving, Brookfield, Mo.: "I am a little girl almost an orphan. My father died when I was one year old. My mother is good to me, but she is poor. To-day she was paid 60 cents for washing for a family, and she gives me 10 cents to send to you for the orphan, and I wish I could send more; I am 8 years old. My mother may take in enough to spare me another dime sometime. I pray for you and the orphan." (Surely we will succeed since the grandmas and the little children of the poor are rallying around little Joe! Total, $33.45.)

Sidney J. Chastain, Yukon, Okla.: "I took a lazy spell and gave up the Av. S. for a while, but now I am taking it up again. I am so pleased with the Av. S. adopting an orphan, and want to have a hand in the good work myself. It would be fine if we could have little Joe. I like him so well from the description and I'd rather have a U. S. orphan than an African orphan, anyway. I am only a boy 12 years old, you know, so of course I don't have very much, money but I am going to share my Christmas money with the orphan. I inclose 25 cents; every little will help. I will send in a report some of these times."

Helen Ross, Independence, Mo.: "I have been trying for over a week to get to write and send my contribution for the orphan, 50 cents. I was delighted with the plan from the very first. I think it time for our society to be doing some good thing like this. I have been very busy lately. I hope you enjoyed your Thanksgiving." (Very much; got beaten at seven games of chess, all in a row. I hope you will write us a longer letter when you get rested up.)

Crow Agency, Mont. (at least so the envelope says; no name signed to this note): "Inclosed find one dollar for the support of the Av. S. orphan. I will add more to it as soon as 'pay day' comes around. Yours in his name." (Total, $35.20.)

Mrs. S. M. Gibbins, Post Falls, Idaho: "The idea of the Av. S. orphan is certainly commendable, and while I am not a member, I have a warm place in my heart for orphans. I feel almost like one myself, for my children have made homes of their own and my dear companion has gone to a better land. I inclose 50 cents. I am sorry it is not much larger."

Mabel Damerell, Walnut, Kansas: "When I read the Av. S. report last week, I told mamma that if I didn't hurry up, I wouldn't have a hand in the Orphan Fund, so please find inclosed 50 cents. My little sister gives 15 cents of it. If you already have the $50, use this for another orphan, for I think it bad enough to do without a papa. I am still keeping the rules, but have mislaid my report. I was so glad to read about the Joplin meeting; I wish we could have one at Walnut. My cousin lived in Joplin."

Appleton City, Mo.: "I enjoy 'With the Children' and think the orphan plan good. I inclose one dollar for this grand work. Don't publish my name."

Edna Shriver, Nebo, Ill.: "All the children in Nebo are coasting or skating most all the time. I am just learning to skate." (Look out for the back of your head!) "I send my third report; 2,527 lines of poetry, 118 pages of history, 12 quotations, 372 chapters of the Bible, 222 verses." (Do you mean 222 verses besides the chapters?)

Grace Everest, Oklahoma City, Okla.: "Mamma and I think the Av. S. fine. I have made up my mind to join. I am 12, and in the seventh grade. This part of the city is so pretty. The ground is high, with oak woods all around. I have only one block to go to school. I would like to hear more

RHEUMATISM

Cured without Medicine

An external cure so sure that the makers send it FREE ON APPROVAL. Try it.

Send your name and address to the makers of Magic Foot Drafts, the great Michigan cure for every kind of rheumatism—Chronic or Acute, Muscular, Sciatic, Lumbago, Gout, etc., no matter where located or how severe. You'll get a pair of the Drafts by return mail—prepaid—free on approval.

If they give relief, send them a dollar if not, keep your money. You decide.

Magic Foot Drafts are worn without inconvenience and cure rheumatism in every part of the body by drawing out the poisonous acids in the blood through the great foot pores. You can see that this offer is proof of their merit, for hundreds of thousands of persons answer these advertisements, and only those who are satisfied with the benefit they receive, send any money. Write to-day to Magic Foot Draft Co., 5119 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich., for a trial pair and be cured. A valuable illustrated book on rheumatism also sent free.

about Bertha Beesley and her school. I wonder what grade she teaches. I must close, as it is drawing near my bedtime." (Nine?) "Pleasant dreams to all. I inclose 25 cents for the orphan."

Total, $37.45. I wish we could have closed this week with $40, but we can't because I don't feel like going down into my own pocket after the rest. Besides, it wouldn't matter how much I went down after it, it wouldn't be there. In one week comes Christmas. You will be giving presents to those you love, which is the beautiful part of Christmas. What do you think of Sidney's plan of dividing with our orphan? Can't you send a little money to the fund as a Christmas present for him? If you do it to the least of these, you do it unto God. I think God will be very glad to receive a Christmas present in that way.

Sunday-schools should order their supplies early. If you are not using our supplies let us send you samples. We send free samples on receipt of request.

Sunday-school superintendents, it is time to begin preparing for your supplies for the coming year. Send your orders early to the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo.

Our Sunday-school supplies are prepared by editors who have had many years' experience as teachers in the Sunday-school. They know the needs of the Sunday-schools of to-day.

Remember this: If you are not familiar with our Sunday-school supplies we will send samples of our entire series on receipt of your request. We want to supply your school with its literature and will furnish samples free.

The mails are always crowded during the last few days of the year handling packages of all kinds. The crowded condition of mails sometimes delays our Sunday-school supplies. Orders should be sent in early so as to give ample time for mails to reach destination before beginning of next year.

Christian Lesson Commentary for 1904 is now ready. The Christian Lesson Commentary has appeared annually for many years past. It has aided thousands in the preparation and study of the Sunday-school lessons each year. The volumes for 1904 contains 407 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth binding, price $1.00 postpaid, or $9.00 per dozen not prepaid.

Our Sunday-school supplies are graded and are suitable for use by all grades in the school. The following is a list of our Sunday-school supplies:

The Round Table.
Young Evangelist.
The Little Ones.
Bible Lesson Leaves.
Our Young Folks.
Beginner's Quarterly.
Primary Quarterly.
Youth's Quarterly.
Scholar's Quarterly.
Bible Student.
Bible Lesson Picture Roll.
Bible Lesson Picture Cards.

Missouri Bible-School Notes.

Every school keeping Boys' and Girls' Rally Day reports a great time and increase over last year in the offering. Good, now, let others keep the day before December is gone, and if nothing more, at least take the offering and send to B. L. Smith. The exercise is as beneficial to the children and community as the offering is helpful to the work. We are trainers, remember, and train right.

R. B. Havener is at Belle, getting ready for dedicating their nice, new and modern house, but preaching also, and has had 19 additions and house crowded to the doors. That's the work, brethren, and I love to commend the men who are so faithfully doing it for you. Do not forget them in your offerings.

The New Haven recruiting campaign was great, resulting so closely that the interest never dimmed, closing with 149 reds and 151 blues, and that from an average at the opening of 45. The offering of the last day was $8.39, and our part of the social was over $7. Hurrah for New Haven and its workers!

Have you seen the celluloid "Roll of Honor" going to the schools raising $100 for home missions? It is a beauty and no mistake. Mt. Cabanne, St. Louis, is coming near it, and it seems now, will have one for their school room.

T. J. Head is now pushing the work at Taskee, one of our struggling little bands in Wayne county, and he reports the outlook bright for getting them in fine condition. Brethren, do you appreciate such work for you, the children, the brotherhood and the Master? It seems you would promptly respond to the third call just going out, and by which we hope to happyfy the men and their loved ones by full remittances for the holidays. But it is with you and your schools.

J. O. Boyd continues at the head of the school at Memphis, putting the same successful methods into practice that made him such a success in high school work, while Pastor M. J. Nicoson lines up for all that is good in all the departments, just closing with 47 additions, many from the school. Memphis has a fine Teachers' Meeting, is going to organize the Home Department, institute the Cradle Roll, and open up the new year with the recruiting campaign. They have always given to our work, and this year they triple it. Think of that.

Neeper has just had a good meeting by G. E. Williams; 27 additions, Bible-school organized, and arrangements made for preaching twice per month.

G. W. Thompson is just closing his fiftieth year in Bible-school work, and his tenth as superintendent. Think of that, you lazy things! Fifty years of going and giving and living and working for children and God! No wonder the folks at Kahoka gave more for missions last year than ever before in their history, for such schools and work must tell on others for good. G. E. Williams is on his second year as pastor, and is doing so well by and for all, that he is to remain indefinitely. Of course. They have a fine Teachers' Meeting here, also, and all departments of the church are reported in good shape. Why not, with such men?

The third calls have gone to our schools, and a prompt answer will help us and our faithful field force very much.

Memphis and Kahoka are both going to keep Boys' and Girls' Rally Day in connection with their Christmas entertainment. Just the thing to do. Will you? H. F. DAVIS.

A Perennial Joy.

The "Christian Lesson Commentary" is to me a perennial joy. The work is so well done and so true to the "faithful Word" that it commends itself to all who love God and Christ and the Word. The issue for 1904 is equal to the best of the series. May thousands be benefited by the study they give it, and may the Master crown its author when his work is all done with the "crown of righteousness."

A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas to-night—
Christmas in lands of the fir-tree and pine,
Christmas in lands of the palm-tree and vine,
Christmas where snow-peaks stand solemn and white,
Christmas where cornfields lie sunny and bright—
Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas to-night.

Christmas where children are hopeful and gay,
Christmas where old men are patient and gray,
Christmas where peace, like a dove in its flight,
Broods o'er brave men in the thick of the fight—
Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas to-night.

For the Christ-child who comes is the Master of all;
No palace too great, no cottage too small;
The angels who welcome Him sing from the height,
"In the city of David a King in His might"—
Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas to-night.

Then let every heart keep its Christmas within—Christ's pity for sorrow, Christ's hatred of sin,
Christ's care for the weakest, Christ's courage for right;
Christ's dread of the darkness, Christ's love of the light—Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas to-night.

—Phillips Brooks.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

The Laundry Class.

In many of the schools of domestic science, laundry work is now taught in a thorough and scientific manner. In the laundry classroom Ivory Soap is always used to wash the articles that require special care and it is frequently used to the exclusion of all other soaps. It is as important to know the best materials for domestic use as to know the best methods for using them, and Ivory Soap is very generally recognized by those who have carefully investigated the subject as the safest and purest soap.

Current Events

The following reform measures are now pending before both houses of Congress, and the Christian sentiment of the nation should speak with all possible clearness and force in advocacy of them: The Hepburn-Dolliver interstate liquor bill to prevent the nullification of the anti-liquor laws of prohibition states through the "original package" device; the McCumber bill to complete the exclusion of liquor selling from government buildings; a bill to safeguard the anti-canteen law by providing an additional appropriation for the erection of canteen-less club-houses and recreation rooms at the army posts, and the appointment of physical directors for the new army gymnasiums; the Gillett bill to forbid interstate telegraphing of bets on horse races; the Allen bill to give to the District of Columbia a Sunday law similar to that which is in force in most of the states; an amendment to the appropriation bill for the Lewis and Clark Exposition to be held in Portland, Oregon, in 1905, requiring Sunday closing and placing some decent limits upon the midway features. In addition to these, which are matters for both houses to consider, there are the charges against Senator Smoot, the investigation of which in the Senate is a matter in which all reformers should be interested. It is not to be supposed that the fight for the restoration of the army canteen is yet at an end. Although many army officers assure us that more liquor is sold to the soldiers since the abolition of the canteen than before, the brewers and distillers and liquor forces generally seem strangely anxious to have the canteen restored. Just why they should be so solicitous for the restoration of an institution which is a positive detriment to their business, it is a little hard to say. It is just possible that their books do not corroborate the statement of these army officers who assert that so much more liquor is sold to the soldiers by the outside saloons under the present regime than was formerly sold by the canteens. But in any case, as we have said before, the anti-canteen law will never be fully and fairly tested until the army club-houses, recreation rooms and gymnasiums, for which a million dollars has been appropriated and for which half a million more is being asked, have been put into operation. Until then it is folly for any man to say that the social life of the army posts is absolutely dependent upon the canteen. If persons who are interested in moral reform will write to their senators and congressmen, urging the support of these measures, there will be a chance of making the Christian sentiment of the country effective.

A recent decision of the United States Supreme Court upholds the validity of the Kansas eight-hour law. This statute prohibits contractors on public work in that state from requiring their employees to work more than eight hours a day. The statute was attacked on the ground that it interferes with a man's natural right to sell his labor on whatever conditions he pleases. The Court decided, with obvious justice, that employment on public work is not a natural right. No man is compelled to work under this eight-hour statute unless he wants to. But the state has the same right as any other employer to specify the conditions under which its own work shall be done, and this right exists no less where the work is done through contractors, than where the state stands in the direct relation of employer to the workmen. The wisdom of the law is not a matter for the court to decide, but of its constitutionality there can be no doubt.

Miss Helen Gould's offer of three prizes of $1,000, $500 and $250 respectively, for the best essay on "The Origin and History of the Version of the Bible approved by the Roman Catholic Church and of The American Revised Version of the English Bible," has called out some interesting comments. It will be remembered that the whole matter began with the statement by a Catholic priest of Irvington, N. Y., that the Catholic Church has never discouraged the reading of the Bible by the people, but prohibits the reading only of the heretical Protestant version. The Protestant papers generally have approved of Miss Gould's offer as one that is calculated to shed light upon a subject with which neither Protestants nor Catholics are so well acquainted as they ought to be. Possibly each party knows something about the origin of its own version of the Scriptures (thought not much, in many cases), but it must be admitted that Protestants generally know very little about the original and distinguishing characteristics of the Catholic version, and the comprehensive ignorance of Catholics touching the King James Version is sufficiently indicated by Father Earley's characterization of it as a version "which goes back only to the days of Henry VIII. of England, and was then gotten up for obvious reasons." On the same principle we presume he would reject Jowett's translation of Plato, on the ground that it was "gotten up" in our own time, and would prefer some translation of a translation of a translation which could trace its pedigree through half a dozen versions back to Plato's text. The Catholic press looks with suspicion upon Miss Gould's attempt to get at the facts regarding the versions of the Scriptures. For example, the New World (Catholic) says: "What will be the result? The hack writers will get their pay, and the printers will get theirs, and we suppose the judges will be paid for the one-sided verdict they render. The Baalam of to-day seldom dare to dare to bless when they are paid to curse. Yet the [Catholic] Church will remain unhurt. She could not be destroyed by all the Gould millions. She it was who gave the Bible to the world and $1,750 in prizes will not injure her." If the Church (Catholic) gave the Bible to the world, doubtless she may find excuses for withholding it from the people whenever that course is deemed expedient, and for burning those versions of it which have been translated into English directly from the original text without coming through the intermediate holy ecclesiastical Latin. Anyway, if the Bible belongs to "the Church," may she not do what she will with her own?

Dun's Commercial Agency prepares, from the statistics of current prices of all staple articles, what is called an Index Number, which indicates with great exactness the purchasing power of money at any given time. This Index Number is reached by adding the cost of certain quantities of all the staple products, including bread stuffs, meats, dairy and garden products and other foods, cloth, metals and miscellaneous, in proportion as these several articles enter into the expense account of the average family. As the prices of some articles are always going up while others are coming down, this Index Number furnishes a valuable means of estimating and comparing the average condition of prices at various periods. For example, on Dec. 1, 1903, the Index Number was $98.22, while a year ago it was $100.45. That is to say, in buying the things which the average family needs in the proportion in which they are needed, $98.22 will go as far now as $100.45 would go a year ago. Whether this two per cent decrease in price is the beginning of a return to the comparatively low prices which prevailed prior to 1901, or is merely one of those little fluctuations which result from purely temporary conditions, is not so easy to tell, but more likely it is the latter. It is perhaps worth noting that, although prices have fallen off two per cent in the past year, there has been an increase of one-half of one per cent during the past month.

The passing of the Cuban reciprocity bill by the Senate was the feature of the week in Congress. By unanimous agreement the vote was taken on Wednesday. It was a foregone conclusion that the bill would be passed, but several senators felt it necessary to address their constituents (through the Congressional Record) on the subject. The Democratic caucus had agreed, in spite of Senator Cockrell's protest, that a two-thirds vote upon any measure in the caucus should be considered as binding all Democratic senators to the support of a measure in the chamber. This rule might have created some embarrassment regarding the Cuban bill, and will, if kept in force, be the source of still more trouble when the new Panama canal treaty comes to a vote; but the caucus at a later session decided that the two-thirds rule should not be binding in the vote on the Cuban bill, and it is not improbable that it will be necessary to make an exception also in favor of the Panama treaty. The Cuban bill, as passed by a vote of 57 to 18, gives a reduction of 20 per cent from the Dingley tariff rates upon all articles imported into this country from Cuba, in return for which a reduction of from 20 to 40 per cent from the Cuban tariff rates is to be allowed upon all articles imported into Cuba from the United States.

The debate in the Senate on the new canal treaty with Panama indicates that the policy of the administration, in recognizing the new republic so promptly and in negotiating the canal treaty with it, is to be made the object of an attack, not less spirited than that which was directed against President McKinley's Philippine policy. Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, has come boldly out against the administration's policy, and it is likely that the anti-imperialist forces will be marshaled as nearly as possible by the old leaders and upon the old lines. The trouble is that the southern states want the canal, and they know that there is no prospect of getting it except by ratifying this treaty with Panama. It will be well nigh impossible for the party leaders, even with the backing of the two-thirds caucus vote, to hold the southern senators in line to vote against the treaty, while their constituents are clamoring for the canal.

The Cuban government is confronted with a rapidly increasing amount of claims filed by the so-called "army of liberation" and by civilians who profess to have contributed services or property to the cause of freedom. A few months ago the total of these claims was announced as $35,000,000. This seemed pretty large. The more they think about it, the more the Cuban soldiers and pseudo-soldiers are convinced of the value of their services, and later returns put the sum of their claims at $52,000,000. Adding on the amount claimed by the civilians for damages, services, etc., the total is now about $75,000,000. It is to meet these claims that the Cuban lottery is to be organized, and still other devices will have to be tried if the claims are to be accepted and settled at their face value. President Palma might start a chain letter or an autograph quilt. There are dire threats of what may happen if the claims are not recognized. The least serious possibility is that it may become a political issue, to the disadvantage of the present administration; the most serious, that the malcontents and their friends may take up arms and try to right their fancied wrongs by overthrowing the government. The relation of the United States to Cuba and our responsibility for the preservation of order on the island, would prevent any such resort to Latin American bush-whacking methods from assuming revolutionary proportions, but it might make trouble for a time. The real embarrassment arises from the fact that some of the claims are undoubtedly just, while others are as undoubtedly unjust, and there is no very accurate criterion for distinguishing between them. It is right that the patriots who bore the heat and burden of the day in the struggle with Spain should be paid for their services. But the rabble who rushed into the army just in time to be mustered out, after the United States troops had won the victory, deserve but small consideration. In short, Cuba has on her hands a problem which is not altogether unlike our own pension question.

Turkish reforms are at last to be put into effect. The Sultan has prohibited, among the followers of the Prophet, the manufacture and sale of cosmetics containing lard or any other product of pig.

Cotton at twelve and a half cents a pound, with as good prospect of going higher as of dropping soon, is a sufficiently unusual occurrence to create a disturbance in the commercial world. It means prosperity for the cotton-raising states, but a black outlook for the mill districts. The Atlanta Constitution estimates that the planters will receive two hundred million dollars more for their cotton this year than last. But in the cotton-mill districts in England there is every prospect of calamity, owing to the shutting down of the mills for lack of the raw material. In New England the condition is still worse, because most of the mills carry a smaller reserve stock of raw cotton. Before the season is over, many of the mills will be compelled to shut down. The chief drawback to the cotton situation in the South is the destructive boll-weevil which entered the country about ten years ago from Mexico by way of Texas, and thence spreading through the South. Conventions have been held in Texas and Louisiana to devise measures to fight the pest, and the legislature of Louisiana, called in special session for this purpose, asked Congress to make an appropriation of $500,000 to fight the boll-weevil. The Secretary of Agriculture, in his recent annual report, seconded this request.

Brevities.

A lately deceased Spanish cardinal is reported to have left a bequest of $10,000 to "the first Spanish general landing in the United States territory with an army sufficiently strong to avenge the defeats of Cuba and the Philippines." Meanwhile the money remains in the Bank of Spain, presumably drawing a small interest. This is a dangerous precedent. In the course of several centuries the compounded interest will amount to a vast sum, which will be a standing and increasing temptation to hot-headed or covetous generals and ministers of war. It will be only a question of time until the growing prize will outweigh all considerations of prudence. It was unkind of the cardinal to tempt his fellow-countrymen to this certain form of race-suicide.

The trouble with Dowie is that he is too modest. Here, for example, is his own estimate of his personal ability in several lines, independent of the special help of the Almighty which he professes to have: "If I should turn my attention to finances, I could rival Rockefeller. If I should become a politician, I would make Mark Hanna look sick, and if I had followed military affairs, I would have been a great general. Why, then, with all these qualities, should I be posing as a prophet when I could do so much better in other lines than other men?" And then he adds, very pertinently and truly: "I am either the prophet [Elijah] or I am a great imposter."

"Good Will Among Men!"

Here we cling to the Authorized Version: "Peace on earth, good will among men." That this was the angelic song; sang at the birth of Christ, we do not doubt. This means something clear and definite, and it is something worthy for angels to sing. The revised rendering is both doubtful as to meaning, and lacks in dignity and catholicity of thought. Moreover, we believe the old rendering can be justified on critical grounds, but we shall not go into that here. It is the sentiment itself we would emphasize.

It was to a world full of enmities, strifes, racial prejudices, hatreds; with partition walls dividing the poor from the rich; the plebeian from the patrician, the Gentiles from the Jews, the Greeks from the Barbarians, that the angels sung on that memorable night when Jesus was born, "Peace on earth, good will among men." The meaning of the song was that the birth of Jesus was to introduce a new era, whose prevailing and ultimate characteristics were to be peace between the warring factions and races of earth, and "good will among men," everywhere. It was to bring peace between man and God and peace between men.

The progress has been slow through these nineteen centuries since Christ was born, but who can doubt that vast progress has been made toward the great consummation. Never was the world so small as it is to-day, and never were all the peoples which inhabit it in such close sympathy as to-day. More and more, all races and peoples and tribes and tongues are recognizing their kinship as children of the common Father. War is becoming less frequent and more and more difficult to bring about. Arbitration has gained many notable victories in the recent past, and the era of universal peace seems to be nearer than it did even a decade ago. The signs all point to the fulfillment of that ancient prophecy which foretold the time, when "they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks" and the nations shall "learn war no more."

"Good will among men!" Why not? They are our brothers; they share with us the same common sorrows, the same hopes, fears and aspirations. These men and women that are all about us bearing their burdens, fighting their battles, receiving their wounds from the world, submitting to afflictions, disappointments and temptations—how much they need our good will! A sympathetic look, a warm handclasp, a kind, encouraging word, may help to decide the question of victory or defeat in the battle they are fighting. Why not put away from our heart all malice, all envy, all bitter prejudices, all evil surmises, all selfishness, and love our neighbors as ourselves? Can we do anything less and be Christians?

If anyone who reads this is harboring ill will toward any fellow-being, let him know that he is so far standing out against the fulfillment of Christ's mission in the world, "Peace on earth, good will among men." If we love those only who love us, and have good will only toward our friends, "what do we more than others?" Let us treasure in our hearts the full measure of meaning of that angelic song, and cultivate "good will" and the feeling of brotherliness toward all men everywhere. To do this is to enter into the real spirit of Christmas.

An "Interior" View of our Religious Reformation.

The Interior, an organ of the Presbyterian Church, published in Chicago, has a recent editorial entitled, "Divisions Where Unity is Preached," which we reproduce elsewhere, in which the editor points out what he conceives to be several distinct lines of cleavage among the people known as the Disciples of Christ. We regret to say that the article does not manifest the slightest sorrow or grief at the divisions which the editor thinks he sees, as actual or impending. On the contrary, it is all too plain that the editor finds abundant satisfaction in what he regards as a vindication of the wisdom of his own system of church government in these alleged differences. This is the constant temptation that presents itself to our editorial brethren who represent churches governed by authoritative creeds, and claiming and exercising legislative functions for the government of their local churches. Any irregularity or abuse of liberty which they can find in a religious body which dispenses with human creeds and teaches congregational autonomy, is readily seized upon as proving that their own system is wise. This is very human, if it is not very Christian.

How we are "Banded Together."

The Interior regards it as "a striking piece of fate's irony that a people who are banded together on the idea that all Christians ought to agree with them, are finding themselves utterly unable to agree among themselves. The method which they proposed to teach Christendom won't work even in their own family, and schism among the followers of Campbell is seriously threatened." Now, it is very difficult for us to believe that the Interior has made a conscientious statement of what it understands to be the principle on which the Disciples of Christ "are banded together," in saying that their unifying principle is "the idea that all Christians ought to agree with them." The editor of a great religious paper has no excuse for such ignorance as to the position of a religious body so widely known, and so given to stating its position, as the Disciples of Christ. Such an editor should know that the people who prefer to be known simply as Christians or Disciples of Christ, are "banded together" on the great New Testament truth, on which Christ said He would build His church—the Messiahship and divinity of Jesus of Nazareth,—and that to believe on Him, to wear His name, to submit to His authority as His will is revealed in the New Testament, with the largest liberty in matters of opinion, is at once the way of salvation and the condition of unity and of success in Christian service. Not only so, but the editor of a religious journal ought to know that the best thought in all religious bodies to-day is tending strongly in the same direction, and that more and more the authority of human creeds—"based on the idea that all Christians ought to agree with them"—is being discarded and the authority of Christ and of His Word is being exalted. Everywhere men of "light and leading" are coming to see that Christian unity is possible only as we surrender our human names, our human creeds and our party spirit, and sit at the feet of our Great Leader to learn of Him, to imbibe His spirit, and to carry out His will in the earth.

Anti-Missionary Society Differences.

It is true that some among us have been unable to grasp this principle of unity, and separate it in their thought from mere methods of Christian work, and have therefore opposed the use of missionary societies in evangelizing the world. This is to be regretted, but this is a diminishing difference, which is destined ultimately to disappear. The Interior, however, is entirely wrong in saying that this opposition to missionary societies "is in logical line with the principle of literalism which Campbell laid down." Mr. Campbell himself was president of the first missionary society among us, and earnestly advocated the co-operation of the churches through such organizations in spreading the gospel throughout the world. At one time he opposed the abuses of certain missionary societies, in a way that might have been interpreted as opposition to such forms of co-operation, but his later word and especially his own action in serving as president of the American Christian Missionary Society, gives the real interpretation of his views upon the subject.

Baptism and Denominationalism.

The other differences pointed out relate to the place of baptism in conversion and regeneration, and as to whether the churches in our reformatory movement constitute a denomination. As to the first point, the editor admits that "there is no inevitable dissension, though much difference." Does the Interior know of any religious body in which there are no shades of difference touching any theological question that may arise? Is there no such thing as that in the Presbyterian Church? Does the Interior know of any conflict between the conservatives and "progressives" in its own body, concerning the doctrine of election, predestination, historical criticism, etc? But concerning the matter of a denomination, the Interior says that, "the more open-minded ministers of the church have of late come to concede the patent fact that for all practical purposes, the adherents of Campbell's teachings do constitute a denomination, co-ordinate with other churches which do not wince at the term." In the first place, we know of no one among us who makes Mr. Campbell's teaching a rule of faith and practice. If there were such, they would be perfectly consistent in calling themselves a denomination. We all acknowledge much indebtedness to Mr. Campbell for his teaching, and especially for the truth which he so strongly emphasized, that we should call no man master, save Christ. Nor do we know of any among us entitled to be called leaders or representative men who admit or believe that the position which we occupy, as stated above, is denominational or sectarian in its character, however much of sectarianism in spirit may be manifested by some claiming to occupy such position. The aim of those who inaugurated this movement and of those who, under God, are seeking to carry it forward to-day, was and is to occupy a basis of fellowship, or foundation of unity, as broad and catholic as the New Testament itself, and wide enough to hold all who believe in Christ and are willing to have Him as their only Leader.

Concerning the Heresy of Capitals.

In saying that the use of the term "Disciples of Christ throws old line leaders into frenzy," and that the capital D in such title is regarded from the conservative position as "treason," the Interior puts the matter rather extremely. It is not quite so bad as that, though there are some who attach great importance to the use or disuse of the capital D. We use the capital D in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when the name, Disciples of Christ, is intended to designate our own religious movement, because we were taught in school that proper names should begin with capitals, and this we regard as a very proper name. But whether the capital D or a small d be employed, there is no disposition, on the part of any, by such distinction, to "unchurch other Christian bodies." The aim is to wear names that present no obstacle to unity. The opposition to federation referred to, has grown very largely, if not wholly, out of a misconception of what was involved in church federation. There is no "constitution of such federations" that binds any religious body where the gospel of Christ leaves it free, and if there were, none of us would enter into any such federation. We take it that the Interior misunderstands the arrangement of the Hyde Park Church in receiving as "fraternal associates" those who come with letters from other evangelical bodies, not into its membership, but into a fraternal relation with the church by which, without surrendering their convictions of truth, they worship with it and work with it, so far as they can, without requiring the church to change its terms of membership. The relation is not a new one, though the name for it may be. The idea is to have it more formally recognized, in order that the mutual relationship may be better understood.

No Tribunal or Standard for Heresy Trials.

Referring to the matter of differences in questions of historical criticism, the Interior observes: "They have no tribunal in which to try such a case, nor any standard by which to judge the degree of a teacher's departure from orthodoxy." That is the milk in the cocoanut. We are glad to plead guilty to this mild impeachment. It is our proud distinction that we have no "tribunal" before which to try our brethren for differences of opinion in questions of biblical criticism, and no "standard creed"—meaning thereby a human creed, which we ourselves have framed—"by which to judge the degree of a teacher's departure from orthodoxy." But we are quite content to get along with the old creed of Simon Peter, and with the New Testament interpretation of it and of what it requires. So far we are quite content with the result, and would not exchange this liberty which we have in Christ for all the "tribunals" and "standard creeds" and heresy trials which have hampered, weakened, and often disrupted, those who have adopted such unauthorized expediences. Seeing that there is far less clashing of opinions among us on questions of modern criticism than among our Presbyterian brethren, we are the less inclined to resort to church courts and standard creeds as a remedy for such differences. We much prefer to leave these questions to free and fair discussion within the bounds and bonds of Christian fellowship.

Remember the Old Preachers.

We regret that the announcement relating to Ministerial Relief Day was crowded out of our last week's issue in the final make-up. We hope, however, that few, if any, of our churches neglected on last Lord's day to make an offering for the benefit of this fund. There is no feature of our general benevolence that appeals more directly and strongly to the hearts of the brethren than this appeal for aged ministers and their families, who, because of their devotion to the cause of Christ in the productive period of their lives, are now depending upon the generosity of their brethren. It should be remembered that many of these veterans of the cross who are to be helped through the coming winter by the gifts of their brethren, preached the gospel at a time when there were few, if any, churches to pay salaries, and that they gave themselves with a sublime abandon of faith to the preaching of the Word, believing that the Lord and their brethren would provide for their needs. Such faith should have its reward in the offerings of the brotherhood, now, to meet the wants of their old age and to brighten their closing days with the consciousness that they are remembered by their brethren. In making your Christmas gifts, therefore, remember these veterans of the cross, and see to it that their humble homes are brightened with loving gifts which shall supply their needs and warm their hearts. Let every church that is devoted to the cause to which these men devoted their lives, have fellowship in this ministry of love. If any failed to make the offering on last Lord's day, let them see to it that it is attended to on next Lord's day. Thus will your own Christmas, as well as that of these aged preachers, be made the happier.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Have you never wondered why "the angel of the Lord" appeared to the watching shepherds on that first Christmas night, to announce the birth of the world's Redeemer? The greatest event in all history is about to transpire. A remarkable Child is to be born into the world, who was to embody in himself both the human and the divine, and he was to become the King of kings, and the Lord of lords. The announcement of that supreme event, which is to change the world's history, is to be made by heaven to earth. To whom shall the message be sent? The Romans probably would have said Cæsar. Perhaps the Jews would have suggested their high priest or their Sanhedrim in council assembled. Others might have suggested some of the great poets or philosophers of that time. As a matter of fact, we know the angel delivered the message to none of these, but to the wondering and adoring shepherds who watched their flocks by night on Bethlehem's plains. Why was this? God's ways are not man's ways, nor His thoughts our thoughts. As God weighs men, these humble shepherds were probably best prepared to receive this wonderful announcement. It is God's way to choose the weak things of the world to confound the mighty, the foolish to confound the wise. However this may be, we are sure that we would rather have been one of these country shepherds, on that eventful night, and seen the glory of the Lord shining about the startled flock, and heard the sweet strains of that angel choir, and to have hastened with the shepherds to Bethlehem and looked with awe upon the face of the new born Babe, than to have been Augustus, wearing the crown of the Cæsars, or Jewish High Priest, or poet or philosopher or historian.

What a choir that was whose clear notes rang out that night from Judean hills,—“A multitude of the heavenly host!” When volunteers were called for in heaven, to make up that chorus choir, we would not wonder that every shining angel or burning seraph gladly volunteered to go down to the earth to accompany the announcement of the birth of the Christ-child with one of the sweetest of the heavenly songs. They did not appreciate, of course, all that was involved in the wonderful scene that was being enacted in the humble town of Bethlehem, but they knew that heaven and earth were somehow coming into closer communication, and they earnestly desired to look into the meaning of these wonderful developments. It is interesting to notice what tender solicitude the heavenly host seemed to manifest for Christ during all of his earthly ministry. They sang at his birth; they strengthened him by their presence in his temptation in the wilderness; they ministered to him in that dark and tragic hour, on the night of his betrayal, and of his agony in the garden, when all human help had failed him, and they were at the grave on that first Easter morning to announce the good news of his resurrection from the dead. When he ascended up to heaven from the Mount of Olives, there was, no doubt, a company of the shining ones to furnish escort on his triumphal entrance through the uplifted gates into the city of God. What must have been their emotions as they witnessed the crucifixion, and all the sorrows and indignities of the Son of God? They stood ready, twelve legions of them, to fly to the relief of Him whose birth they had heralded, if He but beckoned them. This difference in attitude toward Christ between the heavenly hosts and the people of earth, especially those in authority, suggests a line of cleavage that runs through all time and all beings. All created intelligences are judged by their attitude toward the Christ.

If God should see fit to make another great announcement to the world, to whom would He send his message? Judging by the past, are we not justified in supposing that it would not be to the great ones of earth, perhaps, not to any king or potentate, nor to the Pope of Rome, nor to any of the hierarchy; nor would it be made to any of the great philosophers litterateurs of the age. Somewhere, perhaps, in some secluded spot, there is some soul unknown to the world, that walks by faith, that lives as seeing Him who is invisible, that serves his fellowmen, ministering to their manifold needs, and living humbly with God, whose ear would be attuned to the speech of heaven and whose open heart would welcome the divine message. “Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.” Aye, shall they not also hear God, as He speaks in the innermost depths of their hearts? Has God no more truths to announce to men? Is He not still, through the pure-hearted and the lowly-hearted, bringing forth treasures, new and old, out of His infinite store house, to feed the hungry hearts of men? Let us not doubt, for a moment, that God is still in communication with the earth, and if not by miraculous signs and outward demonstrations, yet by methods and in ways which are no less effective for His purpose, He is revealing Himself more fully as the years and the centuries go by. How shall we know whether these messages or impressions which come to our hearts are of God? They must be tested and tried, by the word that has already been revealed, and that has been tested and tried, and by the combined knowledge and experience of Christian people, or that general consensus of thought and judgment which is the final test of everything that is proclaimed by or to men. We must “try the spirits” now, just as in John’s day. But let us not doubt that the Spirit of God is moving in the hearts of humanity and seeking to lead men up to higher conceptions of truth, and to nobler ideals of life.

Isn’t it noteworthy that Christianity was introduced, or ushered into the world, with a song? Is it any wonder that the religion of Jesus is a religion of song, and that it has inspired some of the noblest anthems which mortals have ever sung? Does not the fact that we have mentioned suggest that music should have a prominent place in the worship and in the religion of Jesus Christ? Is there not a hint, too, that the singers ought to be as clean and pure in heart as any of the other worshipers, if not more so? There is certainly no precedent, in this angelic hymn for having religious songs sung by an unbelieving choir or by those whose lives are impure. No doubt the angelic voices which sung that night under the Syrian blue were of the highest order of excellence, and possessed a sweetness of tone beyond that of any human voice; and yet, much of the interest of their song, perhaps its chief interest, lay in its sentiment. Shall we, then, be indifferent to the sentiments of the songs we sing, if the tunes happen to suit our ears? These, then, are some of the lessons we would draw from the song of the herald angels: let the music come out of hearts in sympathy with Christ, and full of love for Him. Let our voices be cultivated, as far as possible, that we may render the sweetest melody in praise to God; and let the sentiments we sing be such as to lift the heart up to high and holy themes, and bring the soul into communion with God. If, now, we have gathered these lessons, let us hasten with the awe-stricken shepherds to Bethlehem to offer our homage to Him whose birth was heralded and celebrated by the angelic song.

Notes and Comments.

Prof. Borden P. Bowne, who has for twenty-seven years been professor of philosophy in Boston University, is to be made the defendant in a Methodist heresy trial. It will take a little time to adjust ourselves to this new view of Prof. Bowne. Hitherto he has figured as a philosopher whose clear thinking and luminous style have helped many young men out of their speculative difficulties.

There is no such innovator as life. It is constantly throwing away old forms and adopting new ones. It is so in every department of life. Life means growth, and growth means enlargement. The remedy for all imperfections in any living thing is growth. What about the crude views, the inadequate conceptions of God and of Christianity, the imperfect lives as we see them about us—how shall they be remedied? There is but one remedy. We must come to a larger, deeper and richer life. Just as the flowing sap, in spring-time, pushes off the dead leaves of the past year, and sends out new and living twigs, branches and leaves, so the new life in Christ Jesus, growing in fullness and power, will slough off these false and inadequate views and theories, and bring us into a completer and more symmetrical life. To cultivate the spiritual life, therefore, is to strike at the root of all of our imperfections.

According to one of our esteemed contemporaries, the matter of Church Federation is “A closed incident.” Hitherto there has been considerable discussion on the subject pro and con. We may infer from the statement referred to, that a final decision has been reached at last, and the question “closed.” It is really fortunate to have some tribunal where these vexed questions can be settled so summarily. Likely as not, however, there will be a whole lot of people that will not recognize the authority of this tribunal and will go right on thinking about it and talking about it, much as they did before. We are a difficult sort of people to manage by these final decisions. We remember, many years ago, a pamphlet appeared among us entitled “The End of the Organ Controversy.” The brother who wrote it supposed he had settled the matter forever against the use of the organ in worship, but there are only a small fragment of the Brotherhood that to-day recognize the authority of that decision. We predict a similar fate for this more recent pronouncement.

Preaching and Politics By F. W. Norton

The wording of this theme eliminates one element almost entirely from the discussion and sets a limitation to the scope of the paper. The topic is, "Preaching and Politics," not "The Preacher and Politics." It will not, therefore, fall within the province of the paper to consider the relation of the preacher to politics apart from pulpit ministrations. What he may or should do or say, not as a preacher, but as a citizen or partisan in the realm of politics, will not be considered except incidentally. What part he may take in the activities of a campaign, or whether he should accept a nomination for office, if he be so distinguished as to receive one, are questions germane only as they affect the influence of his preaching. Probably all of us would agree that the personal element is a very large and important one in the effectiveness of one's sermon. The measure of the effectiveness of the sermon as delivered is the product of the sermon itself and the personality of the preacher.

This personal element cannot be neglected in the broader view of the whole subject. It would, no doubt, be extremely difficult to discover to what extent and in what direction a preacher's personal activities in politics would affect the influence of his preaching in sermons entirely non-political.

Passing by this question, let us consider that which seems to be more directly suggested by the theme, namely, should political affairs receive any treatment in preaching, and if so, to what extent?

The object of preaching is to present and apply the Word or revealed truth of God to the lives of men. It is to bring men to know God and to God, and to bring the life of God to men. It is to make His will dominant on earth. This is to be accomplished by the preaching of the Gospel, the uplifting of Christ as the Mediator, "the Way, the Truth and the Life," and by teaching men to observe all things commanded, and to embody the divine spirit in all the activities of life.

It goes with the saying in this age, and certainly with us, that Christianity is not an affair of the church building, or of one day only. We do not hesitate to say that it has its place in the family and home-life, or that its spirit should dominate in all business matters. "Let him that stole, steal no more" is a word for all ages. No question will be raised if the Christian view of education be fairly discussed. We approve the declaration of the divine will concerning the family, business, and education, why not in politics? Surely, in this land, we are too far removed from any danger of the union of church and state to be frightened at the thought of applying religion to politics. If the political conditions are what they are commonly supposed to be, the field is indeed needy and the call urgent to apply the "law of the spirit of life."

"I exhort, therefore, first of all, that supplications, prayers, intercessions, thanksgivings, be made for all men; for kings and all that are in high places; that we may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity." When the Apostle wrote these words he bore witness to the influence of government and of those in places of authority, upon the religious life. To point out how the making and executing of laws, and the personal example of those in high places affect the moral and religious conditions of a community would carry us beyond the limits of the paper, and perhaps we all recognize how potent are these influences. But beyond the local situation, in the larger political field, the relation and example of our nation to non-Christian nations must be considered. From the ward councilman up to the President of the United States every man elected or appointed to represent the people, exerts a personal influence because of his position, apart from the discharge of the duties of his office.

Grave moral questions involving human rights fall within the province of the government. Any legislation may have an ethical side, and perhaps all legislation does have. Not alone do such matters as the race problem, the liquor problem, and the relation of labor to capital involve considerations of right and wrong. The question of tariff or of the free coinage of silver has its ethical side.

Aristotle declared: "A state exists for the sake of a good life, and not for the sake of life only. . . . Whence it may be inferred that virtue must be the serious care of a state which truly deserves the name." Another has said that: "Politics is the science of social welfare, and has at heart the achievement of a social order in which the ideals of humanity shall be realized." Locke wrote that: "The end of government is the good of mankind." The writer disclaims any exact knowledge of political science as it is in the books, but it does seem to him that if government does not distinctly conserve the moral interests, it ought at least in no way to hinder them, and that the government in all its acts and in its personnel ought to represent and conform to the highest moral ideals.

The Apostle Paul takes very high ground for government in the Letter to the Romans when he declares that "the powers that be are ordained of God," and that the ruler is a "minister of God."

We do not understand by this that forms of government are ordained of God, but that government itself is. Just as every family in heaven and upon earth derives its order and very name of family from God the Father, so every government has its idea of government and only just right to govern from God, the moral governor of all. And the ruler, the official in whatever capacity, by the divine order stands as God's minister to those governed. Hitchcock says that politics is "a special application of the principles of morality and religion." We may say that this is ideal, but to turn our backs upon it and rule it out of practical politics because it is ideal, is on a par with declaring that the Decalogue and the Sermon on the Mount have no place in politics. If we hold that the magistrate is a "minister of God," it by no means follows that the government will establish a department of evangelism. We have come to an age where other divine ministries are recognized besides those that are supposed to fall exclusively or especially to the class called "ministers." To minister for God is to serve his will and purpose, and it is fully time that it be recognized as a very high and holy ministry for God to maintain and administer such a government as shall serve him in the functions of government. Public office is not only a public trust, it is a sacred trust.

In this country our duty is not to the government alone, it is also as a part of the government. We are the "sovereign people." At least theoretically this is true, and practically it ought to be. All the functionaries of government in this land are but representatives of the "sovereign people." They are executors or servants. Louis XIV might say in his age and place, "I am the state," but it would not sound well in our time and country. We exercise our sovereignty in the power of the franchise—theoretically, practically in the payment of taxes,—or if we hold office, in the discharge of its duties. It is the duty of the people to "reign in righteousness" and to "rule in judgment," and when they do so, there will be little trouble about those of the people who are made servants doing otherwise.

If by "politics" we mean, not partisanship, but the conduct of the affairs of state, it involves all of our duties as citizens. And if our religion is to have no encouragement and find no expression in our citizenship, I know not where it should be manifested in the activities of life. A short time before an important election, Dwight L. Moody asked another noted evangelist: "What is the political outlook?" "I don't know anything about it," was the reply, "my citizenship is in heaven." "Better get it down to earth for the next sixty days," said Moody.

If the duties of citizenship are to be discharged in a religious way, as a service to God, as an expression of Christian life and spirit, there must certainly be need of religious instruction on the subject, and the preacher has not lowered the dignity of his holy calling nor exceeded the commands of Jesus and the spirit of the New Testament when he gives it as he should. He has rather helped to extend the divine authority of Jesus over that which the world has been permitted too long to call secular.

Said David Starr Jordan, writing in the July number of the Atlantic Monthly on "The Voice of the Scholar:" "I read lately an attempt to show that the scholar or the clergyman shall never write or speak on any public or passing question, lest he expose himself to criticism, or find his personality tumbled about in the dust of the political arena. The clergyman devotes his life to the study of moral questions in the light of religion. The scholar devotes himself to the study of truth wherever found, and to the ways by which truth may be available to men. If the scholar and the clergyman are to be silent on questions of vital interest to men, who indeed is to speak? Is it the politician of the day, a mere echo without an idea or his own? Is it the man of money who may have an ax to grind in every movement in public affairs, or who again may be seeking undisturbed possession of that which justice would place in other hands? Is it the popular agitator to whom the social order is one long fit of hysteria? Must we confine all public utterance to those whose passions are excited or whose interests are touched? Shall Emerson and Lowell, Theodore Parker and Phillips Brooks, Eliot and Butler be silent when the fighting editor speaks?"

The thought is growing that the minister of the gospel has not only a right but a duty in religious instruction and exhortation concerning the obligation of Christian citizenship.

The Congregational Association of New Jersey, a few months ago, in a meeting at Asbury Park, after setting forth "the danger which confronts the nation through the lowering of civic righteousness, as recently revealed in confessed bribery, vote-buying, and other forms of corruption," calls upon the churches and ministers to earnestly strive to "raise the ideals of political thought and life."

Last May, Bishop McVickar, in his annual address before the Episcopal Convention in Rhode Island, took for his principal theme the degradation of politics, deploring the indifference and seeming hopelessness of the people, and declaring that "all political evils are largely due to the dominance of the commercial instinct in public affairs." "He declared," says a report of his speech, "that in his belief, the very foundations of the American heritage of popular government were at stake, and that it is the bounden duty of the church to sound the alarm."

Within the same week the Congregational Association of Massachusetts, after resolutions condemning political corruption, laid upon the pastors and churches the duty of "the faithful use of all proper means to exalt the highest ideals of civic responsibility and public fidelity."

Within a few days of this declaration, the Congregational Association of New York state considered the same subject and affirmed that the country had a "right to look to the churches and their ministers for the awakening of the public conscience." Nor is this a new idea in this land where church and state are so strictly separated. Our New England forefathers never meant to divorce religion and politics when they put the ban upon the union of church and state. From the beginning it was the custom in Massachusetts to have a sermon preached on the annual election day by some minister designated by the Governor in Council.

Nearly 150 years ago, when in accordance with the established custom, the annual sermon on election day was delivered before the Colonial Legislature of Massachusetts which was about to elect the councilmen, Ebenezer Pemberton used these words: "Animated by this divine principle, we trust that you will proceed this day to the choice of His Majesty's council, and give your votes for men who have an awful regard for the laws of God. You will choose men of wisdom to discern the times,—more zealous to advance the public welfare than their private advantage—men who will hazard their credit and estates rather than unite in any schemes of oppression and injustice—men who will venture to displease the highest authority upon earth rather than give a vote for a person unqualified for the office for which he is nominated—men that will not sell their country for a bribe, but will generously neglect their private affairs when the public requires their attention—men that will recommend religion, not only by wholesome laws, but by their instructive example."

But if Saul will not come among the prophets, the prophets may at least surround Saul. If the discharge of the duties of citizenship in private and public be made a theme for pulpit treatment, are any limitations to be set? Upon what lines shall the preacher proceed, and how far shall he go? Consecrated common sense applied to the immediate situation in which the preacher is placed, must furnish the special answer needed.

Paul warns Timothy against becoming entangled "in the affairs of this life" to such an extent that he may not "please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier." This text has a wide application; it is a general principle, and is relevant here.

The political duty is but one of many duties. The treatment of the subject in the pulpit must not be to such an extent or in such a manner as to interfere with the general ministry of the Word. Probably most of us could improve in proportioning our ministry to the various themes that ought to be presented to our congregations. There is always the danger of unbalanced or overbalanced sermonizing, in which certain hobbies are made saddle-sore and the people wearied at the continued one-ring performance. The preacher may well beware of the political hobby, for once the bridle on, he is liable to overdo the matter.

There may be now and then special occasions when conditions are so acute and so apparent as to call for specific treatment, but these are the exceptions—rare exceptions. Hardly any mistake in the pulpit is more serious than for a man to affirm where he does not know or has been misinformed, or to make specific charges that he cannot positively substantiate. Anything that approaches personalities or partisanship may easily do more harm than good. The preacher may instruct in righteousness, political righteousness, but he should not assume to dictate or direct specific action. To assume that he has all wisdom and that those who do not see and do as he does are either fools or knaves, is as foolish as it is unchristian. The minister is not a prophet. The spirit of the prophet may have a place in his earnestness, but the spirit of Jesus should be manifest in his charity.

It lies within the power of the preachers of this land to lead in lifting the word "politics" out of the filth of the gutter and the disrepute into which it has fallen and in placing it upon a high plane, above corruption, above partisan strife and party advantage, above private gain. It is his duty to proclaim that every act of citizenship should be an expression of the divine will so far as known, and a sacred service to God. The words, or the spirit of the words of Ebenezer Pemberton, which I have quoted, ought to be repeated every year in every church in the land.

While honors are paid to the heroes of the battlefield, let it be seen to that the God-fearing president, the just judge, the righteous legislator, the law-enforcing executive, even the honest councilman, without regard to party, receive merited praise.

As one who has seen the vision of that which is to be when the "kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ," let the preacher proclaim that the will of God should be done on earth politically. With the ideal before us of that city which John saw descending out of heaven, we may certainly seek to purify that city which is already here. And while we wait for the "new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness," we may at least seek the embodiment of the divine righteousness in the politics of the earth on which we now dwell.

The Lost Soul: A Warning.

"For what is a man profited, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"—Matt. 16:26.

I am alone, and the way is dark. Not even the glimmer of a star to break through the thick blackness of the cloud that wraps me about.

It did not come all at once—this desolation that separates me from the world of light that surrounds me. It gathered about me, little by little—an omission of duty here, a recklessness there, and a commitment of some deed occasionally that shut out the light for a time, only to shine fainter forever afterward; ever fainter and fainter, until it has fled forevermore, and I am shut in complete darkness. Whither shall I turn? The past is gone; the present is filled with phantoms that rise up to torment me. They steal my weapons of defense. They accuse me, unnerving me for battle. They taunt me with weakness. They mock at my hope of victory. They laugh to scorn my faith in the future, and people it with terrors.

Shall I struggle on? I am weak and worn with the conflict, and something seems to tell me all is in vain. I see dimly the world moving around me. It seems a beautiful world, but the cloud hangs between, and I cannot see clearly. The inhabitants are going at a rapid pace. I wonder if they see the cloud.

Only the very young and the aged seem oblivious of danger. On the faces of the former rest the unconscious smile of trusting innocence and love; they dream not of the slimy length of the serpent that came before them.

On the faces of the latter is the calm look of resignation and sweet peace that tells of battles fought and victories won, an unwavering faith in the Great Commander, who is soon to reward them. For them the cloud holds no terrors. They have met the serpent in the way, and have conquered him.

The last payment of interest has been made, and when the principal falls due, they are confident of being able to meet it cheerfully. The sting of death has been removed. They have remembered the promise, "My grace is sufficient for you."

And I see the multitudes of middle-aged—some looking eagerly forward, some looking longingly, helplessly backward, but all being carried swiftly onward with the ever-moving tide. Whither? They cannot see the cruel track of the serpent, for it is hidden by beautiful flowers that cover the way, and a large brilliant star shines in the distant horizon. It is the hope-star that beckons them on. Will it prove an ignis fatuus? To those who do not stop to read the signboards aright, I think it will. Here is one that reads, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." And here is another at the fork in the road:

"Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction. . . But strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life."

The cloud draws closer around me. The thunders crash, and the lightning's vivid flashes reveal an ever-increasing army of phantoms who come to match their strength with mine. They point with accusing fingers to a picture that swings behind me. I turn reluctantly, and a wave of despair sweeps over my soul as the past, in panoramic view, passes before me into the black folds of the enveloping cloud. And again I see the warning, now being fulfilled, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

I cover my face in a terror of remorse and fear, but hearing a mocking laugh, resolutely face the demons that surround me. I match my strength with theirs once more. I arouse to action all the latent forces within me—faith, hope, trust, charity, humbleness, brotherly kindness, temperance, fidelity, meekness, godliness. Truly a noble, valiant army. Courage, faint heart, you will yet win. They spring to the rescue, but see! they fall back before the foe exhausted; they are weak from long enforced idleness. Years of inaction have dwarfed them, and they have been shorn of their strength by doubt, despair, suspicion, pride, hatred, intemperance, infidelity, ungodliness, skepticism, selfishness, who, having stood by me with a smile of encouragement in all the beautiful, bright summer days, when life was full of sunshine, and the small flecks of cloud floating in the serene blue of the sky gave unheeded warning of the approaching storm, now turn unmasked, and in all of their naked hideousness, with a scowl of hatred on the poor, neglected army of virtues that are loyal, though weak, and endeavor to force them beyond my summons forever. Another quick flash reveals a look of desperation on their white faces as they rally round me once more, and with intense gaze, I try to penetrate through the gloom and into the brightness beyond. Oh! for one glimpse of the eternal blue, for one tiny ray from the hope-star, for one glimmer of the smiling eastern skies, that seem to enfold the portals of the Holy City!

But the strife is too unequal. The light is gone forevermore, and despair reigns supreme on the throne of the vanquished soul, as I see its royal guards, one by one, slain at my feet.

DESPAMONA.

When to the flowers so beautiful
The Father gave a name,
Back came a little blue-eyed one,
All timidly it came.
And standing at its Father's feet,
And gazing in His face,
"Dear Lord, the name Thou gavest me, Alas, I have forgot."
Kindly the Father looked him down,
And said, "For-get-me-not."

Worship in the Home.

By D. B. Titus.

The editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, in pleading for a restoration of worship in Christian homes, has certainly begun at the right place. A home such as we have in this land of ours, made possible because of the influences of Christianity, without the worship of God in it, is, to say the least, a sin of ingratitude.

But there is another side. We are giving our money and efforts in abundance every year for the purpose of evangelization. It is well that we should do so, and it will be better if what we have done in this line only marks a small beginning. But as we look about us, we are forced to admit that the masses of the people are not reached by the gospel plea. It is as if a great river had broken over and washed its banks away, and every effort to confine it again to its proper course is only a mound here and there in the mighty flood.

A lady, on going to her kitchen, found the floor covered with several inches of water, and Bridget almost exhausted in her efforts to wipe it up, while the faucet was running wide open. "Why don't you shut it off?" inquired the lady. "Shut it off yourself; I've got all I can do here," was the reply. Rather than let what we have get away, and then try to recover it, we need to keep what is already ours. It is comparatively easy to teach the child into Christ. But, alas! how few families are unbroken in their relation to Christ! Christian parents leave the matter of winning the child to Christ to the Sunday-school teacher or some other outside influence, and too often the child is lost because the powerful, lasting influences of the home were not brought to bear in the right direction at the right time. A very prominent man in the church one time said to me, as we begun a meeting, "If we only get a few children in this meeting, I shall count it a failure." As might be expected, his children are not the young people carrying on the work of that church to-day. We do not hear of the Catholics having protracted meetings and winning large numbers of converts from the world. Probably it would not be possible for them to do so. Nevertheless their growth is marked and steady.

If the family altar can be resurrected, and little by little every day the truth taught in the homes, the high and holy influences of the gospel will become a part of the lives of the children as naturally as the air they breathe. Our churches need preachers, officers, Sunday-school superintendents and members who are trained to carry on its work. They cannot be found in the world. We must find them among ourselves and begin their training in the homes. Then we shall save not only our own, but equip ourselves for the saving of the world.

Woman.

O Woman, moving at thy daily tasks
With all the patience which the years inspire,
Crowning the simple duties of the home
With wealth of meaning otherwise
ungessed,
Asking for recompense no rich reward,
No grand immortal monument of fame,
But with the simple knowledge of a love,
Some pitiable reflection of thine own,
Amplly repaid, rejoiced and satisfied:
In thee the Christ still lives and moves the world.
Thy sacrificial life exemplifies
To man engrossed in sordid, selfish care
That character which, centuries ago,
Sprang from neglected earthly soil, yet bore
An image true of heaven.
'Tis in thee,
Queen of our earthly life, He liveth still;
For well we know that, from thy sweet example
Of tireless love, of pure and strong devotion,
We frame our noblest thoughts of life and God,
And through thee claim some kinship to the skies.

—A Man.

Three Honorable Titles.

By Austin Hunter.

In his Philippian epistle Paul commends Epaphroditus in these words,
"My brother, fellow-worker and fellow-soldier." Paul was fond of giving descriptive titles to people and these titles were significant because they really pointed out some characteristics of the person's work or character. He scarcely ever begins an epistle without some description of himself. It is "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God" or "Paul, a servant of Jesus" or "Paul, a slave of Christ" or "Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ."
By means of these descriptions alone, one could form an adequate idea of the character of the great apostle. So with Epaphroditus. Paul gives us only a brief glimpse at this man, but it is sufficient to identify him as an earnest follower of Jesus and an active Christian worker. What is the significance of these titles?

First of all, he calls Epaphroditus his "brother." The underlying idea that is here contained is sympathy and fellowship. One was their Master; even Christ and they with all Christians were brethren. The basis of this brotherhood was Jesus. In drawing them into fellowship with himself, Jesus drew them into fellowship with each other. In Christ they were one, having a common faith and a common obligation. In the supreme matter of the soul they thought and felt alike.

There are many bonds that hold men together, such as a common race or nation or language or occupation or party, but these bonds are weak as compared with the mighty power by which men are drawn together in Jesus. Race prejudices are often broken down and the obstacles of an unfamiliar tongue are often overcome in the interests of Christian brotherhood. This brotherhood in Christ is strong because it is founded in truth and righteousness and heavenly aspirations. When men are bound together by ties of selfishness, it is only a temporary unity; the ties will sooner or later break. But fellowship in Christ is permanent, because faith and love and purity are naturally cohesive forces.

Brotherly kindness was one of the golden virtues that Peter urged all Christians to add to their faith, and it is one of the fundamental needs of all time. In "Les Miserables" the old bishop said to Jean Valjean, "I ask no man whether he has a name, but whether he has an affliction. Besides, before you told me I knew your name,"
"What!" answered the man, "you know my name?" "Yes," responded the bishop, "your name is my brother."

In the second place Epaphroditus was Paul's "fellow-worker." This was no small compliment that the great apostle paid to this humble disciple. The underlying thought of this term is that of service. This is the very substance of the Christian life.
Jesus said, "Hitherto my father work-eth and I work," and as he looked over the whitened harvest fields he said,
"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." Paul says,
"We are workers together with God."
The church to-day needs more workers and less shirkers. God wants no idlers in his vineyard.

The fact that Epaphroditus was a fellow-worker bound him to Paul even more closely than the fact that he was a brother in Christ. How sweet is the fellowship that grows out of Christian work. We can never forget those souls who have toiled with us in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ.
The memory of their lives is precious and they become to us a constant inspiration. It is our supreme privilege to have fellowship with the choice spirits of all ages in Christian service.

Still further Epaphroditus was Paul's "fellow-soldier." The order here is climacteric. It is greater to be a fellow-worker than a brother, but it is still greater to be a fellow-soldier than a fellow-worker. The underlying idea of this term soldier is hardship or suffering. The term soldier was a favorite with Paul. He exhorts Timothy to "endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." In Ephesians he speaks of the armour, and at the close of his life he says, "I have fought a good fight." Paul knew what it was to suffer for the sake of Christ. Epaphroditus had shared with him his hardships. There is nothing that can cement hearts more closely than the fact that they have suffered together in the service of Jesus. The call of the cross to-day is for soldiers.

Hardships are inevitable. Through much tribulation we reach our reward.
No cross, no crown. No Calvary, no emptied tomb. If we would know the power of the resurrection of Jesus, we must know also the fellowship of his sufferings. Let us enter into this larger fellowship and not be content by simply being brethren in Christ, but fellow-workers and fellow-soldiers.
This is the grandest triple title that any man can wear.

When from the last of the heights to be surmounted in the path of life, we turn and survey the conflicts that lie behind, how insignificant they appear, and how blessed must that man be whose heart then bears him testimony that he did not shirk from them! Standing beside the remains of one of God's soldiers who has thus victoriously accomplished his warfare, I say to myself, "Calm peace at the hour of death is so great a good as to be cheaply purchased by braving the struggles of a long life."—F. A. G. Tholuck.

MEMORY MENDING

What Food Alone Can do for the Memory.

The influence of food upon the brain and memory is so little understood that people are inclined to marvel at it.

Take a person who has been living on improperly selected food and put him upon a scientific diet in which the food Grape-Nuts is largely used, and the increase of the mental power that follows is truly remarkable.

A Canadian who was sent to Colorado for his health illustrates this point in a most convincing manner:
"One year ago I came from Canada a nervous wreck, so my physician said, and reduced in weight to almost a skeleton, and my memory was so poor that conversations had to be repeated that had taken place only a few hours before. I was unable to rest day or night, for my nervous system was shattered.

"The change of climate helped me a little, but it was soon seen that this was not all that I needed. I required the proper selection of food, although I did not realize it until a friend recommended Grape-Nuts to me, and I gave this food a thorough trial. Then I realized what the right food could do and I began to change in my feelings and bodily condition. This kept up until now, after six months' use of Grape-Nuts, all my nervous trouble has entirely disappeared, I have gained in flesh all that I had lost, and what is more wonderful to me than anything else, my memory is as good as it ever was. Truly Grape-Nuts has remade me all over, mind and body, when I never expected to be well and happy again." Name given by Postum Co.,

A Virginian Without Fear Or Reproach

By F. D. Power

Landon A. Cutler was the Nestor of our Virginia ministry. Born Feb. 9, 1837; graduated from Bethany College, June, 1857; called to his reward, Nov. 25, 1903; his whole life devoted to the ministry of the gospel of Christ—he deserves to be held in loving and grateful remembrance. His long and useful service was rendered to the cause in the Old Dominion. Seldom had his eloquent voice been heard outside of its borders. Most of his work was done among the country churches. Opportunities were often presented to him to enter upon a wider field, but wedded to Virginia and the Virginia brotherhood, he could not be induced to change. Upon the churches there, the sorrow of his death comes chiefly, and there his memory will be sacred.

He was a native of Lovingson, Nelson county, and his father was Robert C. Cutler, county clerk, and his mother, Mary Whitehead. He was converted under the preaching of George W. Abell, and baptized in December, 1852. He entered Bethany at seventeen and graduated at twenty, and at once began preaching. July, '57, he married Miss Fannie B. Fitzpatrick, who has ever been to him a faithful sharer and helper in all his labors. In '58 he was made state evangelist and served one year. It was at this time I first heard him at the dedication of the new house of worship at Lebanon, Warwick county. But a small boy at the time, I still remember what a stir his preaching caused in the community and how people came many miles to hear him, and a large number were added to the church.

In 1859 he became pastor of the church in Charlottesville and served through the civil war. During this period he did much service among the soldiers as a chaplain in the camps and hospitals and on the battlefields, and always had a most wholesome influence over the men. Being called some years later to follow him in Charlottesville, I found the good fruit of his Christian character and teaching in many hearts and homes.

In 1865 Mr. Cutler removed to Louisa county and preached for four country congregations. His ministry for the next nineteen years is given to country pastorates and the service of a general evangelist. He held meetings all over the state and baptized hundreds of people. His life was full of good works. He was in constant demand and was a great favorite in the missionary conventions. His prayers were tender and beautiful, and his sermons always fervid and forcible, and his social qualities were of a superior order. His preaching was sometimes more severely doctrinal or spiritually searching than would be popular with certain classes of hearers, but his evident earnestness and sincerity and his carefully prepared and eloquently delivered discourses always secured for him a generous hearing and won for him the epithet of "Silver-tongued." Loyal through and through to the principles for which the church contended, he was always fearless and fluent in the proclamation of these principles, but living himself ever a blameless life, he laid equal stress upon the duties of a practical Christianity, and sought earnestly to enlarge and deepen the spiritual life of the people. Worldliness had in him an implacable foe. That covetousness which is idolatry he resisted by both precept and example. Intemperance and vice in public and in private life he combated with all the ardor of his being. A man of convictions, he always had the courage of his convictions, and it might have been said of him, as of John Knox: "There lies one who never feared the face of man."

In January, 1884, he was called to the Marshall Street Church Richmond. He labored here eight years and six months. Knowing his long service among country churches, his friends somewhat questioned his fitness for a city charge, but he took a small congregation of forty members, with a heavy debt of $2,000, and left them a church of 300 with every dollar of indebtedness removed. He returned to his home in Louisa, and gave himself unstintedly to the country churches and at his death was serving congregations in Orange, Hanover, Caroline, and King William counties. His example here is worthy of special emphasis. Preachers are slow to take the work in the rural districts. Country preachers like country doctors, are supposed to be called to endure unusual hardness. City pulpits are sought after, while the country charge is allowed to go uncared for. It is a great mistake. The three years I spent in this service were among the most profitable and helpful of all my ministry, and I had more ready money in my pocket and square meals three times a day than I have ever had in the city. The country church gives us nine-tenths of our preachers, and it will be a sad day for the city church when its country sister closes her doors.

Mr. Cutler was always a strong temperance man. In '84 he became a prohibitionist and voted for St. John and Daniels. He became an uncompromising advocate of this cause, and it cost him something, but he was true to his convictions. His eloquent voice was heard in the pulpit in ringing denunciation of the liquor traffic. In '94 he was nominated for governor of the state, though without his knowledge or consent, and he made eight speeches, six of them in churches, and received 2,700 votes. He was sometimes called "The Apostle of Prohibition."

While a man of strong personality and decision of character, our brother was most simple and unaffected in his Christian faith and life. With form erect, with sparkling, piercing, splendid eyes, with a clear tenor voice that rang out like a trumpet and reached the largest assemblies, with forceful declamation that fell like the blows of a trip-hammer upon any sin, he possessed the heart of a woman and the faith of a child. From boyhood he was a Christian. Of his conversion he writes: "In December, 1852, Brother Abell came to Nelson Court-House. The Methodists were the only religious people who had a house of worship in Lovingson; but they regarded Brother Abell as a preacher of heretical doctrine, and refused him admittance to their church. He preached in the court-house. He came up to my mother's one afternoon, and when I went into the chamber he was talking to my sister, then nearly eighteen years old, who was not a Christian. My mother at that time was a member of the Methodist Church. As soon as I took my seat he began talking with me on the importance of obeying the gospel. The next evening, at the close of the second sermon, I went forward to confess my heart-faith in Jesus, and the next morning was baptized. I had never witnessed a baptism." Thus from his sixteenth year to his sixty-sixth he served faithfully—a half century of noble living.

For six months his health has been failing. In the state convention early in November he made an address on the history and work of the Virginia Christian Missionary Society, which was in his best vein. November 15 he preached at Unionville, Orange Co., but was only able to speak once. He was urged by a physician to go home and rest. When he returned home he was hardly able to get into the house, and the family doctor when he saw him said, "Brother Cutler has been in the harness since he was a boy and is worn out."

He said when first taken ill he would never get up again, but it was all right. He awoke in the night and sang, "It is well with my soul," and said to his good wife he wanted to talk about "Robert." Robert was a beloved son who died in the beginning of his promising ministry while pastor of the Christian Church at Dayton, O., soon after his graduation at Bethany. Six daughters, all of whom are married, survive him. The last services were held by Richard Bagby, pastor of the Louisa Church. The Virginia brotherhood have another worthy name to add to the roll in their eleventh of Hebrews.

The Effect of Sin upon Human Nature.

By J. W. Lowber.

"He that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul," is the language of the wise man (Prov. 8:36.) Worcester thus defines sin: "Any action, word, desire, purpose or omission contrary to the law of God, a violation of the divine law, or a voluntary failure to comply with it." The idea of omission is included, as well as that of commission. The word sin is from the Greek sinein, to injure. It may be allied to the Anglo-Saxon sundrian, to separate. The oldest German definition of sin is, any transgression of the law. The Bible defines sin as the transgression of the law (1 John 3:4).

As a substantive, sin is sometimes spoken of as a power, a principle, or an evil. While a tendency or propensity to evil may be transmitted, sin itself cannot be. God never permits a person, not idiotic, to be born into this world, who has not the power to do right. Take from a man the power to do right without his own act, and you at once release him from all responsibility.

Man occupies an intermediate position between the natural and spiritual worlds. He may go up, or he may go down. Pascal calls him the glory and the scandal of the universe. The inspired bard of Israel in one sentence contemplates man as poor and depressed; and in the next as exalted and almost angelic (Ps. 8:4, 5). These apparently contradictory statements make up the true view of human nature. In even good men, we find contradictory elements. The poet says, "Explain it as you will, woman is a contradiction still." This statement is just as true of man as it is of woman. With all of his defects, man has been made only a little lower than the angels, and has been crowned with glory and honor. There is a treasure in human nature with which only a few are fully acquainted. We should look for the good in man, and not be like those birds which always search for the impure. Pessimism has been a curse to the human race.

The man that sins, wrongs his own soul. That he injures society, no one will question. The moral leper spreads misery through the world; he inflicts injury upon the vital part of society; and frequently, the innocent are destroyed by his ruinous passion. Sometimes society has to even take the life of man for its own protection. This country demands such rigid law, even for the protection of its chief magistrate. However great may be the injury done by the transgressor to society, the greatest injury is done to his own soul. He destroys body, soul and spirit. Sin, like leprosy, will manifest itself even in the face of man. The reason of man is wronged by sin. In some cases it absolutely destroys reason. This is frequently true of the inebriate. The sinner prostrates reason by employing it in his evil designs. Sin is insanity, for it makes man an irrational creature and a fool. He will give up heaven for earth when, in the true sense, he might enjoy both. A pure mind can enjoy much more in this world than can an impure one. Sin is, therefore, very unreasonable.

Sin greatly wrongs the conscience. Conscience is as much a part of man's nature as is reason. When a man sins, conscience enters its protest. A great student of human nature says: "Conscience makes cowards of us all." In sickness the sinner is a very great coward. I knew a certain blasphemer who did nothing but pray when he was sick, and nothing but curse when he got well. The transgressor knows that his course is wrong, and does not want his children to follow his example.

Sin is ruinous to the affections. It is destructive to the parental, the filial and the conjugal. In fact, all the most sacred attachments of earth are severed by its malignant touch. The will power in man is ruined by sin. Dr. Carpenter, in his Mental Physiology, calls the will the distinguishing characteristic between man and the lower animals. Every sin weakens the will power of him that commits it. When man's will power is gone, then all is lost. It is an absolute truth, that he who sins wrongs his own soul.

An Appeal.

To the man who is anxious for the success of the cause of Christ in our beloved state of Missouri, it is easily apparent that one great need is that of well equipped ministers of the gospel. Many of our preacherless churches are so because they cannot find the men to serve them. It is well known, also, that our material to supply this want must come in nearly all cases from the homes of the poor, to whom a college education, without assistance, is difficult, if not impossible.

It was, therefore, a matter of supreme gratification that at our recent state convention, under the inspiration largely of an impassioned appeal of President J. B. Jones, our small fund for this purpose was increased by pledges to the amount of $1,500. Surely nothing in that great convention was more delightful than this, or promised more richly for the future. In the years to come, when those who gave have passed to their reward, their money will still aid in this holy ministry.

Already several young men, sturdy and strong, anxious to fully equip themselves for this ministry, but unable to do so for the lack of means, have heard of this enlarged provision and have applied for assistance; more are coming to ask for this benefit, and the prospect is that soon the money on hand will be exhausted. This fund has been placed in charge of a committee of three, W. F. Richardson, chairman, J. P. Pinkerton, treasurer, T. A. Abbott, corresponding secretary, and the very greatest care will be given in its use. This committee comes now to our people in Missouri and asks,

1. That all who made pledges at Columbia and have not paid their first installment will do so at the very earliest possible moment. Some who were able to do so, have paid the full amount of their pledges, while others have sent their first payment. To all these we are grateful.

2. We believe that there are many others throughout the state who would like to share in this blessed work. Surely no better use could be made of a portion of the means God has put into our hands. We appeal to you, therefore, as lovers of our Lord who desire the enlargement of his kingdom, to send us a pledge for this ministry. Can you give $10 per year for ten years, or five years? Do so. Can you give $5 per year for ten years, or five years? Do that. Any amount that you can devote to this great purpose we shall be happy to receive. We hope to hear from many of our people who, like those who gave at Columbia, are ready to sacrifice for His name's sake. Send all pledges and remittances to J. P. Pinkerton, 311 Century Building, Kansas City, Mo.

ON THE BABY

Coffee Even the Babies Thrive On.

The little daughter of a College President was saved by the use of Postum Food Coffee at a time when she could not take any solid food.

Baby's aunt says: "My sister and her husband (who is President of a College in Georgia) visited me last Christmas and their little baby two months old was very sick. I thought it was not properly nourished so I began feeding it on Postum which I have used in my own home for years with such grand results.

"You would be surprised to know how that little thing improved. Sister had been feeding it on artificial food that did not agree with it. The baby continued to get stronger all the time we were feeding her on Postum, and when sister left here she took Postum with her for she feels certain that with Postum to feed the baby on she is sure of good healthy, nourishing food drink." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum is made of the purest cereals with absolutely no medication whatever and when boiled according to directions it is heavy with food value and a great nourisher and builder as well as a delicious drink. It is also a specific for all of the dozens of different diseases caused by coffee. Trial proves this.

News From Many Fields

Southern California.

H. E. Wilhite is in an interesting meeting with his home forces at Oxnard. He is doing a great work in Ventura county.

R. P. Shepherd, formerly of East Orange, N. J., has crossed the continent and is for a time to be associated with B. F. Coulter in the work of the Broadway Church. They are now in a good meeting, in which doubtless the interest will be maintained until the holidays.

R. P. McKnight, the beloved pastor at Oskaloosa, has been forced to this climate on account of his wife's health. He is sojourning in San Diego at present. Doubtless Brother McKnight will prove a God-send in the way of reinforcements to the Lord's forces on the coast, and we certainly pray that our salubrious climate may bring hope and joy to his home.

Eugene Burr is meeting with good success in his difficult field at East Los Angeles. This church will entertain our December preachers' meeting on the 7th inst.

W. G. Conley reports a splendid short meeting at Redlands, in which he was assisted by W. E. Crabtree, of San Diego.

Cal. Ogborn now looks after the churches at Downy and Ocean Side, dividing his time between them. Success to him and them.

The eastern refugees from the sleet and ice and snow and cold are now pouring by the train load into the cities and towns and villas of this land of sunshine and flowers. May our churches meet them with a cordial greeting, for nothing is so acceptable to a stranger in a strange land as sincere Christian fellowship. And may our new comers bring with them a bounteous supply of religion. By which we mean, not so much the formal letters, carried in pockets and trunks, but a soulful faith in the Son of God, for the life we now live in the flesh.

Northern California.

And still the good work goes on. The meetings at Fresno, Visalia, West Park, Lakeport, Alexander Valley, are all making history. Conversions are the result at each place.

The reports of the missionaries employed by the state board since Aug. 1, show 87 baptisms and 108 added otherwise, or a total of 195, or at the rate of 550 for the year. This is even better than last year, and the months that should count most are still ahead of us.

The board entered November over $500 in debt and closed the month with over $600 in the treasury and all bills paid, thanks to the liberality of the churches and their generous responses to our setting forth the needs of the field.

One thing that has bothered us much here in times past, but which we hope to overcome, is the question of "tramp preachers." So far as I know only two are at work in this state now.

One of them may have left. His name is Stanley, (R. E.) He lies, drinks, and succeeds in begging or borrowing anywhere from 50 cents to $29 at a place. A warrant is in the hands of officers in Contra Costa county and possibly in Los Angeles county for him.

The other one I will not name because I know of nothing against his character, but I doubt his ability and so do the churches where he presents himself for work, for very few will permit him to preach. He tramps because he is broke, and of course begs meals, lodging and a dollar or two to help him on his way.

If a man is honest, a preacher of any ability and goes "broke," he can tackle a woodpile and soon put himself where he can appear half way respectable. If he won't do so, he does not deserve even a meal of victuals.

Brethren, the time has come for us not to encourage such work.

I think with these two exceptions we have a fine, consecrated lot of men in the ministry in this state, a company that we may well be proud of; a company of men that are telling mightily for the Master's work.

I am at this writing at Corning with Brother Hatch, looking over a large tract of land with a view to a Christian colony. If the land is found to be such that we are positively sure our brethren from the east can come here and make good homes, be prosperous, happy and contented, and we can make suitable arrangements, we shall endeavor to plant a Christian colony so as to give us another good, strong church in this state.

This will be much better than to have our people who are coming to California scattered where they are likely to be lost to the cause we love. While we have 91 churches in northern California, yet there are 17 counties without a Christian church. We want to be absolutely sure, though, before we start a colony, for only by its permanency and success could we hope to attain the purpose we are after.

We would not promote a colony with money, making in view, but to multiply churches and forward the cause of primitive Christianity in the beautiful golden state.

Healdsburg, Cal.

New England.

Springfield, with a population of 66,000, is one of the most beautiful cities in New England. It is situated on the splendid Connecticut River, surrounded by magnificent hills. It possesses broad avenues, lined with beautiful trees, and its homes are noted everywhere for their beauty.

Its government is of the highest order. Never in the history of the city has there been a scandal connected with the municipality. Its officials have, in most cases, been men of integrity and honor. The present mayor is a business man of excellent character, educated, fearless, true and just. He is so well liked by all the citizens that the opposing party would have endorsed him as their candidate at the coming election, were it not feared by a few that such action would tend to weaken the party.

The schools are typical of New England, presided over by a fine board of education and a splendid corps of teachers. The high school building, on State Street, is one of the best in the country. The library, art and natural history museums add much to the intellectual life and beauty of the city. The Springfield Republican, a paper quoted all over the United States, has done much to mold the character of the citizens.

Like Brooklyn, N. Y., it can be said of Springfield that it is a city of churches. This, however, is no indication that its spiritual life is at high tide, for that is not true. Morally the city takes high rank, but spiritually it is sadly lacking. Years ago Springfield was the centre of extreme orthodoxy. Not many miles from here Jonathan Edwards lived and fought the battles of Calvinism. We stand amazed as we read his sermon, "Sinners in the hands of an angry God." Our souls revolt at his awful doctrine, but it must not be forgotten that Edwards and his associates were men of conviction. They believed in God and lived just lives accordingly, and were it not for their stern Puritanism, despite all its faults, Springfield, and indeed all New England, would not be as strong and vigorous morally as it is to-day. But now the church, especially the Congregational Church, has swung to the opposite extreme. Springfield to-day is a center of extreme liberalism. Dr. Philip Moxom, pastor of the South Church, is its chief "apostle." He has a keen mind and possesses great intellectual strength. The spirit of his teachings has permeated throughout the different churches, chilling the spiritual life and resulting in inactivity. The people continue to go to church, but not so much to hear the gospel as to develop the ethical spirit. It can be truly said that Springfield is a modern Athens. But the pure gospel has as much power to-day as it ever had, and there is at least one little church in this "City of Homes" that believes in it with all their hearts, and in their humble way are doing their best to lead the people "back to Jerusalem." We rejoice, moreover, to say that God is honoring our efforts. Our growth is slow, but decided. We have already outgrown our present quarters and we are planning to erect a larger building. Dr. J. H. Hardin, New England evangelist, is at present with us in a meeting. Large audiences are the rule. There have been two confessions and the outlook for more is very hopeful.

G. A. REINL, Cor. Sec. of N. E.

From the "Inland Empire."

This is the title given to that vast region of most fertile farming country in eastern Oregon and Washington. It includes some counties noted for the production of cereals and fruits almost unequaled in quantity and quality in any portion of the United States.

On an interesting journey extending over several weeks, it was my privilege to drop in upon some of the thriving congregations built up in the last few years, and partaking of the thrift characteristic of the country.

Wasco is the principal wheat shipping point for Sherman county. A small congregation here has a house of unpretentious design and no settled pastor. Brother Harrell, from Illinois, was expected to hold a meeting for them. Sherman county should have a preacher all the time, and he should live at Wasco.

Walla Walla, of 13,000 population, and growing, is a city beautiful for situation, an educational center, a historic town dating back to the pioneer days. Here is Whitman College, getting ready for a great work. Here are fine public schools and good church buildings. The Christian church is adequate for present work. The people whom we meet are a genial, whole-souled people. It was my privilege here, as at Wasco, to preach twice on Sunday to a well-filled house. Here they pay the preacher from a bank account, which speaks well for their business capacity.

Brother Coppee is at present supplying until Brother Stephens, who comes early in the new year, can get on the ground from Missouri. Surely he will find a good people to work with.

Lewiston, at the junction of Snake and Clearwater in Idaho, is happily situated for commerce. It is historic, dating from the exciting mining days of the early sixties. It has ambitions now of a different character, hoping shortly to be on one or more of the through railroad lines, which will mean much for its future. It is surrounded by a fine grain and fruit region, and is in touch with the rich mines of central Idaho.

Bro. J. D. Pine and his flock had just finished a busy week feeding the hungry mobs at the Interstate Fair, clearing nearly $400. His morning sermon could not forget that. Good thought. In the evening I consented to relieve him. The people and pastor are happy in their relationship, and have a good future, with a hard struggle where "Satan's seat" is.

Clarkston, just across the river, is one of the new towns—result of irrigation, and a fine example of the capacities of our dry land when wet up and down far enough. Results are marvelous. I will not tell all, but will say that land only ten years since lying out as unfit even for pasture, is now selling at $600 to $1,000 per acre, and very little on the market under the present ditch. What wealth there is to those who, like C. F. Adams, of Boston, could "see things!" The church here is a young giant, but needs help along some lines. With a comfortable house and a new pastor, they have opportunity for a great work. Brother McCollough, from Nez Perce, Idaho, has recently taken the work.

Pomeroy, the county seat of Garfield county, has grown in the last few years. Here is the only Christian church in the county. Eighteen years ago the coming holidays, I, with my Sankey (Bro. J. V. Crawford, now of Heppner), went over from Dayton school work and preached for a week. This was the first series of meetings our people ever held. Since then, Brothers Daisley, Walden and others have sowed and reaped. Now a fine, neat building, most comfortably seated, is the result of faithful labors. The Sunday-school is a model. They have a good representative class from the business community. Bro. A. Sanders and wife are the pastors. I heard it stated by one of the elders, who is a man of sense, that Sister Sanders is an ideal helper in the pastoral work; and Brother Sanders, let me say, is up-to-date in his work. So is the church. I preached for them at night. Brother McKey (82 years of age), who was at our first meeting, invoked His blessing. Brother Thompson and family, with whom I had a pleasant visit, have been there all these years putting in dollars and prayers and work.

Dayton, of precious memory, where I spent three pleasant years in high school, has grown more business-like and is a better town. A new school building, costing $50,000, is one evidence. Churches are better, ours among them, with Bro. H. T. Morrison as pastor, is just enlarging at a cost of $2,000. Brother Stephens and wife were to be with them on Dec. 6, to rededicate and continue in a meeting. The church is certainly prosperous and has a good future.

Athena, with her new $7,000 church, is happy with Brother Jenkins as their recently settled pastor. They have the best organization, in some ways, in Oregon.

Pendleton is well equipped for work, and love their pastor, Brother Brooks.

BRUCE WOLVERTON.

Wisconsin.

Last week I visited some of our churches in the interests of our state work, and found many things to encourage. Richland Center, where I ministered to the church for two years, was my first stopping place. And no people ever gave their former pastor a more hearty welcome. Under the able leadership of Brother Cash, the church is now in a most prosperous condition. It did my soul good to see a number for whom I had prayed and labored—seemingly without success—now active members of the church. A meeting last summer in which the different churches in the city federated, was by far the best thing that the religious people of Richland Center ever did. About 35 united with our church as the results of the meeting, and many lukewarm and indifferent ones are now actively engaged in the Lord's work. Other churches had great gatherings and spiritual uplift. Our next state convention, Sept. 13-16, 1904, will meet with our church here.

From Richland Center I took stage across country 23 miles for Sugar Grove. The ride, although a cold one, was a most delightful one. There is something about the Wisconsin hills that gives one a sense of strength and security. The Sugar Grove church has been without regular preaching for several years, but not a Lord's day has passed without their social service. During the last year they have erected a very neat and substantial church building, which they will dedicate without a call for money, the necessary amount having been raised before dedication day. Milton Wells, who was their located minister and who has held several meetings for them, will conduct the dedicatory services when the time comes. My next point was Readstown, which I reached by driving. The church here is a child of the state board. They are few in numbers, but have the Lord's work at heart. They have purchased a lot and expect to build next summer. This place, in co-operation with Sugar Grove and Sabin, have just employed T. H. Goodnight, of Viroqua, to preach for them. We are expecting good results from this field under his wise judgment and able leadership.

Then I took stage again, 13 miles to Viroqua. The church here has been greatly blessed during the last year through the ministry of T. H. Goodnight. I heard many expressions of regret that he was going to leave.

Get the Most Out of Your Food

You don't and can't if your stomach is weak. A weak stomach does not digest all that is ordinarily taken into it. It gets tired easily, and what it fails to digest is wasted.

Among the signs of a weak stomach are uneasiness after eating, fits of nervous headache, and disagreeable belching.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla at different times for stomach troubles, and a run down condition of the system, and have been greatly benefited by its use. I would not be without it in my family. I am troubled especially in summer with weak stomach and nausea and find Hood's Sarsaparilla invaluable." E. B. HICKMAN, W. Chester, Pa.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

Strengthen and tone the stomach and the whole digestive system.

From here I took a train for home, reaching my destination at eleven o'clock Saturday night.

The church at Werley, that has been without preaching for several years, has employed R. G. Sears for part of his time. He has been preaching at Packwaukee since he came into the state. He reports one confession last month. Brother Sears is doing post-graduate work in Madison University. In a competitive examination he won four first and one second place in five examinations, securing for himself a scholarship. If you know of any member of the Christian Church in Madison write him at 152 W. Gorham St., or H. C. Taylor, 1104 W. Johnson St.

H. F. Barstow, who labored so faithfully for several years at Hickory, has located with the church at Ladysmith. Before leaving Hickory he held a short meeting, and reports it as follows: "The result was the baptism of three young men for whom I had been anxious nearly ever since I came to the place; the reconsecration of several who had been unfaithful, and the church very much encouraged."

We are planning for larger things in our state work than ever before. At our last board meeting it was decided that we place a man among the Norwegians. This will require a special effort upon the part of every church, and we hope that all will realize their responsibility and make larger offerings than they have ever made. The C. W. B. M. has cut their apportionment down $100, so this is another reason why we should give more liberally than ever before. The first quarterly payment for our state work is now due; if you have not sent it in, please do so at once.

New Orleans.

Our regular services in the Crescent City are more largely attended now than at any time since I came to this work.

For five to eight months every winter this city is overrun with visitors, many of whom are Disciples. They will always find a welcome at the church, Camp and Melpomene Streets.

Brother and Sister W. H. Hough, of the Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn, have been with us for some time, and are regular attendants upon all our services. We could wish for them permanently.

Bro. Herbert C. Parker, of the Vermont Avenue Church, Washington, has recently taken up his residence in our city. We give him a warm welcome. We need more good Christian young men in our church and city.

Claude E. Hill, late of Missouri, now of Mobile, is with me in a few days' meeting. Brother Hill is a fine preacher and genial Christian gentleman. We hope Missouri will send us a few more like him, for whom we should be glad to secure large fields. He is doing a fine work in Mobile. The South is on rising ground for the Disciples.

The Alabama State Convention was recently held in the new church at Bessemer, near Birmingham. Two hundred delegates were present, the largest number in the history of that work. By far more money was raised for state missions than ever before. S. P. Spiegel was re-elected state evangelist for his third year. The next convention will meet with the new church at Oxford, near Anniston. The policy of those Disciples is to meet with a new church in a new place, other circumstances being favorable, and thus let the convention be missionary itself.

Bro. J. L. Ferguson and his Christian family, after a residence of a few years in the Crescent City, have returned to Nevada, Mo. Brother "Jack," as we all familiarly called him, is a train dispatcher, and one of the most conscientious Christian gentlemen to be found anywhere. He was our financial secretary and the whole church loved him. His wife is a lovely Christian, and their son Donald obeyed the gospel the last Lord's day he was with us. We shall miss them very much, but Nevada will be very much better off by our loss.

One of the saddest strokes ever received by this church was on the morning of Dec. 7, when Mrs. Phoebe A. Lines, wife of Dr. D. M., and mother of Dr. D. A. and Miss Frances, of this city, and Dr. E. A. Lines, of Cuba, ceased her labors with us. She was one of the most cultured, refined, consecrated Christians I have ever known. Always at her post and ready for service, never a word of complaint or censure. The family, the church, society will miss her. Personally I shall miss her very much. One of the largest gatherings in this city for some time was that which surrounded her remains. She had been in delicate health, and at the age of 63 it required pneumonia but six days to do its fatal work.

"We are gathering funds and will build a church house at Utopia."—J. R. Kelley.

"A new church house will soon be completed at Como."—A. M. Shelton.

Smithville dedicated a splendid new house of worship, Nov. 29, Chalmers McPherson aiding his son in the gospel, Ernest Bradley.

The roof is on the $20,000 churchhouse at Texarkana. W. S. Bullard has done a fine work at Texarkana, and so quietly that the brotherhood will not find it out unless some one else tells it.

L. A. Betcher, of Mineola, has accepted the work at Orange and is already at work and meeting with much encouragement.

Jewell Howard has accepted the work at Plano and will begin work there Jan. 1.

The church at Wills Point has outgrown their old building under the three years' ministry of M. A. Smith, and is building a new and more commodious house of worship.

Lufkin church, under the leadership of R. Jackson, has about completed a good churchhouse and "will henceforth be in line with every good work."

The first six months of our missionary year closes with our financial obligations all paid and a small balance in the treasury. With a number of our larger churches yet to hear from, we have good reasons to expect a prosperous year's work. The largest offering for Texas missions is $352.25, and comes from the church to which "Uncle Charley" Carlton devoted more than twenty years of his fruitful life, the seat of Carlton College. A. E. Ewell is the faithful minister now.

Perhaps, all things considered, the most liberal offering was made by the Texas Christian University Church—$52.50. This church is made up largely of students in Texas Christian University. They are being educated.

The Records.

The lessons for the first six months of this year are on the life of Christ as recorded in the Gospels of Matthew, Mark and Luke. The principal records of our Lord's life are found in four little books, which we call the Gospels, and which stand at the beginning of the New Testament. Nearly all of the principal facts of his life and death are recorded also in various passages in the Epistles, but the four Gospels may be considered as pre-eminently the biographies of Jesus.

But even these do not profess to tell the story of his life with anything like completeness. The writers wrote not to satisfy curiosity, and not in obedience to that sense of record which prompts the chronicler to record everything that happened simply because it happened. They wrote to show that Jesus was the Messiah and Savior, and to record those things about him which pertained to his mission. Even the few incidents which they record are not given in strictly chronological order, as can be seen by comparing the different records. The Gospels are, therefore, not histories. They are not the result of a conscious literary effort, but are the artless record of those things which those who knew Jesus best considered it most important for the world to know about him.

The Gospels are not the earliest books of the New Testament. Several of the Epistles had been written before Mark's Gospel appeared, about the year 66. Matthew's was written probably after the death of Paul, and Luke's still later, while the Gospel of John was not written until about the year 98, when the whole apostolic generation had passed away, with the exception of John himself.

The Synoptic Gospels.

The Gospels of Matthew, Mark and Luke embody substantially the same events and exhibit marked similarities in point of view and even in style. The Gospel of John, on the other hand, omits much which the first three Gospels record, and records much which they omit. The first three are therefore called the Synoptic Gospels, because they present the same view of the life of Jesus. They report almost exclusively the Galilean ministry, with the exception of the events connected with the birth and death, while John lays much greater emphasis upon the ministry in Judea.

If only the three Synoptic Gospels were taken into account, there would be no reason to suppose that more than one year elapsed between the baptism and the crucifixion of Jesus. It is only by adding the information which John gives—especially his reference to the feasts at Jerusalem which Jesus attended—that we are led to conclude that our Lord's public ministry occupied about three years.

The lessons for the next two quarters are taken entirely from the Synoptic Gospels. In studying them, it is important that the details be not allowed to obscure the whole. It is worth while to fix firmly in mind the following:

Outline of the Life of Christ.

1. Birth years of private life: annunciation; birth; infancy; boyhood.
2. Opening events of ministry: preaching of John the Baptist; baptism of Jesus; temptation; call of first disciples; first miracle.
- (3. Early Judean ministry. Given only in John.)
4. Beginning of ministry in Galilee:

preaching and miracles about Capernaum; call of four disciples; first hostility of the Pharisees.

5. Second period of ministry in Galilee: twelve chosen; Sermon on the Mount; preaching, teaching and miracles of the Sea of Galilee; feeding the five thousand.

6. Third period of ministry in Galilee: two journeys into the north; transfiguration.

7. Perean ministry: final departure from Galilee; the seventy; journey to Jerusalem.

8. Passion week: triumphal entry; cleansing the Temple; discourses and parables of warning; the last supper; betrayal, trial and crucifixion.

9. Resurrection: appearance during forty days; ascension.

The Boyhood of Jesus.

Twelve Years of Childhood.

Passing by the familiar narratives of the annunciations, the birth and the infancy of Jesus, the lesson begins with the last recorded episode in the thirty years of private life. The wonderful signs and portents which accompanied the birth of Jesus had passed away, and during twelve years of infancy, childhood and boyhood, he had grown as other children grow; fuller of wisdom, perhaps, more kind and considerate than other children, but in so far as there were in him any special manifestations of the power that should be his, let us believe that they were such as were proper to a child. A perfect manhood might well be preceded by a perfect childhood—not a childhood of undue precocity, but one which showed the natural and normal growth of the mind, the soul and the body. It is said that "the grace of God was upon him," and surely the grace of God cannot be more clearly exhibited than in the perfect and healthy growth of a child.

The Visit to Jerusalem.

Now the boy Jesus has arrived at the age when, under the Jewish law, he is expected to assume the obligations of religion and to become responsible for his own religious life.

The family's annual journey to Jerusalem has more than ordinary significance this year. The usual ceremonies at the Temple were performed, it seems, without any extraordinary incidents, but the boy lingered when the others departed, and when his parents searched for him, they found him among the learned men in the Temple, not discoursing to them and laying down the law to them, as it is sometimes represented, but "hearing them and asking them questions."

There is no indication that he laid aside the sweet simplicity of childhood to become a precocious lecturer or boy preacher. His childhood was too perfect and too wholesome for that, but as he asked questions of the doctors and, with becoming modesty, answered the questions which they put to him, there was evidence of a wonderful insight into spiritual things. Probably it was not so much his supply of information which surprised the doctors of the law, as the spiritual point of view from which he viewed religious things. Such a view would not be essentially unchildlike, but it would be more astonishing to the hard and fast literalists, who were the ruling force in the Judaism of that day.

This New Paper is issued weekly and consists of eight pages of three columns each, printed on fine book paper, bran-new type, in the best style of the art, and as far as appearance is concerned, will not suffer in comparison with any similar paper in the land.

For Whom Intended. THE ROUND TABLE is a paper for wide-awake, bright-eyed Boys and Girls in their "early teens," who are a little too old for The Young Evangelist and not quite far enough along in years and in their tastes and acquirements to be greatly interested in the material which goes into the columns of Our Young Folks, which is intended for young men and women who are engaged in Bible Study and Christian Work, especially along Sunday-school and Endeavor lines.

Its Contents. THE ROUND TABLE is quite distinctly a "Story Paper," five of its eight pages will usually be occupied with Serial and Shorter Stories, always pure in tone and instructive in character, with fine illustrations. The remaining pages will be filled with Table Talks on a great variety of themes; Odds and Ends of useful information; Outlines of the Sunday-school Lessons and Endeavor Topics; A Puzzle Drawer full of Riddles, Charades and Problems, to exercise the wits of young readers, and in each issue a sufficient amount of Pepper and Spice to keep its readers awake and smooth out any wrinkles that may have a tendency to gather in their faces.

Subscription Price. One copy, one year, 50 cents; in clubs of five, to one address, 40 cents each; in clubs of ten or more Quarterly subscriptions at proportional rates.

THE GROWTH I NEED.

—Eph. 4:11-16.

To "grow up in all things into him who is the head, even Christ"—this is the growth that we need. Everything else is secondary to this. There are many other respects in which it may be well for us to grow, if we can, but they are important just in proportion as they help us to grow like Christ.

The attainment of excellence, or perfection, through slow and often painful growth, not by a sudden stroke—this is God's plan. Character must always be the result of growth. God himself could not give a man a strong character. He might keep a man sinless by shielding him from temptation or by taking away from him the power of choice. But character must be achieved by struggle and growth.

How may we grow? It is easy enough for us at intervals, and especially at the New Year's season, to feel a more or less vague desire to be better and to grow into stronger and more Christ-like Christians. But how shall we do it?

1. One must be born right before he can grow right. Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again." Read John 3:38.

2. Healthy growth is possible only when the laws of life are obeyed. The commands of Jesus are the laws of spiritual life. Unswerving loyalty to him and a settled purpose to follow his leading and do his will, are necessary to growth.

3. Feed the soul upon God's truth. His word must be studied in order to know his truth. Systematic, continuous and intelligent Bible study will be found a great help to Christian growth.

4. As fresh air is necessary to bodily life and growth, so the atmosphere of God's presence is essential to spiritual growth. Prayer introduces the soul into this atmosphere. Prayer must be daily and the spirit of prayer must be constant. We cannot, by occasional periods of devotion, store up spiritual vitality to last us through times of indifference, any more than a man's lungs can store up enough air to last him a week.

5. We must exercise. Growth comes with exercise. The practice of unselfishness, of self control, of all the virtues which go to make up the Christ-like character, will do much toward causing an increase of these virtues. Would we grow more Christ-like? Then let us, in the measure of our ability, act like him and put his precepts into immediate practice.

6. Remember that growth requires patience and persistence. Nothing grows by jerks. Faithfulness is better than brilliance as a means of growth. Find your duties—in the church, in the home, in the city, in business—and do them conscientiously and regularly. That is the way to grow.

DAILY READINGS.

Dec. 28.—Birth before Growth. John 3:1-8.
Dec. 29.—Growth by Feeding. 1 Peter 2:1-5.
Dec. 30.—Growth by Exercise. Phil. 2:12-16.
Dec. 31.—Growth by Trust. Matt. 6:27-34.

FOR THE LEADER.

Give out to various members such sub-topics as knowledge, faith, love, patience, giving, ministering, prayer, soul-winning, etc., and ask them to come prepared to tell how we ought to grow in these, and what are the means of growth in each. Have words from the chairman of the lookout, prayer-meeting, social, flower, missionary, and other committees, expressing their consecration to the work of their committees during the coming months, and their hopes for progress along their various lines of effort. Sing hymns that have a spirit of advance and conquest. Have seasons of prayer for the growth of the Endeavorers in each of the particulars mentioned.—Christian Endeavor World.

THE PASSING YEARS AND THE HOME OF THE SOUL.—

Ps. 90; John 14:1-6; 1 Thes. 4:16-18.

"I hear the muffled tramp of years
Come stealing up the slope of Time;
They bear a train of smiles and tears,
Of burning hopes and dreams sublime."

Every youth is immortal; life lies before him, and there are no shadows behind him. But all too soon the swiftly moving procession brings the noontime, and the conviction creeps over him that he will be old some day! There was a time when a day was a week long; a month was a year; and a year was an age! But it is astonishing how soon all this is reversed for us, and a year is scarcely a span long. Time is a mystery, as Carlyle says, even if there were no other.

Life is short—far too short for hate; too short for envy; too short for idleness. Pity the man who has not yet learned how to cast out every unworthy thought, to repress every ignoble emotion. Let others succeed; let them shine; we will rejoice in their successes, and from the ashes of our defeat hail their victories. There are thoughts you have not time to harbor, as well as occupations you have not time to engage in. With reference to many, many things that we see others occupied with, life is too short.

The measure of one's knowledge to-day, so vastly has learning increased, must be the amount of his voluntary ignorance. Science after science must be comparatively a sealed book. There are languages in which his fellowmen have expressed their highest emotions, of which he is compelled to remain in voluntary ignorance. Yes, life is short. We are amazed, when we look at it from the view point of Christian faith, to think how easily some people waste time. They talk about killing time; as well kill a man, for time is what life is composed of.

Lost time is never found again. Every day has its peculiar claim upon us; every hour should bear its precious freight of loving service as it speeds away, a part of the illimitable flood. The years flow on, and there is no pause. We cannot call them back. It is vain to cry, "Oh, days of my youth, return!" Would that we might earlier realize how precious time is. For life is half spent before it comes home to us with anything like its proper force.

What do the years contain—the years that are now a part of your life record? Are they full of sturdy toil? Are they full of faithful, unselfish efforts for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom? Have some of your purposes matured, and brought forth a fragrant harvest? Can you say, thinking of the conflicts, "I have fought a good fight?" Are you sure that you have fought always on the right side even? The closing hours of the dying year are provocative of thoughts like these.

Shall we raise such questions as to the future years? They are coming, fast and faster. What are they bringing? It is comparatively easy to say of any one's life, in general terms, what it will be: for we have but to remember what it has been. We need only to look back, and the record of the past is mutely prophetic of the future. Owen Meredith writes ingeniously:

"However we pass Time, he passes still,
Passing away whatever the pastime,
And, whether we use him well or ill,
Some day he gives us the slip for the last time."

We are strangers and pilgrims here. The soul is beset by temptations and surrounded by enemies. It has here no continuing city. But there is a home of the soul; perhaps, by way of contrast, this ought to be called the march of the soul. The earth is beautiful; earthly loves are tender and true. There are noble men about us, whose very presence cheers us. But what a multitude there will

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK

Thousands of Women Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

MRS. SCOTT.

An interesting letter to our readers from Mrs. Gertrude Warner Scott, of Vinton, Iowa.

Vinton, Iowa, July 15th, 1902.

In the summer of 1893, I was taken violently ill. My trouble began with pain in my stomach, so severe that it seemed as if knives were cutting me. I was treated by two of the best physicians in the county, and consulted another. None of them suspected that the cause of my trouble was kidney disease. They all told me that I had cancer of the stomach, and would die. I grew so weak that I could not walk any more than a child a month old, and I only weighed sixty pounds. One day my brother saw in a paper an advertisement of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy. He bought me a bottle at our drug store and I took it. My family could see a change in me, for the better, so they obtained more, and I continued the use of Swamp-Root regularly. I was so weak and run down that it took considerable to build me up again. I am now well, thanks to Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and weigh 143 pounds, and am keeping house for my husband and brother on a farm. Swamp-Root cured me after the doctors had failed to do me a particle of good.

Gratefully yours,

Gertrude Warner Scott

The mild and prompt effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Recommended and taken by physicians, used in hospitals and endorsed by people of prominence everywhere. To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you, a sample bottle will be sent absolutely free, by mail, also a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

be over there! One of the greatest blessings of heaven will be its fellowships. We shall meet and mingle with the spirits of just men made perfect; we shall hear them tell us of the wonderful love of God, and our happiness will be complete, for we shall be at home.

PRAYER,

We thank thee, O God, for the flood of years; for life, its fragrant spring and its golden autumn. May it be to us the beginning of the life eternal, in the home of the soul. Amen.

Our Budget

—"Merry Christmas" again!
—May the spirit of Christ make it a memorable Christmas.

—This is our fifty-second number, all that most papers issue in one year, but the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST believes in good measure, and gives one more number in 1903.

—We are receiving many such cheering promises as, "We are going to send a club for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST early in January." See to it that this promise is not overlooked.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will be at the center of the world's interest during the next year, and it will contain much that our own people cannot afford to miss.

—We have some features to announce next week which we are sure will attract the attention and awaken the interest of the brotherhood.

—The Southern Evangelist, of Atlanta, Ga., edited and published by E. L. Shelnutt, F. L. Adams and W. A. Chastain, contains in its issue of Dec. 10, an excellent picture on its front page of Bro. S. B. Moore, pastor of the First Christian Church in that city. We are glad to learn that Bro. Moore's work is prospering and that his church is planning to erect an elegant new building.

—Roy Caldwell, pastor of church at Logan, Ia., had a successful operation for appendicitis performed a few days ago at Lenox, Ia.

—The Southwestern Students' Conference will be held at Ruston, La., Dec. 23-30, under the direction of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A.

—E. S. Muckley resigned his work at Honolulu, Hawaii, on Dec. 2, to accept a call to Portland, Ore., to succeed J. F. Ghormley. He will sail from Honolulu, Dec. 30.

—F. W. Allen, of Columbia, Mo., one of our best men and a great preacher, has one Sunday which he can give to some church near him.—Missouri Christian Message.

—The Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union reports a sermon of T. H. Blenus on the Progress and Development of Christianity, which is to be the first of a series of sermons on this theme.

—Following a series of Bible lectures at Liberty, Mo., by Prof. H. L. Willett, a series of evangelistic sermons is being preached by Robert Graham Frank, pastor of the Christian Church at that place.

—Thomas Wallace, of Canton, Mo., recently filled two appointments with the Christian Church at Quincy, Ill., where he found a large and active congregation, well organized and doing splendid work.

—I. H. Fuller is about to close his first year's work at Lenox, Ia. He is so well satisfied that he says: "I want nine more years like it if I can get them." They are planning for a union meeting in January.

—The church at Winchester, Ky., besides supporting G. L. Wharton as a missionary, gives between three and four hundred dollars for the India Bible College. This church has averaged $3.50 per member for missions.

—In consideration of the recent and unexpected death of Dr. A. G. Thomas, president of the Georgia College of Eclectic Medicine and Surgery, Atlanta, Ga., the students of that college have passed resolutions of regret and respect.

—J. S. Butts, of Kansas, gives $500 for the India Bible College. It will require $15,000 more for this special object. Send a Christmas present of as many dollars as your heart will suggest for this enterprise to F. M. Rains, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O.

—The annual meeting and rally of the Christian Church at Beatrice, Neb., was held on Dec. 6. The sermon was preached by W. A. Baldwin, corresponding secretary for the state. Edgar Price is pastor. There has been an increase of 80 in membership during the past year; the present membership is 530.

—Mr. and Mrs. Albert C. Stow recently celebrated their sixty-eighth wedding anniversary. Brother and Sister Stow are the parents of Mrs. F. M. Green, and have been members of the Stow Corners, Ohio, Christian Church for over half a century.

—W. J. Russell, pastor of the East End Christian Church, Pittsburg, has been chosen for a second year to act as judge in the Carnegie Institute prize essay contest. He is chairman of a committee of 19, having 400 essays to examine and pass upon.

—G. W. Nutter closes a four years' ministry at Millersburg, Ky., on Dec. 27. During his pastorate, the church has been largely increased in numbers and built up in spiritual power. A new parsonage has been built, and the building has been greatly improved.

—"Our Own Boys" is the title of a concert exercise prepared by the Foreign Society for the observance of Endeavor day, first Sunday in February. The exercises will be furnished free to all societies that will take an offering for the Damoh Orphanage work. Address F. M. Rains, Cincinnati, O.

—A. D. Harmon, missionary under the American Christian Missionary Society, in St. Paul, Minn., writes as follows: "Our new building is using all my energies. We propose to go into it the last of January. This has been the heaviest year of my work. I expect great things later on."

—Miner J. Allen and Cynthia A. Allen, his sister, of Akron, O., will support Miss Rose T. Ambruster, at Osaka, Japan, this year, by providing her salary of $600. We are hoping to have a number of individuals take the same step. Who will be the next? Write to F. M. Rains, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O.

—That anniversary number, Jan. 21, is growing into large proportions. It will be a monumental number in our journalism. Many prominent men in our city, state and nation are sending congratulatory messages. If you can use to good effect some extra copies, you would better notify us in advance.

—The funeral of Prof. H. H. White took place at Lexington, Ky., Dec. 11, Mark Collis and I. J. Spencer officiating. Professor White was in his 83rd year and has been connected with the Kentucky University as student, professor and treasurer for sixty-five years. Appropriate resolutions of respect were adopted by the faculty.

—Our National Benevolent Association has just received $1,000 from the estate of Lydia Galbreath, deceased, of Yale, Ia. Geo. L. Snively, of St. Louis, has had years of experience in probate court and will go to any part of the country to draw wills for parties wishing to make bequests to the association. Be sure to remember our old Disciples, helpless orphans and friendless sick in your wills.

—J. J. Tisdall, Morgantown, W. Va., missionary under the American Christian Missionary Society, sends in the following good report: "The church at Morgantown is moving along nicely. We just closed a three weeks' meeting with thirteen additions, six by statement and letter and seven by baptism. We had very large crowds. There are good prospects for a large and permanent work here."

—The formal opening of the new Bona Thompson Memorial Library at Butler College, Indianapolis, took place on Sunday, Dec. 20. This beautiful building is the handsomest and best equipped library building belonging to any of our colleges. It was erected at a cost of $45,000 by the late Mr. Thompson, of Irvington, in memory of his daughter, Bona Thompson, who was a member of the class of 1897 in Butler College.

—A. K. Wright, missionary under the American Christian Missionary Society at Boise, Idaho, reports as follows: "Through October and November I have been preaching Sunday afternoons at Mindian, a growing town, ten miles down the river. We have about thirty members there, have elected trustees, subscribed $80 towards church lots, and expect to complete organization soon by choosing elders and deacons. Church here will let me off for a meeting at Mindian during the winter."

—J. P. Hieronymus, of Illinois, has just given our National Benevolent Association a sum of money on the annuity plan. Brother Hieronymus is a bank cashier and gives discriminatingly and knows this association is worthy of help. For information concerning this worthy ministry, write Geo. L. Snively, the secretary, 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis.

—The Central Christian Church at Detroit, Mich., of which C. J. Tannar is pastor, reopened its building on Dec. 20, after extensive repairs. It will be remembered that the church suffered severely from fire last August, and that the organ was destroyed at that time. A new pipe organ has been installed, which was used for the first time at the reopening service.

—Rev. J. H. Tiller, of Bloomfield, Mo., has been elected financial agent of Dexter Christian College, of which Dr. Albert Buxton is president, with Rev. G. A. Hoffman, president of the board of trustees. Brother Tiller is already meeting with much encouragement in the field, and the prospects are good for the erection of a new dormitory. A $1,000 library was secured at the last meeting of the board of managers.

—M. P. Hayden, Rat Portage, Ont., missionary under the American Christian Missionary Society, reports as follows: "In a little over four months we have had fourteen additions, ten by baptism. The interest is good, and prospects much brighter than they were a few months ago. A month ago we organized a Y. P. S. C. E. It has now sixteen members, and is working finely. We are going right ahead with our work."

—In a personal note from Bro. James S. Bell, editor of the Christian Leader, Cincinnati, we learn that on Oct. 28 he closed his 65th year in good health, but that on Nov. 9 he was suddenly stricken down with paralysis, affecting his whole left side, which is still useless. He writes that he is improving as fast as possible in such cases. We regret to learn of this affliction, and hope to hear of our brother's complete recovery.

—The church at Dayton, Washington, dedicated its commodious new house on Dec. 6. Services were attended by large audiences. L. F. Stephens and wife, evangelists, assisted in the service. Twelve hundred dollars was raised to pay all outstanding indebtedness. H. T. Morrison, the pastor, has done a remarkably successful work here. The evangelists have continued in the meeting with sixteen additions in the first ten days.

—Errett Gates, secretary of the Disciples Divinity House, Chicago, writes that he has recently secured three more scholarships for the assistance of men who wish to study in the Divinity House. One of these is given by friends of Butler College in Indianapolis; one by the Christian Church at Shelbyville, Ky., for Kentucky University; and one by Cincinnati friends of Bethany College. This makes in all six scholarships provided thus far, which means that six men picked from the graduating classes of our colleges, will enter the Divinity House and the University of Chicago next October for a year's study. It is expected that six more scholarships will be provided in the next four weeks.

—T. N. Kincaid, of Hot Springs, Ark., writes that since it will be three or four years before they can complete paying for their new lot, and the building cannot be begun until that time, it seems advisable for them to put up a cheap tabernacle on the lot, which they can use until such time as they are prepared to build. Such a tabernacle, he thinks, can be erected at a cost not exceeding $400 or $500, and he has begun an effort among his friends and the friends of the enterprise in that city, and elsewhere, to secure the means necessary for its erection. We know from personal examination of the situation there, that the present location of the little church is too inaccessible to admit of any aggressive work, and it would be a very desirable consummation if such a tabernacle as is suggested could be built on the new lot where the work of the church during the next few years would tell much more largely than it can possibly do in its present location.

—E. W. Allen, Ft. Wayne, Ind., writes as follows:

"Our church work here moves along well. We have recently finished a successful canvass for a thousand dollar cash thank-offering to be used in local church work. I have been appointed one of Indiana's twenty delegates to the World's Sunday-school Convention at Jerusalem next spring, and the church yesterday voted unanimously to give me a three months' vacation on full pay to make the trip."

That was a handsome thing for the church to do.

—Missionary representatives from sixty societies in China have determined to erect in Shanghai, the metropolis of the empire, a missionary headquarters to be known as the Martyrs' Memorial. Since Robert Morrison landed in China in 1807, 207 Protestant missionaries and many hundreds of Chinese converts and evangelists have lost their lives in the work of propagating the gospel. In memory of these this building is to be erected. It is aimed to raise at least $250,000, and the building is to be opened in 1907, the centennial anniversary of Protestant missions in China.

—Last week the Board of Church Extension received $500 on the annuity plan from two friends in Nebraska. This makes over $100,000 that the board has received on the annuity plan since 1898, when it first began to take annuities. Those giving money on the annuity plan have no taxes to pay and they have a clear income of six per cent in semi-annual payments and have the satisfaction of knowing that their money is helping to house their homeless brethren. For information concerning the annuity plan, address G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—Foreign Missionary Rallies will be held the first week in January at the following places: Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago; Bloomington, Ill., Springfield, Jacksonville and Pittsfield. G. L. Wharton, W. P. Bentley and A. McLean will assist the local forces. The public is invited to attend. A Foreign Missionary Rally is equal in interest to a day spent at a National Convention. The addresses are as instructive and as inspiring. Business men should make it a point to attend part of the day, or all of it, if possible. The rallies begin at ten o'clock in the morning and continue until twelve. They resume at two and close at four. As a rule there is no evening service. Where the church requests it one is held, but this is the exception rather than the rule.

—Dr. Cornelius H. Patton, pastor of the First Congregational Church in St. Louis, bought a copy of "Helps to Faith," and having read it, sends us the following voluntary estimate of it:

I have read your book, "Helps to Faith," with very great interest and hearty approbation. It is a timely contribution to theological thought. I find myself in very hearty agreement with the positions you take, and also with the spirit of the book. I am glad you have put the discussions in simple, brief form, so that they may be comprehended by the average layman.

It is gratifying to the author, as it will no doubt be to our readers, that the work mentioned is securing a wider reading than our own brotherhood, and that it is commending itself to such able and thoughtful men as Dr. Patton.

—We are glad to report the progress in our educational work in Missouri. In a letter from Dean Lhamon of the Bible College at Columbia, he writes that he and Brother Sharpe have secured additional subscriptions for the building fund until they are within about $3,000 of the amount necessary for the erection of the building. This is good news, and we are sure that the brethren in and about Columbia will not tarry long in raising the necessary amount for the building, in order that the work of increasing the endowment may be pushed more vigorously throughout the state. The new building of Christian University is approaching completion, and is to be occupied about Jan. 5. It will be a splendid building costing, with its furnishings, about $40,000, and there remains only about $10,000 of this to be provided for. The school has gone on without any decrease of interest because of the loss of the old building, and has at present 126 students. With the entrance into the new building, with its increased facilities, the institution has a right to expect an increase of patronage and the early wiping out of its debt.

—The Christian churches in St. Louis held an all day and evening City Mission Rally at the First Church on the 15th inst. A program covering the various phases of the work occupied the forenoon and afternoon. The method of work was changed somewhat by the organization of the St. Louis Christian Missionary Society. All contributing to its work are members. Its board of managers is the pastor and two other members from each congregation, who hold quarterly meetings. The work is under the immediate management of an executive committee that holds monthly meetings. The society will hold an annual mass meeting. The executive committee will report quarterly to the board of managers and annually to the society in convention assembled. In the evening the annual report, read by Bro. G. A. Hoffmann, showed a good year's work with no indebtedness. Bro. B. L. Smith, corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, was present, aiding by his counsel and delivering an excellent address in the evening. The attendance was very good, all things considered, and it is believed that matters are in shape for more aggressive work than ever before. The ladies of the First Church served lunch at noon and dinner in the evening, and there was a good social time among the representatives of the different churches. Oreon E. Scott, president of the city mission board, presided in the evening and G. A. Hoffmann, secretary of the board, acted as secretary of the meeting.

A Half-Century Pastorate.

Fifty years as pastor of one church is a remarkable record in this day of short pastorates. J. W. Lanham has been for half a century pastor of the church at Manville, Ind. He has not stayed for lack of calls to other and more ambitious fields, but the qualities which brought these calls, made him able to serve so long in this one place. Twice he has been a member of the Indiana legislature, but with this exception, has given himself to the work of the ministry with singular devotion. A life-long student, a large and liberal spirit constantly welcoming new ideas, no wonder he retains his hold upon his people and has crossed the conventional dead-line without a jar, and more than rounded out his three score years and ten with scarcely a consciousness of old age. We have prevailed upon Brother Lanham to tell us a few things about himself, and what follows is in his own words:

"In two months I will be seventy-two years old. I was baptized by L. H. Jameson when nineteen years old, and about three years after, I began my public ministry. Most of my work has been done at Manville, a small village in southeastern Indiana, and in adjacent localities. Practically, but perhaps not always formally, I have been pastor of the Manville church during the entire period of my ministry. However, my labors have been to a limited extent divided between Manville and Lexington, Ind., Vevay, Ind., Edinburg, Ind., Salem Chapel, Shelby Chapel, Braytown and a few other points. But Liberty, the oldest church in the Indiana brotherhood, for a great part of the time has shared my services equally with Manville. All these churches to-day are in a fairly good condition, although the westward tide of emigration has at times greatly depleted their ranks. But little complaint has ever reached my ears, either as to my preaching or manner of life. The young people are quite as much interested in my preaching as the old. The Manville church has never called for my resignation, nor, as far as I can tell, desired it. On last Thanksgiving day I had a good audience, although the day was severely cold, and young and old testified to the helpfulness of the sermon.

"I was never married, although I have married more people than any other man, save one, in southeastern Indiana. Also a large part of my work has been the preaching of funerals among nearly all denominations, including Catholics.

"My education was obtained in the common schools, two select schools and in Hanover College, a Presbyterian institution. However, I value most highly the education obtained in my study. In my earlier ministry I attended all the general conventions at Cincinnati. Here and elsewhere I became acquainted with Alexander Campbell, Scott, Burnet, Challen, Errett, etc. Here I heard M. E. Lard and A. Procter, the latter of whom gave but little promise of the greatness to which he afterward attained.

"I never had to be converted to missions, instrumental music, Endeavor Societies, etc. Our chapel at Manville, our state evangelist says, is the finest one in the state, outside of the cities. J. V. Coombs said our congregation was the most orderly and attentive he had ever seen. I think my long pastorate—the longest, I suppose, in our brotherhood—is owing to neat appearance in the pulpit, the entire absence of personalities there, a constant effort to set forth the spirit of the gospel rather than the letter, plenty of books, hard study and special preparation. The Manville congregation has not paid me a large salary, but has helped me in many ways that cannot be tabulated."

Nebraska.

North Bend reports three additions, J. B. White, preacher.

J. H. and Mrs. Reeves have taken charge of the work at Minden, and will also look after Norman.

F. S. White will preach in a meeting at Edison, beginning Dec. 13, J. S. Miller pastor.

The Auburn meeting, S. Gregg evangelist, reports good audiences and fourteen added the first two weeks. F. L. Pettit is the pastor. Brother Gregg will hold one meeting for the board.

W. A. Morrison, pastor at Verdon and Salem, is in a meeting at Shubert.

T. A. Lindenmeyer is at Pawnee City in a short meeting with a view to locating there.

Edward Clutter came home from his work in Morrowville, Kan., for a visit.

Lee P. Builta is again at home in Nebraska, and is ready for work in some congregation. Address Burchard.

The secretary spent Lord's day, Dec. 6, at Beatrice, in the interest of the C. W. B. M. Ten new names were added at the morning meeting, and seven had been already obtained, a total of 17. This church has nearly all of its available women in the auxiliary. Monday was the annual business meeting of the church, and dinner was served in the church basement, largely attended. Afternoon the business reports were made. Edgar D. Price and his estimable wife, and Miss Vesper constitute the pastor's family here. The church has recently finished a fine new parsonage, all modern. The next improvement will be a creditable house of worship. Beatrice is one of the first churches in the state.

Brother Ogden has closed the meeting at Gross and is now at Pleasantview. No ingathering resulted at Gross, owing to conditions. The house was practically finished, however, during this meeting, lacking nothing but inside paint.

Brother Adams' meeting at Dunning has resulted in an organization of ten members. More in sight and the meeting going forward. An effort is making to get a lot and build a house.

Lucille May Park is available for song service. She is a valuable helper. Address Shickley.

It seems good to remind some churches and preachers that nothing has come in from them for the state work as yet this fall. We should not allow December to slip by without attending to this very necessary matter. We are doing well indeed, and can not and do not complain. We can do better and should. With a little effort from now on, we can make November and December, 1903, the best months in our history for state mission money. Let those churches that have taken the offering and collected part, send in what is in hand, and the balance later, so that we can report all that we have actually done. Why not do this now? Never was a better time.

The state board will meet at the office of the state secretary, Dec. 29. Any desiring to

GIVE YOUR STOMACH

A NICE VACATION.

Don't Do it by Starving it Either—Let a Substitute Do the Work.

The old adage, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," applies just as well to the stomach, one of the most important organs of the human system, as it does to the man himself.

If your stomach is worn out and rebels against being further taxed beyond its limit, the only sensible thing you can do is to give it a rest. Employ a substitute for a short time and see if it will not more than repay you in results.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a willing and most efficient substitute. They themselves digest every bit of food in the stomach in just the same way that the stomach itself would, were it well. They contain all the essential elements that the gastric juice and other digestive fluids of the stomach contain and actually act just the same and do just the same work as the natural fluids would do, were the stomach well and sound. They, therefore, relieve the stomach, just as one workman relieves another, and permit it to rest and recuperate and regain its normal health and strength.

This "vacation" idea was suggested by the letter of a prominent lawyer in Chicago. Read what he says: "I was engaged in the most momentous undertaking of my life in bringing about the coalition of certain great interest that meant much to me as well as my clients. It was not the work of days, but of months. I was working night and day almost, when at a very critical time my stomach went clear back on me. The undue mental strain brought it about and hurried up what would have happened later on.

"What I ate I had to literally force down and that was a source of misery as I had a sour stomach much of the time. My head ached, I was sluggish and began to lose my ambition to carry out my undertaking. It looked pretty gloomy for me and I confided my plight to one of my clients. He had been cured by Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and at once went down to a drug store and brought a box up to the office.

"I had not taken a quarter of that box before I found that they would do all the work my stomach ever did; and as a rest or vacation was out of the question for me, I determined to give my stomach a vacation. I kept right on taking the tablets and braced up and went ahead with my work with renewed vigor, ate just as much as I ever did and carried out that undertaking to a successful issue. I feel that I have Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets to thank for saving me the handsomest fee I ever received as well as my reputation, and last but not least my stomach."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a box.

Dedication at Melrose, Ohio.

Lord's day, Dec. 13, was a bitter cold day. The wind was blowing terrifically, so that, as far as weather was concerned, it could hardly have been more unfavorable for a dedication. The house at Melrose, Ohio, is not a new one, but the old house has been thoroughly repaired and beautified. Work has been done on it from the foundation—which is now new—to the roof. It is now an attractive, comfortable and pleasant place of worship. Bro. A. W. Jennings is pastor. He is a veteran in the Lord's army, and is doing great good, nearly at his own expense. The services on dedication day were pleasant, and we think profitable, although on account of the weather the attendance was not large.

The National Convention of the Anti-Saloon League.

As your correspondent was appointed one of the delegates from our National Convention at Detroit to the Eighth Annual National Convention of the Anti-Saloon League, I send you some of the important proceedings of this convention which was held in the First Congregational Church, Washington, D. C., Dec. 9-11.

Among the Disciples seen at the convention were J. W. West, superintendent for Virginia; I. N. McCash, who holds that position in Iowa; F. M. Bradley, a prominent worker of Washington. F. D. Power was not able to attend, but was visited by a committee with greetings from the assembly, and prayer was offered for him and others. He was re-elected one of the vice-presidents. Encouraging reports were made by the superintendents of many states. In Virginia the Mass law has been passed, which is practically prohibition for the country. Ohio has secured a law by which all small towns can vote on the saloon and put it out if they desire to do so. The league had to see that 76 men were retired from the State Senate and House before they secured the desired treasure. They have a definite program to secure ward option, then city option, and finally a constitutional amendment. Vermont is laying plans, and believes the return to license will be only temporary, and they will finally return to a prohibition law. The people see the evils of the change.

Dr. Folk, a brother of the celebrated Attorney Folk, of St. Louis, reported that Tennessee has driven the saloon out of all towns of under 5,000 inhabitants. He illustrates their progress by saying they resembled the young man who called on his sweetheart one evening determined to say something to her. He began, but something came up in his throat and checked him. At 10 p. m. he began, "Miss Mary;" just then her mother's voice was heard calling, "Mary, is that young man still there?" And Mary answered, "No, but he's just getting there."

Two changes were made in the officers. Dr. Howard H. Russel, the general superintendent, was succeeded by Dr. P. A. Baker, state superintendent of Ohio, and Mr. Jas. L. Erwin, of Washington, D. C., the corresponding secretary, by Prof. G. M. Barker, of the Boston University. The two retiring officers each received beautiful silver pieces as tokens of regard and appreciation.

Dr. Baker, the new superintendent, has been a prominent anti-saloon man in the middle-west, and by openly and effectively fighting opponents of reform, has forced candidates for the legislature in close districts to consider him a required ally. It is thought his election means a more aggressive campaign against the liquor traffic.

Resolutions of importance were passed by the convention, pronouncing the saloon the greatest criminal the world has known. Congress was commended for refusing to repeal the anti-canteen law, and joy was expressed that the saloon was driven out of the capitol building. Congress was asked to make further appropriation for the army posts, to furnish suitable places for recreation and amusement for the soldiers.

Approval was expressed for the Dolliver-Hepburn bill, making intoxicating liquors shipped into a state subject to the jurisdiction and laws of the state both before and after delivery; also General Doggett's plan to appropriate two cents per diem for each enlisted man in the army to be devoted to a company fund to improve the mess and better the hospital service.

Christian and temperance people should encourage these pending measures and ensure their passage by deluging their senators and representatives with petitions.

Secretary Moody was commended for his action in regard to the betterment of the morals in the navy yard at Brewerton, and the prohibition of liquors urged within two miles of army and navy posts.

The following resolutions we quote in full:

"Upon the churches of America rests the responsibility to drive the saloon from the land. Recognizing this truth, the Anti-Saloon League seeks to federate in a united effort all churches, temperance societies, and citizens in a non-partisan, omni partisan organization, to carry on the work.

"First, by agitation to arouse and build up public sentiment; second, to secure, through public officials, if possible, the enforcement of all laws for the suppression of intemperance; third, to secure legislation in the national Congress and other legislative bodies further restricting and ultimately abolishing the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

"We believe that this contest against the saloon will be furthered by a general revival of gospel temperance and a campaign of total abstinence pledge signing and living."

The promotion of pledge-signing will be pushed forward by Dr. Russel. The name of this new movement will be the "Lincoln Legion." It is said Mr. Lincoln was not only a total abstainer, but an active propagator of the total abstinence pledge during the Washingtonian movement.

It is proposed to accept the example and inspiration and teaching of this great man, and with the red, white and blue as their colors, to promote a great revival of old fashioned total abstinence pledge-signing. The pledge will be, "With God's help I will abstain from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage."

Dr. Russel found three old men in Illinois who signed the pledge at South Fork school-house, opposite the South Fork Christian Church in Sangamon county, Ill., when Abraham Lincoln was the speaker, and they have kept it ever since. With the noble character and honored name of Lincoln to back it, this movement ought to give a great impetus to the temperance reform, and with legislation and persuasion help to carry out the motto of the league, "The saloon must go."

The temperate habits of Lincoln are illustrated by this incident: Once he became seasick on a United States vessel, and some brandy was brought to him, but he said, "No, thank you; I've seen too many people seasick on land from using that stuff."

Everyone should read the new book, "The Lincoln Legion," by Louis Albert Banks, the Merchon Company, Presbyterian Building, 156 Fifth Ave., New York. One of Lincoln's temperance speeches is in it, and it is well worth reading.

The league desires to promote its work more in the south. Rev. Henry H. Proctor, a colored man from Georgia, earnestly appealed to the white man to take the saloon away from the colored man. He said it is claimed by one that all the negroes guilty of assaults upon white women use strong drink.

Receptions were given the convention by Mrs. Henderson and at the White House by

The question of why one man succeeds and another fails, is a problem that has puzzled philosophers for centuries. One man attains riches and position, while his neighbor who started with seemingly the same, and better opportunities, exists in poverty and obscurity. No man can win success who is suffering from an irritating and nerve-racking disease, and the man who has the qualities of success within him, would be quick to recognize this fact and seize the best remedy to eradicate the trouble.

A person afflicted with a serious case of hemorrhoids or piles is handicapped in the race for power and advancement. It is impossible to concentrate the mental energies when this dreadful trouble is sapping the vital forces. To show how easily this success-destroying trouble can be overcome, we publish the following letter from a prominent Indiana man.

"When I received the former letter and booklet on 'Piles, their nature, cause and cure,' I was in a critical condition. Ulcers to the number of seven had formed on the inside of the rectum, culminating in a large tumor on the outside resembling fistula. I suffered the most excruciating pain, could get no rest day or night. After reading the booklet I sent to my druggist but he happened to be out of Pyramid Pile Cure just at that time. However, I obtained a part of a box from my brother-in-law and began their use. Five pyramids completely cured me. I procured a box later, but have had no occasion to use them. I have been waiting to see that the cure was permanent, before writing you of its success. I believe Pyramid Pile Cure to be the greatest and best pile cure on the market, and ask you to please accept of my grateful thanks for this invaluable remedy. I take great pleasure in recommending its use to any sufferer along this line. You may use my name if you wish for reference to anyone afflicted with this disease." J. O. LITTELL, Arthur, Ind.

the President, who refused to extend the same privilege to Carrie Nation. I suspect that she might not have spoken so politely to him as the representatives of the Anti-Saloon League, but when the great fight is won the influence of this brave woman will be recognized.

An important factor in the convention was Rev. E. S. Chapman, superintendent of southern California. Near the close of the afternoon of the last day he called our attention to the need of more prayer and more of the Holy Spirit for this great work. As he talked he grasped President Luther B. Wilson by the hand, and when he had closed Dr. Wilson started "Nearer, My God, to Thee," which the audience sang earnestly. Dr. Chapman made the closing address at eight. He is a man of experience and power. He and some more of us are Prohibitionists, but this movement knows no party lines. In this it is fighting the liquor traffic on its own lines of procedure. Dr. Chapman said, "Who can come out and defend the saloon?" "Let me see this country's flag not fly over a single legalized saloon. It must be so." J. A. HOPKINS.

Divisions Where Unity Is Preached.

(Editorial in the Interior, Dec. 10.)

The religious movement inaugurated by Alexander Campbell in West Virginia early in the last century, has always, in its remarkable spread through the United States, professed itself to be primarily a movement for Christian unity. Alleging the sinfulness of denominational distinctions among Christians, it has contributed to the reduction of those differences nothing but the sublime assumption that its own interpretations of Scriptures are infallibly right, and any dissent therefrom at least constructive sin. It is therefore a striking piece of fate's irony, that a people who are banded together on the idea that all Christians ought to agree with them, are finding themselves utterly unable to agree among themselves. The method which they proposed to teach Christendom won't work even in their own family, and schism among the followers of Campbell is seriously threatened. There has been growing for a long time a cleavage along the line which has so often appeared in the Baptist Church. There is a faction which insists that missionary societies are all wrong because nothing of the kind is mentioned in the New Testament. But although this is in logical line with the principles of literalism, which Campbell laid down, the larger party defends the missionary societies as necessary agents for advanced work, and the annual meetings of these organizations call forth every year an impressive demonstration of the Campbell propaganda. Roughly corresponding to the same line of disagreement is another dispute about the hope of salvation which the unimmersed may enjoy. The most bigoted are sure that persons not plunged beneath the water in baptism have no chance of redemption, while the more moderate party, with less logic but more charity, allow that Presbyterians, Methodists and the like may win heaven through mercy on their ignorance. Yet both these parties agree that it is their bounden duty to plant "a true church of Christ" in every community regardless of how "the denominations" may have supplied religious privileges there, and moreover that it is quite as much their mission to gain proselytes from "the denominations" as converts from the world. Whether immersion is the cause or the accompaniment of regeneration they dispute among themselves, but that baptism and conversion are inseparably connected they teach consonantly. There is therefore no inevitable dissension, though much difference, between these two factions. But between them on the one hand and a third party of progressives on the other, there has arisen recently feeling so bitter that it already amounts to a feud. The more open-minded ministers of the church have of late come to concede the patent fact that for all practical purposes the adherents of Campbell's teachings do constitute a denomination, co-ordinate with other churches which do not wince at the term. Still professing in the main that understanding of the Scriptures held by their founder, they abandon the bigoted claim to infallibility. For a distinctive title they adopt the term "Disciples of Christ" and use it in a way that does not unchurch other Christian bodies. This alone throws the old-line leaders into a frenzy. It is alleged from the conservative position that the capital "D" in this phrase is treason; that believers have no right to call themselves anything but Christians and "disciples" of Christ. The disposition of the liberals to enter into federations of churches is also denounced as betrayal of the cause, since the constitution of such federations bind the co-operating bodies not to engage in competition on identical fields. The separation was daily becoming wider, when the liberal Hyde Park Church of Christ, in Chicago—a congregation largely influenced by men connected with the faculty of the University of Chicago—took a step that promises to bring on open war. This congregation announced itself prepared to receive to "associate membership" persons bringing letters from other evangelical denominations without inquiry as to the mode of their baptism. Since it is stated that such associates are to have all privileges of members, it seems that the congregation really concedes entire liberty of opinion, except in the matter of imposing immersion on candidates who join by profession of faith. It is intimated that even this point may be yielded. Further, the congregation has announced that when members remove to points where no Disciple church exists, they will be advised to join some other communion. All these liberalizing innovations stir the boundless wrath of the ultra-orthodox, but it is probably the last provision which makes the regulars more angry than any other. Questions of higher criticism enter deeply into the trouble. The divinity schools of the denomination connected with the Universities of Chicago and California are both reputed to teach much modern biblical speculation. The situation is the more torturing to those who stand for the old ideas, because the form of church organization which they have contended to be the only scriptural form does not permit them to bring any heresy process against the offenders. They have no tribunal in which to try such a case, nor any standard creed by which to judge the degree of a teacher's departure from orthodoxy.

Notes From India.

We hail with joy the coming of the cold season, bringing with it the opportunities for an aggressive evangelistic campaign in the villages. When one remembers that thousands who have never heard the name of Jesus will hear it for the first time, and when those who have been seeking the true way of salvation shall in hearing of Him who is "the way, the truth and the life" find rest and peace in the knowledge of sins forgiven, it is truly a season for rejoicing.

That there are only a few missionaries in India free to give themselves to this work is a thought for reflection by the Church of Christ. Remembering the needs of India's large towns the opportunities and possibilities presented therein, the village work of the past in India calls for more admiration and praise than has yet been given. Some of the most fruitful fields in mission work have been and are the villages of India. One instance is that of Mr. Fairbanks, of the American Board of Foreign Missions. He took his tent with him and camped beside the people in a village a few miles out of Amednagar. He was among them as a counselor, judge, overseer, but most of all as a servant of the cross. Faithfully he did his work, laboring for years in that field. He was taken off the train one day, having a little fever. He was immediately taken to the plague camp where he died by exposure to the same. At the time of his death he could not point to one who had accepted Christ as his Savior in that village, but such faithful work could not be unfruitful. To-day his children occupy that field and the converts number hundreds—all this his seed-sowing. Some Sunday they have three services in order to accommodate the large crowds which gather for worship. Such work is a power for God in India and a testimony of the gospel power.

This is only one of the many such incidents of village work. May God's richest blessing rest upon the efforts put forth this coming evangelistic season in India.

We are glad to learn of Dr. Smith's arrival in Mahoba. She is already settled in "home" and taking temperatures and administering medicine. Her career promises to be a busy one and her work fruitful. May He "who went about doing good, curing all manner of disease and sickness" grant her a special blessing, and may the touch of her hand cool the fevered temples and her ministrations of love bring relief to thousands of India's suffering ones.

It was the privilege of the writer to visit, in company with Brother Davis, the town of Maudha, the site chosen for Ohio's mission station. Like Zion, it is beautiful for situation, and when completed will be a lovely station, Brother Davis is there at present, busy spurring things on to action. With three centers of gospel radiating light in the Hamipen district we hope for great things and expect them.

It is just a year ago that we came here to make Rath our home. Our highest expectations have been more than fulfilled. It has been a year full of work, and for the many lessons learned and inspiration received we have every reason to thank God. We are now settled in the mission bungalow, and thank God for a home. The new bungalow, which was completed last June, is a beautiful structure, and a very comfortable home. It has a sitting, dining, two bedrooms, two dressing and two bathrooms. One of the bedrooms is used for a schoolroom just now, and having no other place for meeting, our church service is often held in the diningroom, and in the evening we gather in the shadow of the bungalow. This morning a large crowd gathered within the walls and listened attentively to the gospel message. One could not have found deeper reverence in the home land than was manifest this morning when the small company of Christians partook of the broken bread and wine in commemoration of Jesus' death for us. It was a sweet and inspiring service full of holy thoughts. Already we can see at work the leaven of the gospel. The Lord's Supper has incited many to inquire regarding the "blood of Jesus" and why we engage in this holy service every Lord's day. The outlook is promising, the interest increasing. Christ's kingdom shall flourish, for in this wilderness shall water break out, and streams of blessing shall flood this desert.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY TRUST CO.

FOURTH & PINE STS. ST. LOUIS

Dedication at Enid, Oklahoma.

We have recently dedicated a new place of worship and service at Enid, Oklahoma, the second city in size in the territory and the largest in northern Oklahoma.

For a year we have been preparing to build. We had outgrown our old building, the first church built in Enid. The city of Enid is only about ten years old, and the church still younger than the city. Here, where so many removals take place and such rapid changes are made, only a few members know one another well, and consequently all the certainty attaching to the proposal to build, in an older and for a long time settled country, was wanting. Only a few days before we broke ground a prominent member confidentially assured the pastor that, "they will never build." It took more time to get ready to build than it did to build. The congregation had to be properly officered and reliable records made. Some time was required to become legally incorporated. Blue prints of the plans were hung up in the old place of worship, and advice, questions and criticisms thereon were invited. These, few in number, were carefully and kindly listened to and answered, so that we have built a house without a jar in the congregation. If the kicker was here we did not know it.

The building, a substantial brick with a full sized basement, is modern in style and all of its appointments, heated by furnace, supplied with a fine Kimball pipe organ which is run by an electric motor, a choir and organ loft, and a commodious gallery. The roof is self supporting, the ceiling of figured steel beautifully painted in tints of blue, the baptistry (somewhat as the subject of baptism from the pulpit should be), back of the platform under the choir loft, unseen, unsuggested, until the time comes for its use, when it is in full view of all and is a thing not to be ashamed of.

The basement contains the main Sunday-school room, class-rooms, kitchen and dining-room, coal-room and furnace.

The auditorium is furnished with the best circular, quarter sawed oak pews, the gallery with fine opera chairs, the floor will be covered with brussels carpet.

Brother J. M. Hoffman, of Perry, Iowa, preached the dedicatory sermon, closing a four weeks' work with us. When he wrote accepting our call to come and help us raise the money and dedicate, he earnestly requested us not to try any further to raise money; that he would attend to that, after his arrival. Upon his arrival, he carefully examined state of advancement of the building, questioned the architect, contractors, and building committee, and then told us that we would need nearly two thousand dollars more than we had estimated as necessary to complete it. His large experience in building and his wonderful skill in raising money thus saved us from a serious mistake. It was a study in faces to look at the congregation when he announced that we wanted to "raise seventy-five hundred dollars this morning." But the whole amount and more was raised in forty minutes. The chief usher reported that there were a few more than a thousand in the church, and more than two hundred turned away who could not even get standing room inside.

The afternoon service of communion was impressive. The senior bishop and pastor at the tables with six deacons and an equal number of deaconess quietly and rapidly served the congregation with the emblems. There was nothing said about "union" communion—the fact was in the evidence. Short addresses from the pastors of the city followed.

At the evening services there was nearly, if not quite, as large an attendance as in the morning, and more than one hundred and fifty dollars more was raised as a contingent fund to meet all obligations of the church.

The program of the three services, neatly printed on strong paper, was given as a souvenir of the occasion to all present, by the ushers, as they entered the building.

We have entered on a new career of enlarged opportunity and responsibility. Three times as many people attend services as did in the old house. Our Sunday-school has doubled and we hope and work and pray for larger victories in Christ.

All the way through our building period and the dedication, deep and genuine interest has been manifested and all Enid wishes us well. The total seating capacity of the house is about eight hundred and its total cost, furnished, between twelve and thirteen thousand dollars.

W. H. WILLIAMS, pastor.

Ministerial Relief.

The third Lord's day in December is here, and with it the call for Ministerial Relief. We hope every church will take this collection. We trust every minister will feel a keen interest in the wants and needs of the families of some old minister. The churches ought to find a pleasure and a joy in giving money at this glad time of the year for the benefit of those who are no longer able to provide for themselves. We ask the churches and the ministers to view this matter seriously, for their work has grown out of the sacrifices of other men in other days. There is no class of people in any community who sacrifice above their means and their strength for the good of others as do the ministers. If any one is in sickness or in distress, no minister feels that he can refuse such calls. His work in the community and his standing as a minister demand that even to the last cent he shall divide with those who are in need. While Ministerial Relief is not very old and has not been maintained very long by the Christian Church, yet its history has been one full of surprises, full of joy and pleasure to those who greatly need its blessings. It is true that we have not created a large fund, yet we have practically relieved all applicants, and its gifts have been made judiciously and carefully among our needy ones. The demands of this board are increasing, and we ought to respond liberally, that the board may at all times relieve cases of want. We urge, therefore, that all our churches shall seriously consider these matters and make a generous offering at the earliest possible moment and remit the same to Howard Cale, 120 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Ind.

American Christian Education Society. Notice!

A secretary has been employed and has entered upon his duties, and there is urgent need of funds to carry on the work of the society. All subscribers, annual and life members, and others, who know themselves to be in arrears to the society, are requested to send the money as soon as possible, without further notice, to the corresponding secretary, Harry G. Hill, Box 111, Indianapolis, Ind. Voluntary contributions will also be gladly received.

One pastor and his congregation united with us. M. L. BUCKLEY.
Harrison, O., Dec. 16, 1903.

Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

CHICAGO, ILL., Dec. 21.—Forty added at Metropolitan Church yesterday, 120 to date; over 450 at regular services since we organized here two years ago.—CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

Special dispatch to CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

KOKOMO, IND., Dec. 20.—Fourteen days' work. 118 additions; 51 at one service, 50 of them confessions. Close Tuesday night. MacNeill greatly beloved. With J. H. Gilliland, Bloomington, Ill., Jan. 3.—WILSON AND HACKLEMAN, evangelists.

CALIFORNIA.—Pomona, Dec. 14.—There have been ten additions to the church here recently, but unreported. One confession Lord's day. We are hoping for others to obey the gospel. During the year this congregation has given more than $600 for all missionary purposes.—E. S. CONNER.

ILLINOIS.—Effingham, Dec. 17.—We closed our meeting in Cuba, Ill., Lord's day, Dec. 13. It was in many ways a very successful meeting. Brother Ferguson is one of our best preachers and has the confidence and love of the whole population of the town. I have but one date left that I could give, that is for February, until next fall. My permanent address is Effingham, Ill.—C. E. MILLARD, singer.

Athens, Dec. 19.—I baptized a Presbyterian lady Dec. 13. My second year here has begun with good prospects. We are planning for a meeting in January. During the past year the church here has paid off a debt of over $300 and thoroughly renovated their meeting-house. It has been a good year's work.—GILBERT J. ELLIS.

INDIANA.—Bruceville, Dec. 18.—Meeting one week old with home forces: four confessions to date. A successful meeting seems evident.—J. E. CHASE, pastor.

Lowell, Dec. 17.—Just closed a short meeting with 20 additions, all but one by baptism. There are others to follow. This is the best meeting the church has had in years. Miss Edna Johnson, of Wolcott, was leader of song. I can recommend her.—C. L. MCKIM, pastor.

New Albany, Dec. 12.—Another confession at Park Church.—WM. A. WARD.

Georgetown, Dec. 15.—We are in the midst of a meeting which has been running for two weeks. There have been twenty-five accessions so far; twenty-three by obedience. Among the latter was an old-time Methodist class leader nearly eighty-four years old. Brother Clarence Mitchell, of Lima, Ohio, has been doing the preaching. The field was difficult to reach from the fact that for years it has been cultivated by some of our best specialists, but we have won grandly. Brother Mitchell is scholarly, sweet-spirited, aggressive, forceful, and wins the confidence of all. Any church wanting an evangelist, will not make a mistake by calling Brother Mitchell. We are aided by Miss Roxana Shaffer of Morongo, Ind.—J. WINDBIGLER, pastor.

IOWA.—Nora Springs, Dec. 17.—One more added by confession last Thursday evening. The church at this place will celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of the dedication of the house. Thursday evening, Dec. 31 (New Year's eve), Bro. W. W. Burks, of Mason City, Ia., will deliver the address.—G. A. HESS.

Ames, Dec. 14.—Sunday morning last, a young man from the college confessed Christ. Six other additions recently by letter, including one of our pioneer ministers and his wife, who cast their membership with this church.—F. D. FERRALL, pastor.

Shenandoah, Dec. 19.—The official board and the church here gave me a very complimentary call to continue as their pastor for another year. Not a dissenting vote was cast. The Lord willing, we will go on with the work through the year 1904. One added by letter since last report.—H. C. LITTLETON.

KANSAS.—Wichita, Dec. 14.—Have just closed a meeting with home forces at the South Lawrence Avenue Church with 33 added. This makes about 70 accessions since last April. Work is prospering.—W. T. MC-LAIN.

Bethany, Dec. 18.—We have just closed a meeting with five added by obedience at Bethany.—J. H. SPEER.

Faulkner, Dec. 14.—Our meeting at this place, which began two weeks ago, has resulted thus far in 70 additions to the church, 46 by confession and baptism; six from the Methodists, four of whom were baptized, seven from the Baptists, four by letter, one from the Church of God, six reclaimed. Bro. P. B. Bays, of Chautauqua Springs, and Brother Haner were our efficient helpers, and two better never existed. We have been six months getting ready for this meeting. Earnest, continued prayer, faithful work and the Holy Spirit's weapon, the gospel, gave us the victory.—ROBT. SIMONS.

Manhattan, Nov. 30.—Began a meeting yesterday with Nelson G. Brown, of Marion, Ia., in the pulpit. Congregation highly pleased and prospects good.—S. J. CARTER, pastor.

KENTUCKY.—Murray, Dec. 15.—I will close my ministry with the Murray Church, Dec. 30. During the past year 50 have been added to the local congregation, the usual missionary offerings have been taken, and more than $10,000 has been raised in cash and pledges for the erection of a new church. Also held a meeting for another church during November, in which 45 were added.—S. R. HAWKINS.

MISSOURI.—Princeton, Dec. 16.—We began a meeting here yesterday. The pastor, Z. Moore, is doing the preaching. Just closed a fifteen days' meeting at Lafayette, Ill., with E. A. Cory, pastor, preaching. As a result of the meeting, 21 were added to that splendid working congregation—all but three confessions.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON AND WIFE.

St. Joseph.—I held a two weeks' meeting at Antioch, Andrew county, including the fourth Sunday in October and first Sunday in November. There were five confessions and baptisms. After the meeting was ten days' old it rained so much we never had a good audience. At my appointment there last Sunday one young lady made the good confession and will be baptized next month.—N. ROLLO DAVIS.

Weaubleau, Dec. 18.—Report of ten months' work as pastor of the Antioch Church, near Pittsburg, Mo., ending first Lord's day in December, 1903. This is for one-fourth time: Sermons preached, 48; funeral sermons, 2; additions by baptism, 16; restored, 7; by letter and statement, 3; total additions, 26; money raised: for protracted meeting, $17.50; state missions, $5; pastor's salary, $71.67; repairs, $4; total money raised, $98.17. Church has also nearly fed and clothed the widow and orphans of one of our ministers who died a few years ago.—S. E. HENDRICKSON.

Kirkville, Dec. 17.—One young man made the good confession here last Sunday.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Kansas City, Dec. 16.—Recently assisted W. H. Embrey in a meeting at Sibley, Mo. There were 14 additions, 11 by confession and baptism.—E. C. DAVIS, 2634 Montgall.

New Franklin, Dec. 15.—Fifty-seven additions in Higbee meeting—33 confessions and baptisms, 20 from other churches; more than one-half men.—A. N. LINDSEY.

Butler, Dec. 15.—There were two united with the church Sunday; one was an excellent member of the M. E. Church before. Our wideawake auxiliary had an excellent program Sunday in recognition of C. W. B. M. Day. Contribution, $4.30.—E. H. WILLIAMSON.

Popular Hymns No. 2.

By C. C. CLINE.

The ruling purpose of the author has been to give to the public a worthy successor of Popular Hymns. He has not sought to duplicate it, but to make a book as well adapted to the new methods of Church, Sunday-school and C. E. work as the first was to the conditions twenty years ago when Popular Hymns was launched upon its long and useful career. POPULAR HYMNS No. 2 is better than its predecessor, not because it contains better music, but because the music is better adapted to the present wants of all the working forces of the army of the Lord.

Evangelists will find the Gospel Proclamation in Song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

Choristers will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

Christian Endeavorers will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-inspiring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing. The Solos, Duets, and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. Superintendents who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church.

Pastors who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed will NOT find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed unless it be to keep in style.

Like its predecessor, IT IS AN ALL ROUND BOOK.

St. Louis.

Joplin, Dec. 15.—The meeting conducted by Bro. W. E. Harlow in South Joplin came to a close yesterday with 160 added. It was a fine meeting in every way. Many heads of families were reached. This new church is not yet three months old and will have a membership of about 400 and will be self sustaining from the start. Bro. J. W. Baker, of the First Church, has been ordained as their pastor, and will make a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Their Sunday-school is already the second largest in the city. This meeting closes the special campaign begun Sept. 4 with a final total of 983 added. Careful plans have been made to care for the new members. The same evangelists have been engaged for a similar campaign next year, beginning about Sept. 1. The present buildings will either be enlarged or a great tabernacle will be erected to give the people a chance to hear the gospel. The year will be an aggressive one all along the line. Brothers Harlow and Ridenour will begin the year at Augusta, Kan., and will follow with a meeting with the church at Portsmouth, O.—W. F. TURNER.

Shelbina, Dec. 15.—We have just closed a grand meeting at Shelbina with 53 additions to the Christian Church—34 by confession, four restored and 15 by statement and letter. Bro. E. M. Smith, of Centralia, did the preaching well, but his personal work brought results. Brother Smith greatly endeared himself to the church here. Thirty-seven of the additions were heads of families. I am in my sixth year with this church and give them all my time, beginning Jan. 1, 1904.—J. H. WOOD.

Maryville, Dec. 19.—Thirty-six added here up to date, 26 of them this week. Over four hundred men attended the men's meeting last Sunday. We continue.—W. A. FITE, pastor, OMER AND SPRAGUE, evangelists.

Mexico, Dec. 18.—I but recently closed an eight days' meeting at Laddon, in this county. Three baptized, one of these from the Methodist Church and two received by letter. C. A. Lowe, a student at Columbia, has, in the last two or three months, taken charge of our church there and the work is prospering. The stormy weather and approaching holidays closed our meeting, which had promise of greater success. On Sunday evening, Dec. 6, I preached to our C. W. B. M. at Mexico and took an offering of $12.30 for that work. Six additions here since the close of Brother Hart's meeting.—A. W. KOKEN-DOFFER.

NEBRASKA.—Auburn, Dec. 14.—Our revival meeting with Samuel Gregg as evangelist closed Dec. 11, after four weeks' continuance. The results are satisfactory in every way. Thirty-four were added: 11 by baptism, six from Baptists, two from Methodists, two from United Brethren and one reclaimed. The others by letter or statement. The church is in good condition. This does not always follow in the work of some evangelists who aim principally if not altogether to count additions and make a good sounding report. Brother Gregg works unselfishly for the general good of the cause.—F. L. PETTIT.

Verdan, Dec. 14.—We just closed a few evening meetings at Shubert. They with the church at Antioch, six miles distant, want to locate a pastor. Who is the man? Can pay possibly $700; address me or H. E. Williams at Shubert, Neb. I visited and preached at Holton, Kan., Dec. 6. Holton has called W. Bedall, of Ind. Prof. Harry T. Sutton, of Cotner University, supplied for me at Verdan, Dec. 6. Bro. S. T. Jackson, of Cotner, ably filled the pulpit at Shubert, Dec. 6. Our work at Verdan and Salem progresses nicely.—W. A. MORRISON.

OHIO.—Millfield, Dec. 18.—Bro. Charles Newton, of Coshocton county, preaches monthly for the church here. He was with us in our meeting here part of the time, and rendered valuable service by his occasional discourse. His engagements elsewhere took him away the 15th inst. We close here the 20th. There have been 9 from the world, 2 by statement and 1 immersed Methodist—in all 12. A few days next at Tabor, and then I begin a meeting at Corning, fifteen miles north of Millfield, Dec. 31.—J. A. WALTERS.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.—Lexington, Dec. 16.—Closed our meeting here last night with 53 additions. Dedicated a new home of worship I go next to Apache, Okla.—JNO. W. MARSHALL.

OREGON.—Corvallis, Dec. 15.—Six additions last Lord's day; all young men. Four were baptized at the evening service, and two were received into fellowship who had recently been baptized. We begin a meeting early in January.—T. S. HANDSAKER.

NEW YORK.—North Tonawanda, Dec. 15.—We have recently closed a meeting with home forces, with the exception of Bro. A. R.

Davis, who assisted during a part of the meeting as leader of song, resulting in 23 additions: 15 by baptism, three from other religious bodies and six by letter. This makes a total of 66 additions since last report. Of these, 50 have entered by baptism, three from other religious bodies, three by reconsecration, and 10 by relation.—W. C. BOWER.

PENNS LVANIA.—Erie, Dec. 16.—Commenced my work as minister for the Church of Christ at Erie, Pa., Oct. 25. There were ten added during November, five by letter, four baptisms and one reclaimed from Baptists. Everything very hopeful.—F. A. WIGHT.

Samuel M. Bernard, of Boulder, Col., (as he was when he entered Kentucky University 12 years ago. Age and experience have changed him some.)

What Its Name Purports.

J. H. GARRISON: MY DEAR BROTHER.—Having just finished a perusal of your "Helps to Faith," I feel it in my heart to write you and say that your book is just what its title purports to be, a help to faith. I obtained great good out of the perusal and I hope to read it again and again. We all need to be more firmly grounded in the reason for the hope that lies within us, and I feel that your book is a valuable contribution in that direction.

May the good Father guide and bless you, and may He, in the language of your closing sentence, "lead us on in the path of spiritual progress until our faith shall brighten into perfect vision, and we shall see Him as He is," in the sincere prayer of,

Your friend and brother,

Z. T. SWEENEY.

NOTE—"Helps to Faith" is an attractive cloth-bound volume of 245 pages, a very creditable specimen of modern book making. Price, postpaid, only $1. Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis Mo.

A FAIR OFFER.

No doubt every one of our readers has noticed the offer of a free sample bottle of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine, which appears in our columns every week.

This offer strikes us as being a remarkably fair one, and we advise all of our readers who need the medicine to accept the offer and write for a sample without delay.

Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine is certainly a wonderful medicine. It will quickly relieve and permanently cure the most stubborn case of constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia or any form of stomach, liver and kidney trouble.

The fact that you write for a free sample does not place you under the slightest obligation to buy some of the medicine afterwards. Write at once for the free sample to the Vernal Remedy Co., 19 Seneca Building, Buffalo, N. Y., and the sample will be sent you promptly and gladly.

When you write for the free sample, you will confer a great favor upon us, by mentioning the fact that you write at the request of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

The Home: Its Work and Influence. By Charlotte Perkins Gilman. (McClure, Phillips & Co. $1.50 net.)

There are a good many things that cannot be said about this book—for instance that it is tame, or dull, or platitudinous, or orthodox. Henry Ward's Beecher's brilliant niece never, by any chance, comes within the scope of any of these adjectives. Her vocabulary is as unhackneyed as her ideas, and those are quite enough so. Most of those semi-sacred concepts which are inseparably associated in our minds with the idea of the home, Mrs. Gilman declares to be pure conventionalities, and outworn and antiquated conventionalities at that, which ought to be discarded in the interest of human progress, and could be discarded without the loss of any essential element of the home. The open fire, the wife bustling about in the performance of her household tasks, the home-cooked meal with pie like mother used to make—these are relics of a barbarous past, brought down into the present only because we stand too much in awe of our domestic mythology ever to inspect its premises and find how untenable they really are. Not that Mrs. Gilman proposes to abolish fire, or wives, or pie. But she believes in applying the principle of specialization and division of labor to all domestic work. She scouts home-cooking as unscientific and generally bad. The work which is now supposed to belong to the home and to be the natural task of the housewife, should be put into the hands of experts. This requires co-operation. The chief point, though, is not the economic need of readjusting domestic work, but the moral and intellectual need. The author holds that the home, as at present constituted, is not only not the cradle of our virtues and the palladium of our liberties, but is a drag upon the progress of the race. With such heresies as this do the pages of the book abound. The author is fond of startling statements and she knows how to make them. But with all the pungency and sometimes even flippancy of style, the purpose of the book is sober. She wants to improve the home, though her improvement would sweep away many of the things which long use (if not sound reason) has made us consider essential. The doctrine of equal rights is at the bottom of it all. "The whole area of human life is outside of, and irrelevant to, the distinctions of sex." Whoever accepts this will probably follow Mrs. Gilman's argument without demur. What she proposes is such a reconstruction of the home that the distinctive sex characteristics will be emphasized less, and the broadly human characteristics more.

Altar Stairs. By Charles J. Scofield, author of "The Subtle Adversary." The Chicago Christian Century Co. (For sale by the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, $1.50.)

The author of this book is a many-sided man. As a lawyer and as a preacher he has made a most excellent reputation. Not satisfied with this, however, he has entered the field of literature and is making for himself a name as an author. His first story, which was a temperance story, entitled, "The Subtle Adversary," showed considerable power as a writer and gave promise of further work of the same kind. In "Altar Stairs" the author's aim seems to be to point out the fruits of infidelity, at least in its grosser forms, and to exhibit in contrast with it, a few noble types of character illustrating the power of Christian faith in transforming life and character. Of course, the old story of love which is always young, runs through the book, and that story will not fail to hold the attention of the reader who begins the book, until the last page. Whatever else may be said of the work, few will deny that the author gets a grasp on his readers and holds their attention until he tells his story, which carries along with it its own lessons. We will not give away the plot, as it might destroy the interest of the story with those who wish to read it, but much of the strength of the story lies in its plot, rather than in any artistic method of working it out. If one fails to find in the story the sensitive touch of the master of his art, he will not fail to find a virile mind, a warm heart and a generous appreciation of all that is good, and a strong condemnation of all that is mean and unworthy. Many readers will find in it a stimulus to faith and to loyalty to one's convictions of truth. The book may be safely placed in the hands of young and old with the assurance that its influence will be good and not evil.

History of Socialism in the United States. By Morris Hillquit. (Funk & Wagnalls Co. $1.50 net.)

Socialism is such a very current movement and so much of importance to it is constantly occurring, that the latest book about it is very likely to be the best. It is so, we believe, in this case. In the first part of the book the author sketches the various attempts to establish ideal communities on a socialistic basis. A few of these are familiar, by name at least, to every one, but a complete list would include many score of these experimental Utopias. They fall into four classes: those based on some peculiar religious view, those established directly or indirectly by Robert Owen, the followers of Fourier, and the Icarians or disciples of Etienne Cabet. All of these experiments proceeded upon the principle of choosing a select group of persons and isolating them from the corruptions of the world. Even if they had been far more successful than they were, they would have little weight in recommending socialism as a world-wide program. The second part of the book deals with the modern socialistic movement—the importation of the idea from Germany, especially with the flood of emigration following the revolution of 1848, the scientific socialism of Karl Marx, the rise and fall of the International Working-Men's Association, the Socialist Labor Party and the political and industrial movements which were allied with it, the disintegration of this organization and the formation of the new Socialist Party by the union of many elements. The history sheds much light on the labor problem and the question of unionism. The author stands high in the councils of the Socialist Party and is in a position to speak with authority regarding its ideas and purposes. He gives an optimistic view of the outlook for Socialism.

Things Fundamental. By Charles Edward Jefferson, Pastor of Broadway Tabernacle. (T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50 net.)

This work may be described as advanced in its type of thought, yet evangelical. It is designed to meet some of the modern objections to the Bible and to Christianity by the use of the light which has been brought out by modern investigation. The work consists of a course of thirteen discourses in modern apologetics. The discourses are delivered from the standpoint of the pastor who would meet the intellectual difficulties of his members who come in contact with these objections, and who would preserve their faith and give them an insight into the problems which have confronted the Bible scholars of our time. To those who are prepared for it, it will be found a most helpful and stimulating book. Doubtless some of its positions would be called in question by many readers, but even these might be profited by the work by reading it discriminatingly. Mr. Jefferson proves himself to be a clear and strong thinker, who has a firm grasp on the fundamental things, and who is able to give a reason for the faith which is in him. It belongs to a class of works that will help the modern reader to pass safely through the present transition

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly every body knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but, simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I got more and better charcoal in Stuart's absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

The Land of Heather. By Clifton Johnson. (The Macmillan Co. $2.00 net.)

The name of Clifton Johnson suggests at once a certain definite sort of book—a book of charming descriptions of characteristic scenes in foreign lands, narratives of personal experiences with peasant folk and villagers, and unique photographs illustrating the same. And this is just that sort of book. In earlier volumes the author has, with the combined vividness of pen and camera, given us intimate glimpses of France, England and Ireland. Now he shows us Scotland, not in a "book of travel," but in a series of sketches which show the life of the country at very close range. The photographs, by the author, are admirably in keeping with the text. Some of them are views of scenery and famous buildings, but more of them are pictures of people in the quaint and picturesque setting of their daily occupations.

In the End: Being the Romance of two Worlds. By Frederick Rogers, D. C. L. (The Editor Pub. Co. New York.)

This story is divided into two parts. The scene of the first is laid on earth; of the second, in heaven. The principal episode of the first part is a free-thinker's lecture on "Why I am an Infidel" and the replies to it by several ministers. There is also a rudimentary love-story which is cut short by typhoid fever. In the second part, the hero awakens on the other shore and searches through heaven—which is a place very much like earth only with a better climate, a more select population and a very complete form of church unity—until he finds the young woman whom he was about to marry on earth.

The Migration of Preachers.

[The following interesting statement was received several weeks ago. Its publication has been delayed through oversight.—EDITOR.]

In your issue of Sept 10 you make comment on the fact that in a recent issue of Current Anecdotes the list of pulpit changes among the Disciples is so much larger than that in any other religious body. Inasmuch as I make up the list each month for the editor of Current Anecdotes I think I can explain the large list.

The list to which you refer is a two months' list instead of one. Owing to a change in the date of publishing the magazine my July list reached the editor too late for that issue. He added it to the August list. Perhaps he ought to have made note of this.

With this much explained, our list is still larger than any other, but I do not see that it is large enough to give us an "unenviable position." At best it can but reveal an "unenviable position," not give it. According to our last year-book we have, all told, 7,119 ministers of the gospel among us. Counting that the number of changes is 100 per month (and no single list has surpassed that number) we would have a total of 1,200 per year, or an average length of pastorate of about six years. That isn't so bad. I question whether any religious body can actually show a larger average, unless it is the Catholics. The fact that the other lists are not so large only indicates that they are not complete.

Even ours must be very incomplete, for in the last year-book Brother Smith says six of our preachers move every day in the week on the average—180 per month. I undertook this work on the theory that if the list was worth printing at all it certainly attained its highest value when it was most complete. If longer pastorates are desirable, and I think they are, the best thing that can happen to us is to have the present actual conditions thrust before us until we get so much ashamed of ourselves that we will settle down. To face present facts is an early step in the way to salvation. I should enjoy reading an editorial in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on the length of pastorates.

LOUIS O. LEHMAN.

Is There Nothing New and True In Modern Systems of Mind Cure?

In the Editor's Easy Chair sometime ago you said: "But whether the material world be beautiful or ugly depends altogether on the eyes that are looking at it. We are quite inclined to forget that a landscape, a sermon, a poem, are quite as dependent, for the impression they make, on the subjective condition of the seer or hearer, as upon their objective merit."

In the next column, speaking of the blessings to be received or lost at the convention, you say:

"That depends, not so much upon what will be said and done at the convention, as upon the mental and spiritual condition in which we go there."

To my mind, two stronger endorsements of the law and power of suggestion could not be written in so few words. Yet, in the next column, in answering a question by "Rusticus," you say:

"A wider knowledge of history, and a better understanding of the relation of the mind and the body would enable people to see that what truth there is in these modern methods of healing is not new, and that what is new is not true."

I do not see why a thing should be false because it is new. Will you please state what you mean by what is new, and whether you include in the "etc," or these "modern theories of healing" the following named sciences to wit: Magnetic, psycho, hypnotic and suggestive therapeutics.

VITAOPATHIST.

[No, we would not say that anything is false because it is new. What we meant to say was that the influence of the mind over the body in effecting cures of certain diseases, is not new, but has been known to the medical world and practiced by wise physicians for many generations. It may be true that greater emphasis has been laid upon this mode of healing in modern times than formerly, but the principle is not new in spite of the new names which have been given to it. With some of these systems of healing there is associated a philosophy, and sometimes a religion, neither of which will bear the scrutiny of scientific investigation. We hardly think the systems named by "Vitaopathist" can be properly ranked as "sciences" as yet. No doubt there is some truth contained in each of them, but there is probably a common truth underlying all of them that is as yet only vaguely understood even by those who claim to be teachers of these occult systems.—EDITOR.]

How Little It Costs.

How little it costs if we give it a thought,
To make happy some heart each day!
Just one kind word or a tender smile,
As we go on our daily way;
Perchance a look will suffice to clear
The cloud from a neighbor's face,
And the press of a hand in sympathy
A sorrowful tear efface.

One walks in sunlight; another goes
All weary in the shade;
One treads a path that is fair and smooth,
Another must pray for aid.
It costs so little! I wonder why
We give it so little thought;
A smile—kind words—a glance—a touch!
What magic with them is wrought!

Elsie's Christmas Money.

By Elizabeth Price.

"Papa, can I have some money? I want to buy my Christmas gifts to-day," said pretty Bertha Burris, as her father put on his overcoat after breakfast.

Mr. Burris hesitated. "I thought I had given you your allowance for this month, my dear."

"So you did, papa; but I spent that long ago. I supposed, of course, I should have some extra money for Christmas. You gave us some last year," said Bertha, with an injured air.

"It was much easier for me to do so last year than this, daughter. However, what must be, must. Here is all I can spare—make it go as far as possible, for I am under heavy expense, you know," and Mr. Burris left the room, looking worried.

Bertha frowned. "Only five dollars, and I have such hosts of things to buy. Why, the gift I had planned to buy for papa would cost this much. He isn't near as generous as he used to be. I'm just going to tease till he gives me more."

"Bertha, I wouldn't worry papa. The other children must be supplied, and my own share is yet to come. You should have saved part of your allowance, or even all of it, this month," and Mrs. Burris hurried away to interview the cook.

Bertha, still pouting, put the bill in her purse. "It's hardly worth while to go down town with this," she said to Aunt Agnes, who was busy among the plants in the sunny south window. "Auntie, you are a good hand at planning. Do tell me how to make five dollars do the work of fifteen."

"I can't do that," replied Aunt Agnes, quietly, "but before you make out your list I'd like to tell you a little story. Once upon a time I knew a little girl two or three years younger than you are now. Her father was a hard-working man, and made a comfortable living for his flock of boys and girls, but there was little left over for luxuries, and the summer Elsie was twelve Mr. Weller was sick for a month, and, of course, his finances were not improved by the added expenses that illness always entails.

"Mrs. Weller was an old and dear friend of mine, and I spent the month of December with her that year. The day after my arrival Elsie's father gave her one dollar, saying, 'That is for you to buy some little things for the children's Christmas. Father wishes it was more, dear, but that is the best I can do.' 'It's plenty, father, and thank you ever so much,' said Elsie, kissing him. After he had gone she stood looking at the bill with tears in her eyes. 'He is so good to me,' she said, 'and I know he and mother need this themselves. I hate to take it. I wish there was something I could do to help.' She was very quiet as she cleared the breakfast table, and I let her alone, feeling sure she was busy planning how to spend her money.

"That afternoon she went out awhile, and when she came home her face was glowing. 'Miss Agnes, I've got the loveliest secret! I'll have to tell mother, because I couldn't do it without her finding it out, but the children and father mustn't know for the world. You see, I can crochet real nice mittens. I made those the boys are wearing to school, and I went to see Mrs. Thayer, and she said she'd be glad to pay me twenty-five cents a pair and furnish the material. She has four boys. I bought the wool on the way home, and I'm going to work every spare minute, and I'm almost sure I can finish them before Christmas.'

"She worked at those mittens most industriously, shaping them carefully and finishing the wrists with gay little scallops, and in three weeks she had the four pair done. Mrs. Thayer paid her a crisp new bill, and I'm sure no one was ever happier than Elsie as she displayed her first earnings to her mother and me.

"She went down town next day with her little shopping-basket on her arm, and Mrs. Weller smiled after the scarlet hood, saying tenderly, 'She is a good child, Agnes.'

"That dollar was wonderfully elastic, for it bought something for every one of us. Marbles for the brothers, which were placed in gorgeous bags of Elsie's own making. A cunning set of wee pewter dishes for the little sister, hair ribbons for the older girls, materials for beautiful book-marks for her mother and me, which she worked neatly on the perforated cardboard then much used, and mounted on ribbon. Those we didn't see till Christmas day. I have mine yet in my Bible. Then there was a gay bandana handkerchief for the old wood-sawyer, and a tiny bottle of cologne for the washer-woman, who loved nothing so well.

"After we had inspected her purchases and passed judgment on them, her mother said, 'I don't see anything for father, Elsie. Did you forget him?' 'No, indeed, mamma, but I want to keep his present a secret even from you. May I?' Of course Mrs. Weller consented, but we both felt a little curious, and on Christmas we found out about it. In an envelope addressed to her father was the crisp bill Mrs. Thayer had paid her, with a note that Mr. Weller showed us afterwards. 'Dear Father,' it said, 'I didn't need but one dollar, so I spent the one you gave me, and saved this for you. I earned it all alone, and I want you to take it and use it every bit for your own dear self. Merry, merry Christmas! From Elsie.'

"That is all, unless I add that I never saw a family have a happier day, though I've seen a great many whose gifts were more numerous and costly."

Bertha sat silent and thoughtful for awhile as auntie went on with her work. Presently she looked up brightly. "It's 'tween,' auntie, as Bert said about his vaccination. Thank you for your little story. I'm afraid I don't compare very favorably with Elsie, for it's so hard for me to be unselfish. It's too late for me to earn money even if I knew how, which I don't, but I won't ask papa for any more money, and I will try to let him see that I do love him and appreciate his kindness."

And she did, for the three plain linen handkerchiefs, neatly hemstitched by girlish fingers and labeled, "For my dear papa, with Bertha's best love," were more precious to the recipient than any ready-made gift the entire five dollars could have purchased.—S. S. Times.

A Rainy-Day Fairy.

"It's just too bad for anything!"

"I wish it would never rain again!"

"Rain, rain, go to Spain!"—Hello, there's Aunt Fanny."

The three little noses which had been flattened against the window-pane, the belonging of three little faces that had been looking gloomily out upon the dreary prospect of a dull sky, an incessant drizzle of fine drops, and soaked earth, were suddenly withdrawn; and the patter of three pairs of feet was heard racing at a lively gait toward the door.

"Hello, little folks! What does this mean? You look as solemn as owls."

"We are," answered Flora, positively.

"You are owls?" quizzically laughed Aunt Fannie. "Then go off in the dark somewhere and blink. I don't want anything to do with owls. I came here to have a jolly time with a band of jolly children."

"How can anybody be jolly on a rainy day?" demanded Hugh, the elder of the two brothers.

"Why, easier than being in the dumps, I should think. Why don't you try to do something to amuse Harry and cheer him up? You would soon forget your own disappointment."

Hugh's disappointment was that he was to have gone to a picnic that day, but the rain had spoiled it.

"I couldn't think of anything to do," Hugh began to say. "There is nothing to make amusement of after you have been cheated out of a picnic."

"Pshaw!" exclaimed Aunt Fannie. "The cheapest materials in the world will do. Here; fly around and get some old spools, a few small round nails, and a piece of pine box; and I'll show you how to make bushels of fun."

In a few moments Hugh came back with the things he had been directed to find, wearing a more hopeful look on his face.

"Now," commanded Aunt Fannie, "you're to cut the ends off the spools so as to make wheels of them—four; two from the large spools for the hind wheels, and two from the smaller spools for the front wheels. Here, Flora, hurry and stir up the fire. Then put a little flour and water in a tincup, and we'll boil some paste. Now, Harry, go bring me that sheet of paper off the table."

By the time the paste was boiled, Hugh had cut the ends off the spools, and Aunt Fannie was trying to show him how to fasten them with the round nails to a block of wood, so as to make the body and wheels of the wagon.

"Now use your knife," she said, "to shave out some thin bass-wood side and end pieces for the wagon box. We can fasten them together with pins. Hurry up, Flora, with your paste; and while I'm pasting this cover on, you take the scissors and cut out of the rest of the sheet of paper a lot of little men and women just about the size to ride in this wagon."

Aunt Fannie bent a piece of paper bow-shaped, so as to make a white cover for the wagon, and this she fastened on to the sides with the paste which Flora had made.

"Now, hurry up with your little men and women," she said, "and we will all go to the picnic in spite of the rain; for our wagon has a nice waterproof cover like the prairie schooners in which the people used to go out West."

"Then let's take them out West, Aunt Fannie," said Hugh. "I don't care for picnics any more. I'd a great deal rather go out West."

"So would I," said Flora.

"Me too!" exclaimed Harry.

And so the little paper men and women were hustled into the little paper-covered prairie-schooner, and Harry promised to be very careful (for he was to be horses and driver); while Hugh, armed with the knife with which he had been whittling, and a stick for a gun, marched beside as a body-guard against wolves and Indians; and Flora and Aunt Fannie went ahead to start a little camp fire and have everything ready for the people to camp out at the end of their first day's journey across the plains.

"What lots of fun!" exclaimed Hugh and Flora in concert, as the afternoon drew to a close.

"Aunt Fannie is a fairy!" explained Harry. "She makes such beautiful things out of nothing."

"If I am a fairy," she replied, laughingly, "I am glad I am a rainy-day fairy, because I think fairies are needed worse on rainy days than they are on bright ones."—John F. Cowan, in the Methodist Protestant.

Po' Lil' Brack Sheep.

[The following poem by Ethel Maude Colson was printed in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Nov. 19. Dr. Anson G. Chester, of Buffalo, has added an appropriate l'envoi of four lines. We reprint the poem with the addition.—EDITOR.]

Po' lil' brack sheep what strayed away
Done los' in de win' and de rain,
An' de Shepherd, he say, "O hirelin',
Go fin' my sheep ergain."

An' de hirelin' frown, "O Shepherd,
Dat sheep is brack an' bad."
But de Shepherd, he smile laik dat lil' brack
sheep
Is de onlies' lam' he had.

An' he say, "O hirelin', hasten,
For de win' an' de rain am col',
An' dat lil' brack sheep be lonesome
Out dere, so far from de fol'."

An' de hirelin' frown, "O Shepherd,
Dat sheep, it weak and po'."
But de Shepherd, he smile laik dat lil' brack
sheep
He lub it des' all de mo'.

An' he say, "O hirelin', hasten,
For de hail am beatin' hard,
An' dat lil' brack sheep git bruises
Way off fum de sheepfol' yard."

An' de hirelin' frown, "O Shepherd,
Dat sheep is mos' wore out."
But de Shepherd, he smile laik dat lil' brack
sheep
Des' couldn't be done without.

An' he say, "O hirelin', hasten,
Lo, here dey ninety an' nine;
But dere way off fum de sheepfol'
Dat lil' brack sheep ob mine."

An' de hirelin' frown, "O Shepherd,
De res' ob sheep am here."
But de Shepherd, he smile laik dat lil' brack
sheep
He hol' it de mos'es' dear.

An' he wander out in de darkness,
Where de night was col' an' bleak,
An' dat lil' brack sheep, he fin' it,
An' lay it ergains' his cheek.

[Added by Anson G. Chester.]

So back dey cum to de fol' ergain,
An' de Shepherd's heart was glad:
An' when de po' lil' thing growed up,
'Twas de bestest sheep 'at he had!

As to Christmas Gifts.

Christmas is the greatest day in all the year. Is there a feeling that there is getting to be too much of it? Not too much of it in the way of kindness and brotherly love, but in the way of worry and expense. The weeks before it are full of feverish excitement, of nervous expectation, of perplexity; the days following it, of exhaustion.

Childhood is on tiptoe in two hemispheres, and childhood has become so conscious of its desserts, that it is next to impossible to surprise it, except by too small gifts. The day has to carry a tremendous load. The obesity that might be distributed in healthful streams throughout the year, is poured out in prodigal waste, by some who seem glad to relieve themselves of obligation by a single act. In point of cost, it is equal to half a dozen weddings. Year by year the expense of gifts increases. Is this the dictate of fashion, or owing to the growth of kindly feeling? Is it a spontaneous response to the spirit of the day, or do any people make gifts because everybody else does; and because there has grown up of late years a rivalry in this matter?

Since the Puritan distrust of this great feast day abated, the American people, who are the most generous people in the world, have taken up Christmas with the same enthusiasm

What a name for such a flower! and what a flower for such a name! How could either be improved upon? But what does this beautiful flower, so luxuriant and graceful, say to you other than what all sweet flowers say to you—that they have brought you a message from the kind Father on his throne? Why, they tell you that the summer is dying, that they bring you the last burst of light before the darkness sets in; that they furnish the light while the katydid sings his autumn hymn, and a million bugs join in the chorus, while the grasshopper skips around lamenting his fate and his lack of privilege that the ant enjoys—that of laying up winter supplies, while the birds pack their grips preparatory to bidding you good-bye, while the greedy blackbird chatters around and shakes off nuts, leaves and acorns, and the restless geese are hunting out their usual route southward.

Look and behold! Feast your eyes, for this is the gold of the sunset of summer, and will only last while the flowers die and are buried, and then will come the darkness.—Exchange.

What the Saloon Is.

Some reformers go out of their way to pay special compliments to the saloon as an American institution. They tell us the saloon is the poor man's club, his haven of rest after a day's laborious toil.

Why not continue the eulogy, and recommend the saloon as the poor man's bank? Why not call it the toiler's refuge in sickness? Why not style the saloon-keeper the workman's good samaritan in affliction, his supporter and friend in misfortune and poverty? I have no patience with people who go out of their way to excuse the existence of the lawless and poverty-breeding saloon, and who are always seeking an opportunity to pat the saloon-keeper on the back for his many noble acts of charity and benevolence.

We know what the saloon is, if we want to tell the truth. It is the highway robber of the poor and helpless; it is the wrecker and destroyer of thousands of happy, comfortable homes; it is the debaucher of the young and innocent through its wine rooms and other pest-breeding annexes; it is, in fine, the vicious and contaminating influence that produces most of our political rottenness.

We have permitted this vile reptile to entwine itself about our municipal, state and federal politics, until it has crushed out all decency and honesty, and left us nothing but the shell of our boasted liberty.—James J. Coffey, in The American Issue.

An Unabashed Urchin.

An English duke, according to London Spare Moments, was driving to a park on his estate to inspect a company of artillery. He observed a ragged urchin keeping pace with the carriage at his side. His Grace, being struck with the cleanliness of the lad, asked him where he was going. The lad replied:

"To the park, to see the dook and sogers."

The duke, feeling interested, stopped his carriage and opened the door to the lad, saying he could ride to the park with him.

The delighted lad, being in ignorance of who he was, kept his Grace interested with his quaint remarks till the park gates were reached.

As the carriage entered it was saluted by the company and guns, whereupon his Grace said to the lad:

"Now, can you tell me where the duke is?"

The lad eyed his person all over, then, looking at the duke, replied, quite seriously:

"Well, I dunno, mister, but it's either you or me."

Marcus M. Marks tells this story of his four-year-old boy, who, noticing for the first time a lock of gray hair on his father's head, asked: "Papa, why are some of your hairs gray?" Thinking to drive home a moral lesson, the father answered: "Papa gets a gray hair every time his little boy is naughty." The child seemed lost in thought, but after a short pause said naively: "Well, then, grandpa must have had awful naughty boys."—The Ram's Horn.

A Labor Question.

One of the most pronounced of the hobbies of Professor R., of — University, was the digestive and assimilative properties of various food stuffs. He always gladly embraced an opportunity to inculcate some one of the lessons he had learned by dint of experiment, analysis and research.

On one occasion the professor was out for a walk, and his way led him past a farmhouse. He observed the farmer feeding corn to a drove of squealing porkers. Here was an opportunity to impart a bit of valuable information.

"What are you feeding to those hogs, my friend?" the professor asked.

"Corn, professor," the grizzled old farmer, who knew the learned gentleman by sight, replied.

"Are you feeding it wet or dry?"

"Dry."

"Don't you know if you feed it wet the hogs can digest it in one-half the time?"

The farmer gave him a quizzled look. "Now see here, professor," he said, "how much do you calculate a hog's time is worth?"

A Prohibition Railway.

In 1890, J. B. Watkins built the St. Louis, Watkins & Gulf Railway from Lake Charles to Alexandria, Louisiana, one hundred miles. He bought and incorporated all the town sites along the line. The deeds for all lots sold contained an anti-liquor clause, which clause has been upheld by the Appellate Court. Only one violation of the anti-liquor clause has occurred in the thirteen years, and there will not be another. This is real prohibition. Mr. Watkins, who has manfully stood up for his temperance principles, claims that the railroad above mentioned is the only railway in the world along which liquor cannot be sold. It would be well if there were more practical temperance workers of the Watkins type.—New York Observer.

The nomination of Lincoln for President of the United States was quietly received at his home in Springfield, Ill. When the committee from Chicago arrived to apprise Mr. Lincoln of his nomination, his two boys, Willie and "Tad," were perched on the fence before the house. Tad stood erect and welcomed the committee by shouting "Hooray!" Charles Carleton Coffin describes the reception of the committee:

"Mrs. Lincoln will be pleased to see you in the other room, gentlemen. You will be thirsty after your long journey. You will find something refreshing in the library."

"In the library were several hundred volumes arranged upon shelves, two globes, one terrestrial, the other celestial, a plain table, a pitcher of cold water and glasses, but no wines or liquors."

"You did not find any great spread of liquors, I take it," remarked a citizen of Springfield the next morning.

"No," I replied.

"Thereby hangs a little story: When we knew you were on your way, a number of us called on Mr. Lincoln and said that in all probability some of the members of the committee

An Electric Belt Free

Send Your Application At Once To The Physician's Institute.

They Will Send You Absolutely Free One of Their 100 Gauge Supreme Electric Belts, the Belt Which Has Made so Many Wonderful Cures—You Needn't Send Even a Postage Stamp, Just Your Name and Address.

Nine years ago the State of Illinois granted to the Physicians' Institute of Chicago a charter.

There was need of something above the ordinary method of treatment for chronic diseases, something more than any one specialist or any number of specialists acting independently could do, so the State itself, under the powers granted it by its general laws, gave the power to the Physicians' Institute to furnish to the sick such help as would make them well and strong.

Ever since its establishment this Institute has endeavored in every possible way to carry out the original purposes of its establishment under the beneficent laws of the State.

Five years ago the Physician's Institute, realizing the value of electricity in the treatment of certain phases of disease, created under the superintendence of its staff of specialists an electric belt, and this belt has been proved to be of great value as a curative agent. From time to time it has been improved until it reached that stage of perfection which warranted its present name of "Supreme."

This belt is the most effective of all agents in the cure of rheumatism, lumbago, lame back, nervous exhaustion, weakened or lost vital functions, varicocele, kidney disorders and many other complaints.

This "Supreme Electric Belt" is made in one grade only—100 gauge—there is no better electric belt made and no better belt can be made. Whenever in the opinion of our staff of specialists the wonderful curative and revitalizing forces of electricity will cure you we send you, free of all cost, one of these Supreme Electric Belts. It is not sent on trial, it is yours to keep forever without the payment of one cent. This generous offer may be withdrawn at any time, so you should write to-day for this free "Supreme Electric Belt" to the Physicians' Institute, at 1974 Unity Building, Chicago, Ill.

would need some refreshments, wines or liquors. 'I haven't any in the house,' he said. 'We will furnish them.' 'Gentlemen, I cannot allow you to do what I will not do myself,' was the reply.

"But that was not the end of it. Some of our good and leading citizens, feeling that Springfield had been highly honored by the nomination, sent over some baskets of champagne, but Mr. Lincoln sent them back, thanking them for their intended kindness."—Youth's Companion.

Missouri Christian Endeavor.

DEAR ENDEAVORERS: Our convention will be held in Carrollton next June, in connection with all the church interests of the state. We will have more time for Endeavor work than heretofore. We expect to have a fine program. It will not be an Endeavor "hour," but an Endeavor session. The superintendent has set the mark of Endeavor attendance at 300. Will you be one to help to bring that to pass?

Reports? Why, yes, I want to hear from every society in the state. Write how you are getting along. Tell of your plans for the increase of your membership. Tell how you keep up the attendance and the interest in your meetings. Warrensburg has added 83 new members since last September. An intermediate society has been organized. We do not plan how to induce all to take part any more, but we are put to it to devise plans that will enable every member to get an opportunity to take part in the hour we have for the Endeavor meeting. How is that? You have been doing some good work. Tell me about it, and I will see that it gets out.

The committee on Christian Endeavor at the Columbia convention last September reported, among other things, as follows:

"1. That our state superintendent be a member of the State Board of Missions.

"2. That at our next convention more time be given on the program to the work of Christian Endeavor.

"3. That more young people be put on the program.

"4. That a special effort be made to secure a larger attendance at our next convention.

"5. That the superintendent attend, as far as possible, all county and district conventions, and that a place be made on all programs for the consideration of the work of Christian Endeavor.

"6. That our societies be urged to send not less than one dollar to the state superintendent for the expenses of the work.

"R. H. WAGGONER,

"W. F. HAMANN,

"A. W. KOKENDOFFER,

"Committee."

Ponder this report well, and act in keeping with its requests. We will soon be about the new report for our next convention. There is not a cent in the expense fund. Will you not bring this matter up at your next meeting and vote to send the dollar at once?

The writer was put into this work against his advice at our last convention. He favored and worked for some one else for the place. But, now that he has accepted, he is going to see that something is doing in the Endeavor circles of our people of the state of Missouri. We need more of the genuine Endeavor enthusiasm. Let us steam up. Come, let us thrill the church of Missouri with an enthusiasm that she has never heard of before. What a power we can be! The Missouri Disciples do not know their strength. Let us get into such good shape in our local and our state work that we will go over to Carrollton with some of the old-time Endeavor enthusiasm. Let us sweep the convention off its feet.

The superintendent is yours to command in so far as he is able to comply. Write him about anything you have in mind, or about anything you want him to do.

Remember, this is a short year. Only six months until the next convention. We must act quickly.

Missouri Bible-School Notes.

Dr. Traugher is pushing the work in Mexico, and with the new house the work in the school will go to the front.

The campaign rally at Cleo, Okla., is on for good, and the school has made two different orders for buttons. C. J. Chastain, a Missourian, is superintendent, and that explains much of their vim and push in all the good work.

Two of the State Bible-school forces will put in next Sunday dedicating new houses, one at Belle, and the other at Taskee; both first-class houses, too.

E. G. Merrill locates with Brunswick the first of the year, and will give all his time in the spring to the work there. The Bible-school will profit by all such arrangements as that, for the Merrill family are good in the school.

W. D. McCully gives half time to Keytesville after January 1, and those of us knowing W. D., understand what that means for church and school, there being few better workers in all the departments than he.

The Scotland county meeting at Rutledge shows what consecrated work will do for the Master. Since its organization, with J. M. Jayne as president, they have organized four new congregations, built four new houses, and are now negotiating for the fifth house, and then comes the fifth congregation. Brother Jayne has done much toward these good results by a standing offer of $50 toward every new house. Bro. G. A. Hendrickson has done fine work since entering upon the county work, resulting in 39 additions. They now have a house in every township but one, and are planning to put one in that township in 1904, when Scotland will head the list.

The congregation and school of Liberal have a good record for 1903, having given $276 for missions and benevolence this year, of which Brother Button and Sister Crank, as leaders, are very proud.

"The Blues," of Kahoka, under Miss Jennie Ayers, have ordered 100 buttons, showing you what they are determined to do if possible, "take the cake," only "The Reds" are heavily entrenched, and also set for victory.

W. B. Palmer has the oversight for another year in Salisbury, and those knowing him understand the meaning of that to the school and work generally.

A. R. Hammett goes in again at Huntsville, and is going to unite with the new minister to make 1904 their gala year in good work. "Just as I expected."

R. B. Havener's meeting at Belle goes right along with over 35 additions at the last report; and we are depending on the schools to send these good men home for a very "Merry Christmas and Happy New Year." Will you lend a hand in that? Write.

C. E. Wagner, assistant at Kirksville, takes the work at Shelbyville for all time in that region, living at Shelbyville.

To all our schools and workers a "Merry Christmas," and God bless you for the persistent faithfulness with which so many of you have stood by our work and the field force, and especially the secretary. H. F. DAVIS.

The young women in all churches may study with profit the career of the Young Ladies' Mission Circle of Carrollton, of which Mrs. Georgia E. Wilcoxon, Mrs. A. C. Smith and Miss Lucy Turpin are the wide-awake officers. The following is quoted from a letter:

"The Young Ladies' Missionary Society of Carrollton, Mo., was organized in February, 1903, with 25 members. In September we decided to take a special work for each month. Our first endeavor was directed to the increase of our membership, which the summer months had cut down to 23. We gave an 'Oriental Pilgrimage,' conducted as follows: Three homes situated close together were decorated to represent Africa, India and Japan. The young ladies serving at each place were dressed as nearly as possible like natives of the countries represented. In Africa a 'Voodoo Queen' distributed amulets, charm bags, etc. In India an old Hindu astrologer, by means of a mysterious dial covered with signs of the zodiac, read the future for any who wished. In Japan a room full of curios was exhibited. Light refreshments suitable to the countries were served. Tickets were sold in advance. About 300 people were entertained. Twenty-four new members were received and $60 turned into the treasury. Our next work was to increase the number of Tidings subscriptions. Now only five of our 43 members are without this paper in their homes. We meet the first Saturday in the month. We devote about an hour and a half to study and business. This is followed with a social hour, when light refreshments are served. The new work of our society is the reorganization of the Junior Band. Twenty-five members were re-enlisted in this department. We are grateful that God has permitted us to do something for Him and has blessed our efforts with such success. We are working for 100 members in our two departments."

Their report just received is: Members (in circle), 50; monthly offering, $12; C. W. B. M. day, $10; for stricken Jamaica, $25; for one share in Deoghur, $25; Mrs. Wilcoxon and Miss J. Jenkinson, $10; for state, $10; from Juniors, $2; total for first quarter, $84. Will not the example of these noble young women stimulate others to do something? What Carrollton girls can do, others can.

Lee's Summit observed C. W. B. M. day, offering $451. This auxiliary always reports thirty cents per member to the National and fifteen cents per member to the state treasury every quarter.

Carondelet has doubled its membership, except three, this quarter. They expect the three to be won before Dec. 31.

Centralia's C. W. B. M. day offering was $15.55.

Lebanon observed C. W. B. M. day on Dec. 13. Brother Clay, pastor, and Sister Young presented the plea for our work. Offering, $465. Mrs. T. B. Burley is president, Mrs. C. A. Spiller secretary.

Mrs. M. A. Fowler, manager of Clinton district, reports as follows: Number trips, 3; days' work, 5; places visited, 4; addresses, 3; new members added to old auxiliary, 10; number Tidings, 4; children's meetings, 1; calls made, 9. LaPlata sends $517 for C. W. B. M. day offering, and Frankford sends $5.00.

A Wish for the New Year

That it may witness:—

A diminishing greed for gain, and an increasing zeal for those things which really make life worth living.

The substitution of arbitration, or other means of peaceful adjudication of differences, for war between nations and between capital and labor.

A presidential campaign carried on without partisan bitterness, without falsehood and slander, and without the corrupt use of money.

A revival of civic righteousness in every city, in every state, and throughout the nation, in which moral issues shall outrank party differences, and conscience shall dominate partisan zeal.

The continued growth of the spirit of union among Christians of all names and creeds, and closer co-operation among all the churches in promoting the common interests of the Kingdom of God, hastening the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of His followers, to the end that the great intrenched evils of our modern civilization may be overthrown and the whole world evangelized.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

Current Events

The events of the past week leave it still undecided how far Colombia will proceed with actual hostilities in the attempt to win back Panama.

General Reyes is trying to restrain his fellow-countrymen until he can get back from Washington to Colombia. A small body of Colombian troops has been landed on the Isla de Pinos, which belongs to Panama and is admirably adapted by situation and otherwise to be used as a base of operations against the isthmus. Colombia has also warned the Americans in the Darien district to leave within twenty-four hours, but the time limit elapsed, the Americans did not leave, and nothing happened. President Marroquin has greatly excited the war fever among the Colombians by offering his own private fortune for use in the war against Panama. All of this looks ominous. On the other hand, the United States consular officers in Colombia say that that government has virtually no standing army, and a late report indicates that the volunteers have disbanded. Admiral Walker, who is on the ground and knows the conditions as well as any American, says that the invasion of Panama by Colombia is physically impossible. General Reyes has been in Washington long enough to catch something of the drift of sentiment there, and to understand what a serious proposition it would be for Colombia to become involved in hostilities with the United States. His influence will be strongly upon the side of peace. He has presented to Secretary Hay the formal protest of his government against the act of President Roosevelt in recognizing and protecting Panama, and is making preparations to close the legation and leave Washington as soon as he receives an official reply to this communication. If the protest includes a proposal to refer the case to the Hague, Colombia will be informed that the independence of a government which has been recognized by all the important powers, is not a subject for arbitration. Minister Beaupre, the diplomatic representative of the United States in Colombia, has left Bogota on a "vacation"—one of those diplomatic vacations which indicate not so much need of rest for the minister, as strained relations between the governments involved.

The full recognition of the new Republic of Panama by Great Britain came in time to be a welcome Christmas present to that infant government. The action of the Powers has now been practically unanimous in recognizing Panama. The last to fall into line was the postmaster of San Francisco, who insisted that postal matter for the city of Panama should be addressed not "Republic of Panama, but United States of Colombia." It was promptly explained to the San Francisco postmaster that it was not within the province of his office to refuse recognition to a government which has been recognized by the United States. The prospect of a solid opposition to the President's course along party lines, is decreasing. The legislature of Louisiana has passed a resolution requesting the senators of that state to vote for the new canal treaty, and the governor of Georgia is defending the President against his critics. The suggestion which comes from a Democratic source, that it will be wise for the party to "ratify first and criticise afterwards," is sound. But in that case, the criticism will not be serious. It will require sixty votes in the Senate to ratify the treaty by the necessary two-thirds vote. There are fifty-seven Republican senators. If Senator Hoar is counted in the opposition on this issue, it will require only four Democratic votes to make the two-thirds. With Louisiana's senators already instructed, and the general sentiment of the South strongly in favor of the canal, there will be no difficulty in getting the necessary votes. The only danger is that some little group of obstructionists will set themselves to talk the treaty to death. But it will take a lot of talking to fill all the time between now and the adjournment of Congress in June. Even Senator Morgan could scarcely be equal to the task of making a six months' speech.

According to the newspaper correspondents in the far east, whose opinion is corroborated by advices from official sources, the beginning of hostilities between Russia and Japan is only a matter of days. Japan has presented to Russia what is virtually an ultimatum. It is, to be precise, a demand for a definite statement of Russia's purposes regarding Korea, coupled with an insistent suggestion that Russia and Japan shall unite in guaranteeing the integrity of the Chinese Empire and the preservation of Korea. Japan will wait until January 10, for a satisfactory answer to these demands and will then occupy Korea to repel the Russian advances from the west. Popular opinion in Japan seems to be strongly in favor of war, and the imperial authorities are being freely criticised for having hitherto submitted so tamely to Russia's equivocations and delays. The issue of a war between Russia and Japan is not such a foregone conclusion as one might suppose from a comparison of their areas. Russia will have the advantage of greater resources and numbers, but Japan will have all the advantage of position and of fighting near home. The trans-Siberian railway will be of immense importance in transporting Russian troops to the east, but it will require a large number of troops to protect the railway. Japan is a small country, but it has forty million people, more than half as many as the United States, and they will fight, not only with the skill produced by the best modern drilling and equipment, but with the desperation born of the knowledge that their national existence is at stake. England stands back of Japan, and Germany is the friend of Russia in this contest. Neither of these is likely to exercise an influence for peace, for both have something to gain by war. A war involving Russia in the far east will leave Great Britain free to carry out her projects in Thibet, which are already under way, while Germany will welcome any disturbance of the status quo in China, which will afford her an excuse for making such encroachments in Central China as Russia is making in Manchuria. Meanwhile, our state department is pressing for the immediate ratification of the Chinese-American commercial treaty, which has already been signed, guaranteeing our rights of trade in Manchuria.

The complexity and the interest in the political situation in Missouri increase as time passes. The Real Issue. Strictly speaking, it is not a political issue, certainly not a party issue, but it is a moral struggle that is now attracting the attention of the whole country. This is why we are deeply interested in the matter. The question as to which of the political parties shall control Missouri is one of relatively small importance, but the question as to whether our state and its leading cities shall be controlled by political machines run in the interest of dishonesty and corruption in politics, or whether the honest people of the state, regardless of party, shall assert their power and assume control of the affairs of the state, is of overshadowing importance. Nothing is more futile than the attempt to belittle the issue that has been raised between honesty and dishonesty, and make it appear that mere partisan questions are the paramount issue in this state. The agitation begun by the prosecution of boodlers and bribers in this city by Circuit Attorney Joseph W. Folk, and in the state capital by Clayton S. Brooks, pastor of the Christian Church of that city, has defined the real issue for the people of Missouri. Issues grow out of events; they are not manufactured by politicians. The struggle in Missouri at present is between honesty and dishonesty; between pure democracy, in which the people rule, and the despotism of the political machine. Let no professional politician be permitted to "pull the wool" over the eyes of honest voters, so as to conceal that issue.

Scholars are now translating into English the Code of Hammurabi, king of Babylonia, about 2250 B. C. It is believed to be the most ancient of all codes. The following specimen, marked paragraph five, possesses especial interest for the people of Missouri just now:

If a judge pronounces a judgment, renders a decision, delivers a verdict duly signed and sealed and afterwards alters his judgment, they shall call that judge to account for the alteration of the judgment which he had pronounced, and he shall pay twelve-fold the penalty which was in the said judgment, and, in the assembly, they shall expel him from his seat of judgment, and he shall not return, and with the judges in a case he shall not take his seat.

It is fortunate for some of the judges of our own times that they did not live back in the days of Hammurabi. This is a dangerous sentiment in Missouri. We hope that Hammurabi will not be fined for contempt of court.

We have had a good deal of talk about sound money and honest money, but perhaps it is worth while to call attention also to the need of clean money. We mean it literally. Even one's natural indisposition to criticise any sort of money which will pass current, cannot blind one to the fact that an old, torn, greasy, germ-infested dollar bill is not, in itself, a pleasant object to contemplate. The new Post Check Currency system which Congress is being asked to introduce will have this good result, among others, that it will give us fresh, crisp bills in place of the torn and dirty paper currency of the lower denominations. This plan contemplates that all bills of the value of one, two and five dollars, except national bank notes, shall be issued in such form that they will be payable to bearer and may therefore be used as ordinary currency until the name of a specific payee is written upon them. When this is done, the bills shall be payable only to the payee named, and will therefore afford a perfectly safe means of transmitting money by mail. Such notes may be cashed at any post office and will then be cancelled and new notes issued in place of them. This plan has been approved by the President, by the Postmaster General, and by Third Assistant Postmaster General Madden. The convenience of this currency to the public, the value of it to all business houses whose receipts come in small amounts through the mail, and the advantage to everyone of having clean money guaranteed by this process of constant cancellation and re-issue, are too apparent to require argument. We hope Congress will sanction the plan and put it into operation.

A special commission has decided that the Dreyfus case shall be reopened in January before the Court of Cassation. It will be remembered that when the case was retried in 1899, after Capt. Dreyfus had been brought back from Devil's Island, the verdict was (contrary to the evidence as it seemed to everyone but the court) a reaffirmation of his guilt. Such was the certainty of his innocence, however, that he was at once pardoned. His present status, therefore, is that of a man twice condemned for treason, and still suffering a loss of his military rank, although no one really believes that he is guilty. The world may be tired of hearing about the Dreyfus case, and may sigh a weary sigh when its reopening is announced, but the facts remain that a great injustice is being done to him until the court completely clears his record and restores his military rank.

Brevities.

Bird S. Coler says that the next Democratic platform must pledge the party to "unalterable opposition to taxation without representation." St. Louis and Denver would be glad to see the triumph of any party which would enforce that principle in their municipal affairs.

The trial of Ed. Butler on his second bribery indictment will begin Feb. 1 at Fulton, Mo., before Judge Hough, of St. Louis. The charge in this case is that Mr. Butler furnished the $47,500 with which nineteen members of the St. Louis House of Delegates were bribed in the municipal lighting scandal.

The national Prohibition nominating convention will be held in Kansas City, Mo., June 29, 1904. The committee received invitations from eight cities. The coming of a Prohibition convention does not give such a boom to the local liquor business as some of the other conventions, but the cities seem to consider it desirable nevertheless.

The President's special investigators, Charles J. Bonaparte and Holmes Conrad, have presented their report on the postal scandals. They confirm the Tulloch charges and assert that during the years 1898 to 1900 there were in the Washington postoffice and the office of the first assistant postmaster general (Perry Heath) abuses involving conduct "which was certainly often illegal and may sometimes have been criminal." Prosecution in these cases is barred by statute of limitation.

The papers say that J. Ogden Armour made $210,000 in one day last month in the stock market by a corner on wheat. "Made" it? Not a dollar of value was created. His manipulations did not increase the supply of wheat by a single bushel nor add a cent's worth to the real value of any bushel of wheat. Let us say that he got $210,000 out of the wheat market, and let us speak of "making money" only when we wish to describe activities which add to the world's wealth and do not merely transfer money from the loser to the winner in a purely speculative transaction.

The St. Louis Republic (Dem.) making sport of the alleged possibility of Missouri being "carried" by the Republicans, compares that achievement with Atlas' task in carrying the sky, and thinks that Missouri is too heavy a load for the Republican giants of this day to carry. We are not much interested in the matter as between the two parties. The real load to be lifted is not the majority of honest Democratic votes, but the incubus of graft, bribery and oppression which the rulers of this state have laid upon the state. Perhaps Folk will be the Atlas who can lift this load. At present he seems to be the only one of the giants who realizes, or is willing to admit that this is the great burden.

A Backward Glance.

The year now closing has been a notable one. Great events transpire so rapidly in this swiftly-moving age that each year is historic. The past year has witnessed events of greater importance than those which gave prominence to the year 1666—the Annus Mirabilis—made memorable by Dryden. The peaceful settlement of the Alaskan Boundary question, the adjudication of the Venezuelan problem by the Hague tribunal, the revolution and independence of Panama and the progress of this government toward the realization of the Isthmian Canal, are likely to have a far-reaching influence upon the future history of the world.

The year has been marked by unusual agitation in behalf of civic righteousness. The vast amount of corruption in public life that has been unearthed in municipal, state and national public service, is proof, not of more official dishonesty than in previous years, so much as it is the evidence of a higher moral standard that is being set for official conduct. The people are unwilling longer to submit to the dishonesty and self-serving which have characterized much of our political life. This is a hopeful sign, though many politicians are slow to interpret its significance.

In the religious world there has been substantial progress in several directions. In the first place, there has been an almost complete recovery of poise and calmness after the panicky feeling which prevailed for a time over the agitation of certain biblical questions. On the one hand the critics themselves are taking a saner view of the situation and are probably modifying any expectations they may have cherished of a speedy revolution to be wrought by their theories and alleged discoveries. On the other hand, the great body of more conservative thinkers who yet think, realize that the danger of such historical criticism has been exaggerated in some minds, and that on the whole, in spite of any extreme views which may have been advanced, good rather than harm will come from these investigations.

As a result of this calmer and more judicial frame of mind, the church is preparing to grapple with the real problems which confront it, namely, the overthrow of the public evils which are entrenched in our civilization and the evangelization of our own and pagan lands. Confronting these great tasks there is a growing consciousness of self-imposed weakness resulting from our divided condition. This is the first step towards union. There has been a manifest growth in union sentiment during the past year. The wide interest in church federation, or the co-operation of evangelical churches along lines of common work, is an indication of this feeling. It is the awakening conscience of the church, demanding some manifestation of Christ-like catholicity and fraternity. It is God's Spirit moving upon the hearts of His people and drawing them closer together. Blessed are they who are not offended thereby.

Among our own churches there has been a gratifying growth in numbers and, what is more important, in the sense of moral obligation to co-operate for the spread of the gospel at home and abroad, as is manifest in the increased liberality of the churches toward all our missionary and benevolent enterprises. There has been a pronounced evangelistic spirit, which, at Detroit, took on the form of a distinct bureau or board to stimulate and systemize our evangelistic efforts. Along with this there is an increasing sense of responsibility in caring and training young converts in Christian living and Christian service.

It is pleasing to record the fact that our educational institutions have made encouraging progress during the year now closing in the way of increased endowments and better equipment. We shall do what we can to stimulate greater generosity in behalf of our schools, because their success is fundamental to the continued and permanent success of our work.

While there remains, of course, much to be done yet to bring our individual and church life into harmony with the ideals we hold before the world, there has been, on the whole, steady and substantial growth in that direction. Is it not clear, in this glance backward, that God's hand has led us? If so, we may confidently rely upon His guidance in the year to come.

A Forward Look.

No human eye is keen enough to penetrate the veil that hides the future. "We walk by faith, not by sight." But walking by faith, there are some things we can predict with reasonable certainty. Relying on the fixity of natural laws, we may safely assume the recurrence of day and night, the revolutions of the seasons, and the general continuity of all natural processes. Relying, too, on the permanency and perpetuity of moral law, and guided by what we know of human nature, it is safe to predict a continuation of the same general conditions in human society as heretofore, with a gradual upward tendency. The world moves slowly, but it does move out of darkness into light.

Under the operation of these great natural and moral laws, which run throughout God's universe, men will continue to be born and to die; there will be between birth and death all the tragedy of human struggle; victory and defeat; joy and sorrow; hope and despair; sin and its sad consequences. Human life in the year to come will be very much what it has been in the year past. These are the facts upon which we base all our plans and programs of life. The present is the child of the past, and the parent of the future. But God is the controlling factor in past, present and future. The other great factor is the human will, and on the correlation of these two factors—the divine and the human—all future progress depends.

And so, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, concluding with this number its Fortieth Volume, turns its face, undaunted, to the future. It will seek to do the coming year what it has tried to do in the two score years of its past history—to meet faithfully, and with whatever ability it can command, the new issues and the old duties as they may arise. One of the lessons we have learned in our somewhat lengthy editorial experience, is not to make too many promises for the future, nor to arrange too definite a program to be followed. The world moves too rapidly, and events follow each other in too quick succession, to foresee the subjects that will need to be treated, even a year in advance. We can only give, in general outline, a few of the things we hope to accomplish, and as for the rest, the reader must judge by the past.

It is our purpose to give considerable prominence to the subject of Christian union during the coming year. There are several reasons which seem to make this course advisable. There is danger that even among ourselves this great consummation, which was the supreme object of our fathers, may be subordinated by some to personal opinions or to doctrinal soundness. And then, the religious world is advancing in that direction. We shall seek to cultivate the spirit of unity among ourselves and with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. As we grow older, the things that separate us seem less important, and the things which unite us seem more vital. Without sacrificing, or even compromising a principle or truth that enters into our historic plea, our purpose is to give new and repeated emphasis to its breadth and catholicity, and point out that we cannot be true to it unless we meet with heartiness and sincerity, every movement of our brethren in other churches, who are feeling their way to a closer union and co-operation.

By all the signs of our times, by all of the leadings of God's providence, and by all the promptings of the Holy Spirit, we are called upon, in view of our advanced position, to exemplify a higher type of individual and church life, marked by deeper consecration, by larger liberality, by greater unity of feeling, thought and purpose, and by clearer insight into the problems of our day, and the great tasks of the church. To carry forward, during the coming year, the work of education along all these lines and others, is a task that we have laid out for the paper, hoping to call to our aid in this great work, the best thought of the best minds among us. We see a great future for the movement we represent if we respond to the divine call, and gird ourselves for the work that He would have us do.

All the old familiar departments will be kept up, with the constant effort to make them more serviceable to the churches and to our readers. We have in mind, too, a plan to make the paper specially helpful to preachers, to whom we look as leaders in every great forward movement, and whose co-operation we earnestly desire in enabling the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to fulfill its mission. Other new features will be mentioned as they are introduced from time to time.

It remains only for us to tender our unfeigned thanks to our faithful readers, who have stood by us through good report and through evil report, and have given us their unfailing confidence and support in these past years. Without their confidence and encouragement we could not have gone forward with the heavy burden of care and responsibility which comes to every editor who seeks to be true to God, and loyal to his conscience and to the highest interests of the cause he is seeking to promote. Above all, we acknowledge our debt of obligation to the Heavenly Father, whose abiding presence has cheered us in every moment of trial, and to whose gracious guidance we gladly and confidently commit ourselves and our paper for the future.

A Plea for Internal Unity.

The time has come, in our judgment, for a new crusade, if such a term may be applied in this connection, in behalf of Christian unity. The subject needs not only additional emphasis, just now, but a new kind of emphasis. It needs the emphasis of example and illustration; of practical embodiment. We must live unity, and practice unity, and manifest the spirit of unity, as well as preach unity. Our plea for Christian unity lacks the reinforcement which comes from the practical exemplification of what we are pleading for. It is, therefore, for a greater degree of unity among ourselves, that we plead in this article. This is preparatory to the large amount of emphasis we expect to give to the subject of Christian unity in its wider sense during the coming year.

It must be apparent to every careful and thoughtful observer of our current history, as that history is reflected in our religious journals, that our plea for unity is being partially neutralized by the lack of a manifested unity among ourselves. The article we republished last week from the Chicago Interior is only a sample of what a great many papers are saying, and perhaps a great many more people are thinking. These utterances may not be entirely candid, and we fear they are not, but the occasion for such utterances is found in the controversies and criticisms in our religious press, which, we believe, greatly exaggerates any actual differences among us. Why anyone who loves the cause which we represent, should take apparent delight in presenting its advocates to the world in the worst possible light, is a matter that has always been to us unaccountable. Apparently very much is written and published without any thought of its effect upon the brotherhood itself or upon those outside our ranks.

We are not speaking now of such natural and honest differences of opinion as have always existed and will always exist among any body of Christians who do their own thinking. We have long since learned that this is inevitable, and that in the long run it tends to progress and to a better knowledge of the truth. It is the spirit of controversy and of strife, the tendency to magnify these differences of opinion and to make them occasions of personal criticism and of division, which is to be deplored. We sincerely believe and hold that the people known as the Disciples of Christ have a broad and substantial basis of unity and of fraternal co-operation among themselves, and that these great unities ought to be kept to the front instead of being obscured by the undue prominence given to minor differences. There is substantial agreement among us everywhere, so far as we know, on the great verities of our religion, such as the unity and personality of God, who has revealed Himself to humanity as Father, Son and Holy Spirit; on the inspiration and authority of the Holy Scriptures; on the sinfulness of man and the universal need of spiritual renewal or regeneration; on the gospel as the power of God unto salvation; on the Church as a divine organism, having Christ for its living Head, and the Holy Spirit as its animating power and life; on the mission of the Church to spread the kingdom of God throughout the world, to bring in the reign of righteousness and of "peace on earth and good will among men." These great fundamental truths we hold in common with the evangelical religious world, and they constitute a strong bond of unity and co-operation.

In addition to the above, the Disciples of Christ stand for the restoration of the Christianity and church of the New Testament. They plead for the original confession of faith on which the church was built, for the same simple gospel, with the same conditions of salvation and church membership, for the same ordinances as they were held and practiced in the apostolic church—baptism and the Lord's Supper; and for the unity of Christendom upon this broad, catholic foundation. They repudiate the authority of human creeds and confessions of faith, as obstacles to Christian union, and deprecate the use of party names and the manifestation of party spirit, as contrary to the spirit of unity and catholicity which the New Testament breathes.

Now here is a broad basis for unity. How has it come about, then, that our religious neighbors have gained the impression that we are divided among ourselves while pleading for the unity of all Christians? Has it not grown out of the fact that some among us, losing sight of these great and fundamental things which we hold in common, have insisted that there are tremendous differences among us and have magnified mole-hills into mountains? Is this not a great weakness and a great fault among us which needs correction? Is there not a tendency on the part of some to perpetuate these controversies rather than to allay them? We could cite instances where substantial agreement has been reached after full and fair discussion, upon important, living questions, but which agreement is utterly ignored by those who, for some reason, desire to keep the brethren apart on the subject. The assumption that those who keep stirring up these controversies are sounder in the faith than others, and more zealous for the cause we plead, is absolutely without foundation, and is contradicted by all of the facts of our history.

In the language, and we trust in the very spirit in which the Apostle Paul wrote to the brethren at Corinth: "We beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment." In the same spirit, we also quote the words of the same apostle at the conclusion of his Roman letter: "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which are causing the divisions and occasions of stumbling contrary to the doctrines which we learned, and turn away from them. For they that are such, serve not our Lord Christ, but their own belly; and by their smooth and fair speech they beguile the hearts of the innocent."

We commend these apostolic beseechments to the brethren, and if in anything the spirit or teaching of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST makes for division rather than for unity, we accept fully the rebuke which these Pauline admonitions imply. Our heart's desire and prayer to God is for the closer unity of those who stand pre-eminently, in this age, for unity among the people of God, and it is from the depth of our heart that we urge this appeal upon the brethren.

There never can be a loss in a Christians' life out of which a gain may not come, as a plant from a buried seed. There never can be a sorrow out of which a blessing may not be born. There never can be a discouragement which may not be made to yield some fruit of strength.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The leading editorials for this last number of the year are written, and in type. The contributions and correspondence and news department are not only full, but running over. It remains only to write the few paragraphs which make up the Easy Chair, to close up the year's work. Aye, to close up the fortieth volume of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST! And what is more suggestive even, to the writer at least, is the completion of thirty-five years of editorial labor and responsibility. What this means, no one can fully tell who has not had a similar experience. It is impossible to write these closing lines for the year without deepest feeling. Much that crowds for utterance here, must be postponed for our Anniversary Number. We count it no small privilege to have been permitted to fill so responsible a position, in behalf of so worthy a cause, and in the fellowship of a brotherhood so loyal-hearted and true, through more than a third of a century. And when the writer stops to think how different this career has been from that which he had planned in his younger manhood, it is plain that "there is a Divinity which shapes our ends," and directs the course of our lives, above all our human plans and purposes. This is certainly true of one who commits his way unto the Lord, and earnestly seeks for divine guidance. This we have sought to do, even from boyhood, and with Paul, we may say, in profoundest humility, "By the grace of God I am what I am."

In looking back over these thirty-five years, we are painfully conscious of the limitations and imperfections which have marked the labors of these toilsome years. Every man, we suppose, who is permitted to reach the maturity of his powers, finds himself regretting that he could not have possessed, at the beginning of his work, those convictions of truth which have come to him in later years. But after all, this, perhaps, would not have been best. It is a law of the moral and spiritual universe that we reach our highest conceptions of truth through experience. We may, indeed, accept theoretically a view of religion at second hand, but such views need to be vitalized by actual experience in order to become a power in our lives. It is better for every man, and it is better for the cause which he is seeking to promote, to speak the truth as he sees the truth, rather than to give expression to sentiments which do not come out of his own thought and life. It is not difficult for us to trace the progress in our own thinking, as we consult the files of our paper and the publications in book or tract form, which have come from our pen through this period of years. We find ourselves as incapable of doubting that this growth or change in thought has been in the direction of larger truth, as we are of doubting the truth of Christianity itself. To doubt this, would be to contradict the integrity of the laws of thought and the promise of God to lead the inquiring soul into an increasing knowledge of truth and duty.

And herein lies the tragedy of life. Many a man who has seen the truth with distinctness has been "disobedient to the heavenly vision." Many another man has sought to give to others the truth which he has received from God, and in so doing has come into deeper sympathy with the tragedy of Christ's life, who, for speaking the truth, as God gave him to see the truth, was "despised and rejected of men." Let every man who asks God to give him larger views of truth, ask Him also to give him a larger measure of courage to be obedient to it, and a larger measure of patience to bear, with meekness, whatever opposition or persecution or misapprehension this course may bring upon him. Whoever has once tasted the joy that comes from the consciousness of following the voice of truth and duty, instead of being swayed by considerations of policy and personal advantage, has received a recompense, even here, that is worth more to him than the applause of the unthinking multitude. Speaking personally, we have far more reason to be grateful for the kindly reception of the truth as we have presented it, and for the kindly forbearance of those who have not seen with us, than we have for complaint at the misapprehension and opposition which every public man must expect to receive. In no other brotherhood that we know of, could we have enjoyed such freedom in Christ, such absolute liberty to utter the truth as we see it, as has been our heritage through all the vicissitudes and experiences of these thirty-five years.

On Christmas day, being in our home study all day, we took occasion to go through some of the correspondence of past years, and in doing so, we found two bundles of letters that are connected with two episodes in our life, which we shall preserve with care and transmit to our children. The letters in the first of these packages have to do with our offered resignation as editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, a few years ago, because of opposition to our editorial management of the paper from some who were then stockholders in the company. This matter was taken up by the daily press and scattered throughout the country. Letters poured in upon us from all parts of this country and some from beyond the seas, and many of them from those whom we had never met, expressing such friendship and cordial approval as any man might well appreciate as evidence of the confidence of his brethren. It was through this expression of friendly sentiment that we consented and were permitted to remain at our editorial post. The other package of letters relate to the time of our protracted illness, and are filled with expressions of friendship, sympathy and love which we shall never cease to prize. It was worth while to be misunderstood, and to be brought down near to death's gate, to receive such tokens of confidence and of brotherly love. But not in these two instances alone, but through all these care-filled years, we have received expressions of appreciation and approbation from our readers, which, together with an approving conscience, have been our chief compensation. Next to the approval of God, do we esteem the love and approbation of good men and women. We cannot but feel that these experiences of the past, whether of sorrow or of joy, have fitted us, and were designed of God to fit us, for better service to Him in the future. And so to Him and to His cause, we dedicate anew whatever of time or of strength or of ability there may remain to us until our lifework is done.

Notes and Comments.

"Why not have 'What We Stand For,' put to music and sung in our conventions?" So queries a reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The answer is that none of our musicians have shown a disposition to tackle it. We will give a suitable prize, however, to the musician who will send us the best tune to it, provided it be accepted. We will have disinterested musicians to pass on such productions as may be sent in, and the one accepted will be printed in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

An esteemed contemporary, the Central Christian Advocate, in referring to the improved fraternal relations between the Disciples of Christ and other religious people, says that the Disciples, in the past, "have been hard people to live with—a little contentious and boastful." We wouldn't wonder if there were some truth in that. We dare say, however, that this would be the almost unanimous opinion of the Roman Catholic Church concerning Martin Luther and his compeers, and of the Church of England about John Wesley. Reformers have always been "hard people to live with"—that is, "hard" for the people that needed reforming! It may be, too, that, because they are so bitterly opposed at first, they do incline to become too "contentious" in contending for the faith once for all delivered to the saints. But our Methodist contemporary testifies that all that "has softened down with time, and there are many of the leaders of this communion—preachers, educators and editors—who are the most brotherly of men." We trust this is true.

What and Where is the Church of Christ

By W. J. Russell

MY DEAR READER:—In this brief article I desire to answer the question, "What and Where is the Church of Christ?" It is a subject of great importance. It is not my church nor your church, but the Church of Christ. When Jesus said to Peter, "Upon this rock I will build my church" (Matt. 16:18), there was no church in existence in the world. The idea is original with Christ, and is, therefore, an institution of his own conception and appointment. It belongs to him by right of redemption and espousal (Eph. 5:25-27). He is, according to the prophet Isaiah, the one foundation, "a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone of sure foundation" (Isa. 28:16), and of this foundation, the apostle Paul says, "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 3:11).

The question, When did the church begin to exist? meets us at the very beginning of our inquiry. It is evident from the words of Jesus, "I will build my church," that he is looking forward to the future. He even informs his disciples that before this could be accomplished, he must suffer and die and rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name to all nations, beginning in Jerusalem. But he commanded them to tarry in Jerusalem until they should be endued with power from on high (Luke 24:46-49). This command was repeated on the day of his ascension. The disciples asked if at this time the kingdom should be restored to Israel. They were still looking forward to the fulfillment of his promise, though they had very crude conceptions of what it was to be. Complying with his directions, they returned to the city, and continued ten days, waiting for the promise of God. On the day of Pentecost, fifty days from the resurrection, the Holy Spirit came upon them, and the apostles at once began the great work to which Jesus had commissioned them (Matt. 28:18), and for which he had so completely endowed them. Peter, as representative of the twelve apostles, proceeds to lay the foundation of the church, and this he does by preaching Jesus in his life, death, resurrection, ascension and coronation as Lord and Christ, proving his assertions by their prophecies, by the eye-witnesses present, and by the supernatural manifestations which they then saw and heard. We thus have the foundation for the church.

But what about the material to build the church with? The word church means an assembly. The church is composed of men and women (1 Cor. 3:9, 16, 17; 1 Pet. 2:4, 5), who have been called out of the world. On the day of Pentecost, Peter preached to men and women—the Pentecostians.

His sermon fell on their minds and hearts with great power. They were pierced to the heart. Peter had just proved that "God had made the same Jesus whom they had crucified, both Lord and Christ." They believed it, and cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter answered them: "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit" (Acts 2:38). And you will observe, dear reader, that we hear of no one asking to be put in this spiritual structure without faith, repentance and baptism. "They that gladly received the word were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls" (Acts 2:41). After Pentecost, we hear the church spoken of as actually existing, showing most conclusively that on this day Christ fulfilled his promise to his disciples, made in the following language: "On this rock I will build my church."

Do you ask if the church has a creed? Yes, and a very simple one, not difficult to understand. The word creed comes from a Latin word which means, I believe. And the creed of the church which Jesus founded had in it but one article of faith, and that was belief in its Founder. Paul says "I know whom I have believed" (2 Tim. 1:12). The object of faith was a person. And if you have read the New Testament carefully, you certainly have been impressed with the prominence of the personal element in the teaching of Jesus (John 14:6; Matt. 11:28-30; John 10:9, 27, 28; 15:1-15). He comes not as a philosopher to reason about divine things, but as a witness to tell what he knows; and in order to be saved, we must believe this witness, follow this leader, obey this commander. Paul says: "Because if thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved; for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation" (Rom. 10:9, 10).

Not only has the church a creed, but a Book of Discipline. The New Testament is our rule of faith and practice. No necessary command was left unissued, no essential principle omitted. Peter so understood it, when he says in his second Epistle, "Grace to you and peace be multiplied in the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord; seeing that his divine power hath granted unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that called us by his own glory and virtue" (2 Peter 1:2, 3). And Paul teaches the same, when he says, "Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction, which is in righteousness; that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work" (2 Tim. 3:16).

The officary of the church consists of apostles and prophets. Added to these are evangelists, bishops and deacons. Their duties were distinct and clearly defined. The apostles gave the laws, and under the "new covenant" they are to-day our authoritative teachers of the way of salvation. The prophets were those who, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, spake the words and thoughts of God, whether relating to the past, the present, or future. The evangelists devoted their energies to preaching the revealed word, while the bishops or elders and the deacons respectively looked after the spiritual and material welfare of the churches. This order has never been changed or improved.

After the birth of the church on the day of Pentecost in Jerusalem, we read, "And the Lord added to them day by day those that were saved" (Acts 2:47). From there the apostles and disciples went out and established churches throughout the Roman Empire, wrote the New Testament, left it with the church, and thus completed and perfected it. So that we can clearly and surely say that when the last apostle died, the church was organized complete and perfect in all its parts. It had a Head, a confession of faith, a constitution and laws, a membership, an officary and a name. The Head was Jesus; the confession a personal one of a personal Saviour, "Jesus the Christ, the Son of God;" the constitution and laws, the Holy Writings; the membership, believers; the officary, elders and deacons; the name, "the Church," "The Church of God," "The Church of Christ," and the members of it were believers, brethren, saints and Christians. Paul writes of it thus: "Unto the church of God, which is at Corinth, even them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ in every place, their Lord and ours: Grace to you and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 1:2, 3).

Dear reader, this is the church for which Jesus Christ gave his life. How it must displease the Master to look upon the present divided state of Christendom. He never gave his approval for a divided church. The church he founded was a unit. And we are exhorted "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. 4:3). The apostle Paul says: "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all" (Eph. 4:3-6).

This divine organization, the Church of Christ, has triumphed over all the darkness, superstition and disloyalty of the past. There has never been a day since Pentecost when the Church of Christ was not. In every age there have been men and women who have been true to the great Head of the Church. "They have left us," says F. D. Power, "their hymns, their prayers, their confessions, the record of their experience, their struggles and sorrows and joys." They were made one by the life they lived in Christ. And Jesus says: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matt. 18:20). "In my name," that is, "in submission to my authority," is the broad distinguishing badge that Christ has given to his congregation. This is the only road that leads to the Church of Christ. The presence of Christ in his congregation is a sufficient guarantee that that congregation is his church; and the gathering of the congregation in his name is sufficient guarantee of his presence. And wherever two or three meet together, whether in the desert or the crowded city or the lonely island of the sea, if such a meeting is according to the will of Christ as expressed in the New Testament, there is the Church of Christ, and they that belong to it are members of the body of Christ.

It is a necessary conclusion, dear reader, that only those can become and continue members of the Church of Christ who obey Christ in all of his divine appointments. "He that entereth not by the door into the fold of the sheep, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber" (John 10:1). "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments" (John 14:15), says Jesus. Love to Christ clearly requires a free, voluntary and personal submission to all he commands. What is your love for Christ and his church? Have you believed on him, repented of your sins and been buried with your Lord in baptism? Are you wearing the name that honors Christ? Does his spirit, as expressed in his revealed will, influence your life to "walk worthily of the Lord unto all pleasing" (Col. 1:10). "Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they may have the right to come to the tree of life, and may enter in by the gates into the city" (Rev. 22:14).

Illustrations of Giving.

For two years two sisters in Edinburgh, one a teacher and the other a milliner, have supported a third sister, who is a missionary in Africa. They are just as much missionaries as she is.

John G. Paton's autobiography had a great sale, and in all a profit of $70,000 was coming to the author, but he gave it to the missionary society that had sent him to the New Hebrides, asking them to use it for missions in the South Seas.

A young Swede, a stable boy, went to Mexico and became wealthy. His partner asked him what he was going to do with his money. He answered: "I mean to do more for the world than the world ever did for me." He gave more than $50,000 to endow a college and hospital in the far west.

Two working girls of Providence, R. I., decided to walk one way between their homes and the factory, thus saving ten cents a day, and supporting their own native preacher at $30 a year. When they told of their plan, their faces shone as if they had just found a gold-mine.—C. E. World.

Fellowship in Giving.

By C. H. Wetherbe.

In Phil. 4:15, R. V., are these words: "And ye yourselves also know, ye Philippians, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving, but ye only." So far as I know, this is the only instance recorded in Paul's writings in which he spoke of fellowship in giving, and I regard the expression as being especially impressive and suggestive. Such fellowship, it is evident, is quite distinct from either general Christian fellowship or church fellowship; at least it was practically so in the instance which I have quoted; but ought it to be so? I think that Paul's answer would be that Christian fellowship and fellowship in giving really belong together. If the Christians who belong to a certain church be strong in all that goes to make up a spiritual character, it would seem to logically follow that each would have fellowship with the other in giving his means to the support of the church at home and the cause abroad. I regard such a thing as being both true Christian fellowship and true church fellowship, and it would be practical fellowship, if carried out. But the unpleasant fact is, there are very many churches, a large number of whose members have no fellowship with anyone in giving; they give nothing to the support of their church, and, of course, they give nothing for missions at home or abroad.

It is apparent that there were several of such churches in Paul's day, and it was a great concern of his to educate them into the fellowship of giving. All of the churches at that time were financially poor, but poverty was really no bar to their being in fellowship with one another in giving, each according to his ability; and it was largely for their own sakes that Paul wanted them to share such a fellowship. He was very poor, yet he was all the while giving most freely, and he was always very glad when others had fellowship with him in that practical grace.

There is many a church in our land to-day that is weak in spiritual power, and will continue to be so, just because a large part of the members will have no fellowship in giving.

International Justice in 1903.

By Edward Everett Hale.

The conference at Vienna, Sept. 7, the Peace Congress at Rouen, Sept. 13, the International Law Association at Antwerp, and the French and English treaty of October, are alone enough to distinguish the year 1903 in the history of arbitration.

The actual work of the Hague Tribunal is even more important. Men believe in what they see and hear. They speak contemptuously of theory, perhaps, but they bow before one accomplished fact.

Mr. Carnegie's great Palace of Peace, for which he has provided so amply at the Hague, will be of value more than can be stated. For it is fair to say that here will be the Mecca to which the world will look as the central shrine of International Justice.

The Venezuelan case was submitted to the Tribunal on the first of October. The judges selected from the whole list were Count Mouravieff, Frederic de Martens (the chief justice of Christendom), Professor Lammasch, of Austria.

The parties in controversy were Germany, Belgium, Spain, France, Great Britain, Italy, Holland, Sweden, Venezuela, and the United States. The United States was represented by William L. Penfield, Wayne MacVeagh and Herbert W. Bowen.

Here is something practical. This is not "swinging on rainbows." The men most eager about money and smoke and dust—the devotees of ashes—begin to read statements with regard to it. One finds in his newspaper the statement that the arbitration will not cost poor Venezuela ten thousand dollars. Compare this with one show of "actual warfare."

This is a very Philistine view indeed. But as all men of sense know, war is destructive to the civilization of the nations of the world, and, first of all, to the world's commerce.

Why, then, do the business men of America look with so little interest on international justice, while the business men of England and the Continent appear publicly with the most generous contributions and the most zealous public appeals? Mr. Balfour or Lord Salisbury would not have given their cordial assent to disarmament unless the bankers of the world had been behind them. Why do not our leaders of affairs show a similar interest?

The late Mr. Dodge and his immediate friend called together the Arbitration Congress of 1896 at Washington, with members from forty-five states. It expressed itself. And there was no Venezuelan war. That is what happens when men of affairs are willing to say in public that they know that International Justice can be maintained by other methods than those of war.

Religion in the Home

[In our issue of Nov. 26 we published under this head a symposium, giving the opinions of some prominent brethren. Those contributions, like the ones which are published below, were sent in answer to three questions:

1. Should the elements of worship and religious instruction in the family be blended, or separated?

2. What methods of family worship and instruction would you recommend?

3. When is the best time for family worship?—EDITOR.]

I feel incompetent to speak on the questions you propose in yours of recent date regarding family worship. My reply will hardly be worthy a place in your columns. I have not settled the problem even tentatively for myself, and shall watch your treatment of it with the interest of a learner.

1. Should think the best worship would be the richer, and beget the more a truer spiritual interest by being blended with instruction.

2. A systematic reading of some portion of Scripture and comments and application by the head of the house, or if incompetence prevents that, a use of some selected work in connection with the reading.

3. Experience and observation are not conclusive with me in regard to this question, but should advocate the moments immediately following the morning meal if at all possible.

Eureka, Ill.

A. W. TAYLOR.

As a boy we had family worship in the home every morning. I remember with sincere satisfaction this religious habit. Its influence on the life of the child is lasting.

1. In reply to question first, I would prefer the religious instruction as a part of the worship. The two are intimately associated. The prayer and the Bible become blended in the thought of the child. In reading the book in later years, the devotional atmosphere will be retained.

2. For families not accustomed to religious exercises, I would suggest as a beginning the reading of a portion of Scripture as the household is seated at the table, followed by thanks for the morning meal. Later, the simple expression of thanksgiving could be followed by a longer prayer. But the habit of daily Bible-reading would be worth much.

3. I think the morning hour best adapted for the family worship. It is good to begin the day—with its responsibilities before us—with prayer for God's blessing to rest upon our endeavors.

It seems to me that, if we do not have as a custom family worship, some helpful reading—reminding us of duty and God and our blessings—could be made most helpful and inspiring.

E. L. POWELL.

1. I would suggest, that in most families, I think it would be best to combine Bible-study with the devotional service. Taking some book in the New Testament and studying it consecutively by question and suggestion, call the attention of the family to its leading thoughts.

2. After reading the lesson and talks concerning its contents, a short prayer, then close with singing some appropriate song. In this service, it would be quite helpful to have each member that can read take the lead alternately, especially in the reading and the prayer.

3. The best hour for family devotion depends upon the habit of the family. The hour selected should be one when the family can all be present. With some, this would be at the morning meal. With others the usual hour of retiring would be best. When the children are small the evening hour should be placed before the children get sleepy. For the memory of father's and mother's prayers go with us through life and often prove a strength to the child, long after the tongues that uttered them are silent in death. The saddest thought is that too many children, of professedly Christian parents, never have heard father or mother pray; some never heard them even return thanks at the family table.

Permit me to commend most heartily your endeavor to restore family worship and religious instruction in the home. This is a piece of constructive work which ought to serve as an example to other church papers. Answering your queries:

1. I think it would be inexpedient to attempt instruction in connection with the worship, for the reason that the worship should be brief, as it will be of necessity in homes unaccustomed to the exercise. A few minutes of worship, thoroughly spiritual, each day, with an hour of general religious instruction each week, supplemented by such personal study on the part of all as is possible, would be better.

2. No one method can be applicable to all families, or remain potent long in one family. Methods of conducting the worship should be frequently changed. Different members of the circle should assume leadership. Reciting some of the psalms, the Lord's Prayer, or other devotional passages in concert, or by individuals, in addition to the regular reading, is possible to every family. Sentence prayers would remove much of the embarrassment and pave the way for better leadership.

3. As all well regulated families should appear together at the breakfast hour at least, just before or after the meal is an available time. This begins the day aright, and the mind and heart are presenting God the best. Any family in earnest will find a convenient time. Personally, I prefer immediately after the meal.

St. Louis.

HOWARD T. CREE.

My preference is that the religious study and worship should be blended—freed from any class, stilted or "go-to-meeting" style, that has been one cause of the neglect of the "family altar;" that the lesson for the day should be short, simple, adapted to the needs of the home, selected in advance by appointment, dressed occasionally by pointed and effective illustration, enhanced by application. It is difficult to set and keep a special time for study of the Word by the whole family, owing to the varied and changing demands of the time—hence best blend the instruction and the worship.

Let the method be varied lest it become monotonous and tame, another reason for the disregard of family worship.

I have found a week with Psalms for readings, a week with Parables of Jesus, another with Paul's words, one week on Bible prayers and their answers, and another, "Sayings of the Great Men of the Bible," to be a spicy and helpful method.

The preparation on the Lord's day preceding the week in which the readings are to be used becomes a helpful Lord's day exercise. Random, "anywhere-you-open-your-Bible" method has little in it.

The prayer by one, or, if all engage, a sentence of thanksgiving and praise, especial blessing for home, individual help, for your church, your city, your state, your nation, all needed reforms, missionary work, only let it be a prayer, not oration, but a sweet face-to-face trysting-time with Jesus.

How important as to the selection of the time! The morning hurry, the absence of many at the noon hour, forbid and hinder the best results at these hours. What time better than the evening meal, while still at the table, "supper being ended," father or the leader says, "Let us hear what Jesus says, or Paul, or David," etc., he reading or the family reading in turn. After any comment or conversation on the lesson from God's Word, still seated at the table, how easy to say, "Let us talk to God just a moment at the close of this day," and with bowed heads they pray. Only now and then when the lesson and the service and the whole occasion has led up to "deep things stirred in the soul," would I ask that all kneel, unless all are committed to Christ.

Simplicity, brevity, definiteness should mark every service. It should never become a mere form, the going through a role. Let it be approached as the happiest of privileges, whose simplicity and brevity frees it from becoming a dreaded, formal, distasteful service.

Some Needs of the New Year

By F. D. Power

The world expects more from the followers of Christ than from others. Heaven looks for more. Eternity demands more. "What do ye more than others?" "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." That Christians may advance more and more in all beauty of life and nobleness of service they must all the time be aspiring after better things, forgetting the things that are behind, reaching forth unto the things that are before. As the work before us in the year 1904 is the same as the work before us last year, and the year before last, and twenty years ago—only it has grown greater—the calls are for greater consecration and effort, and our very success in the past compels us to higher resolves and severer undertakings. I speak of the needs of the average church.

We need every member of the body present on the Lord's day, unless providentially hindered. What a deep interest and enthusiasm would be imparted to our Sunday morning and evening services with the whole membership crowding the house of worship! How easy would become the task of converting sinners to Christ with such a public testimony on the part of the whole church to the power and blessedness of the religion of Christ! Why, the influence would go out into all the city, and farther and farther, until it touched all the land. One church, one single Gideon's band of believers thus fired with a holy enthusiasm for God and humanity would be irresistible. And is it too much to ask that every pledged Disciple of Christ should be at his post Sunday morning and Sunday evening as well?

Another need is a universal quickening in the matter of Bible study. It would be an interesting revelation to know how many in the average church read the Bible daily, how many weekly, how many in their families. A show of hands on a Sunday morning might not be encouraging. Blessed is the man whose "delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night." Bible-reading Christians make Bible-walking Christians. We will not excuse ourselves lightly from the assembly of the saints, from the Lord's table, from the prayer-meeting, from the contribution of our means to the support of the Gospel, if we read our Bibles. The Lord has more light and truth yet to break forth out of his holy Word. As thousands upon thousands of stars burst upon your view as you gaze into the January heavens, where only a few appeared at first, so a thousand thousand unknown gems will reward the faithful student of the Book of book. Is it too much to ask of any congregation of Christians that they suffer not one day of the coming three hundred and sixty-six to pass without fixing eyes and heart upon some page of God's precious word?

Still another need: more prayer. A prayerful people will bring all heaven and earth to their aid. A praying man must become a God-like man. "Prayer and pains through faith in Jesus Christ can do anything," said John Eliot at the close of his Indian grammar, the man who gave the Indians the Bible in their own barbarous tongue. Five hundred praying men and women in any city—what can they not accomplish? "Men ought always to pray and not to faint." "Pray without ceasing." "Praying always with all prayer." "In everything, by prayer and supplication, make known your wants unto God." Who have been the great men of God? Praying men. David, who said: "Evening, morning, and at night, he shall hear my voice;" Daniel, who "kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks;" Cornelius, a devout man, "who prayed to God always;" Paul, who prayed night and day exceedingly; Luther and Melancthon, who gave themselves daily to prayer; Baxter, who stained his study walls with praying breath, Wesley and Whitfield and Judson, who were giants of the closet. The church began in a prayer-meeting, and prayer has preceded the outpouring of God's blessing in all the great revivals of religion. We must rely upon God. We must, by prayer and supplication, make known our wants unto him. We should seek his throne of grace in our closets and by our firesides. We should fill to overflowing the prayer-meetings of our young people, and the weekly prayer-meetings of the church. Is it too much to ask for a revival of this communion with God in the hearts of all believers, that they remember their pastors, that they remember each other, that prayer be made for all men?

More work among the children is another need. Sunday-schools and mission-schools claim our special care. How large a number of our best educated Christians come in through the school! How the children should crowd the church of God! Parents should see to it that their little ones are in place on the Lord's day, and every member of the church should be in hearty touch with the teachers and all workers for childhood. We want the children that are learning nothing about Christ in their homes, poor children, neglected children, ignorant, ragged, uncivilized children. We should crowd our Sunday-schools with them to teach them the gospel, as we crowd our preaching services with the people to hear the Word of God. The hope of the church is in the children. We have no future if we have not the children. We should know the children, civilize, Christianize, disciple, graduate, save the children. Should not the whole church be enlisted in this service for childhood?

Further, we need more general participation in the contributions for the support of the work. Many do there whole duty in this respect; others, but little; a goodly number, nothing, as we have people who are "in the Lord," people who "labor in the Lord," and people who "labor much in the Lord." Every disciple should esteem it but a reasonable service to share with his brethren and give cheerfully of his means as God hath prospered him. Why should I pay your church bills any more than your grocer's bills? Nobody would be burdened if all would do something and be regular and systematic about it. Deficiencies come because of neglect on the part of many to do the small service the Lord asks at their hands. As all share in the privileges of the church, all should take part in bearing its obligations, and because your offering is necessarily small, it is no less your solemn duty to render it to your Lord. Is it safe to follow the example of the man with the one talent? Is it right to rob God even of a single penny?

Again, more earnest effort for the salvation of souls is a need of the hour. So many Christians never push their religion upon others. Doors of opportunity open every day on every side, but we do not enter. A poor man watched a thousand years before the gate of Paradise, then while he snatched one little nap it opened and shut, but here is a gate always swung wide. "Let him that heareth say, Come." You are not only to come at the call of God yourself, but turn to every man in hearing and say, "Come." We get this figure from the caravan crossing the desert. Water is out and the whole caravan perishing. Now they send one man on ahead; in five minutes another, then another, and another. They keep just within hallooing distance of each other. When the head man finds the oasis he cries back: "Water, come!" The next man catches up the words and passes them on and down the line until they are shouted in the ear of the caravan, and they all with quickened speed make their way to the oasis. God shouted it from the throne. Angels caught it and brought it to earth. Apostles pass it to the church; and the church to the world; and every last convert is to take it up and pass it along the line, "Come!" Come, ye thirsty, drink of the water of life! Come, ye famishing, and eat of the bread of life! Come, ye weary, and rest! Come!

NEW YEAR'S MESSAGES

Christ in the Home.

Turning from 1903 crowned with victory, to 1904 pregnant with possibilities, our prayerful purpose is to make for Christ a larger place in the life of to-day. Our motto is: Make Christ a welcome guest in every home. This means more Bible study, religious conversation and prayer. It means the removal of many things now cherished or permitted that are distasteful to him. Christ in the home makes it a perennial fountain of instruction, inspiration, love and joy, nourishing those within and overflowing to the enrichment of those without.

We have never seen a better day, but we thank God and press forward to still higher things. E. M. SMITH.

New Year's Greeting.

The old year is dead and "icy winds have made for him a bed of white repose." We plant another milestone on which is inscribed, "So much nearer the goal to which we press with eager feet till we reach the end and receive the crown." Thoughtful minds grow richer with the passing years. These give an experience that angels might covet. Along our pathway shines a light that grows brighter and brighter till the perfect day. The opening year will be the best that the world has ever seen. It will bring to receptive hearts larger hope, stronger faith, wider sympathy and richer joy.

"There is no hopeless sorrow;
Wrong ever builds a tottering throne,
And Christ shall reign to-morrow."

Life in Death.

What a wonderful world we live in, a world constantly dying, yet ceaselessly awaking to fuller and completer life! The true man is a miniature of the true world. He has losses, defeats, death; but his losses become the means of achieving success; his defeats he transforms into victories, and for him death is the gateway to life.

The old year is done. The germs of life are already springing anew in the heart of nature. The coldness and death of winter are but a matrix for the flowers and the wheat and the corn. And so we pray:

Oh God, we, too, are dead, but we long for life. Thou dost quicken all things. Send forth thy Spirit into our hearts, that we may become new creatures in Christ Jesus, the Redeemer. Amen. CARLOS C. ROWLISON.

The Luxury of Life.

When more than eighty years of age, the celebrated artist, Corot, remarked to a friend, "My first waking sensation in the morning is the glad thought, 'To-day I am going to paint.' What happiness!"

To the devout child of God, there comes at the beginning of the new year, a feeling akin to that of Corot, but surely more intense and more profoundly significant: "This year I am going forth hand in hand with my Father; I shall have his love and guidance; I am to be a co-laborer with him; by his grace I shall contribute something to the triumph of the kingdom. Heaven will be nearer to some hearts, and God more precious to his children. What a luxury! Praise God for this unspeakable privilege.

The Old and the New.

A few more days and the year 1903 will be buried in the grave of the past. Life has been compared to a decaying stairway. Each day a step, and the moment the foot touches it, it begins to decay beneath the tread.

Anything dropped can never be recovered, as it is impossible to go back to the step that is gone. A thorn or a rose goes down with the step on which it is dropped. So with a kind or an unkind word. We may apologize for them, but they can never be taken back.

The future skies are as bright as the promises of God. One glance ahead will show us that the coming year is full of promise. All future life will be richer and better because of what will happen next year. May our motto for the coming year be, Appreciation, sunshine, reverence.

A Foreword to the New Year.

About to turn to the pages of a new year, let us look for a foreword to its possible contents.

What in the past year's life is most worth while? How shall we sum up the results of its endeavor? One should desire to close a year as he would his life. At the end of his career St. Paul's sustained note of conscious victory rings in this, "I have kept the faith." Have we kept it this year? Have we now a faith worth keeping another year—all years?

If the past year's experiences, prayers and study have brought such light, interpretation and appreciation that "the faith" is dearer and truer, then the exhortation to Timothy, "Keep that which is committed to thee," will be a sufficient foreword for the dawning year. So shall we enter upon its experiences as Wordsworth says we enter life:

"Not in entire forgetfulness
And not in utter nakedness,
But trailing clouds of glory
Do we come ———."

Decatur, Ill.

F. W. BURNHAM.

The Old and the New.

We utter a tender farewell to the old year. It has had its joys, its sorrows, and its sins. Let us trust that its experiences have been working together through the months for our good. It is ours now to turn our faces steadfastly to the front and bravely forget, except when to remember is to be made stronger for the duties of the new year. What toils and trials and tribulations await us, are kindly hid from our view. For some of us this may be the last year. It may supply the grace that will perfect character, it may herald the task that will complete the record of duty, or lay upon us the cross that will bear us surely down. But we step upon the threshold with a mighty faith in God. If He go before us, all is well. Forgetting, remembering, resolving, believing, hoping, loving, let us press on toward the goal, making this a year of earnest endeavor and of simple trust in God.

THREE REASONS

Each With 2 Legs and 10 Fingers.

A Boston woman who is a fond mother writes an amusing article about her experience feeding her boys.

Among other things she says: "Three chubby, rosy-cheeked boys, Bob, Jack and Dick, aged 6, 4, and 2 years respectively are three of our reasons for using and recommending the food, Grape-Nuts, for these youngsters have been fed on Grape-Nuts since infancy, and often between meals when other children would have been given candy.

"I gave a package of Grape-Nuts to a neighbor whose 3 year old child was a weakened little thing ill half the time. The little tot ate the Grape-Nuts and cream greedily and the mother continued the good work and it was not long before a truly wonderful change manifested itself in the child's face and body. The results were remarkable, even for Grape-Nuts.

"Both wife and I use Grape-Nuts every day and keep strong and well and have three of the finest, healthiest boys you can find in a day's march." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Many mothers instead of destroying the children's stomachs with candy and cake give the youngsters a handful of Grape-Nuts when they are begging for something in the way of sweets. The result is soon shown in greatly increased health, strength and mental activity.

There's a reason.

The Priesthood of Melchisedec.

By James O. Carson.

There is little said in the Scriptures respecting the man Melchisedec, or of the order of priesthood that bears his name, but the little that has been said, is, we think, interesting and suggestive. It seems strange that although this order of priesthood had been always in existence, no mention had been made of it until this particular time when Abraham, the "friend of God," was returning from the slaughter of the kings and laden with spoils obtained in the exercise of the principle that might is right, that so universally obtained at that time, among the tribal rulers of the country, and also that this order outranks all others.

The first thing we note in this extraordinary and pregnant narrative is, that the man who occupied the position of priest in this "order" of priesthood was engaged in the secular affairs of life. He was a king who ruled over a district of country which was divided among numerous tribes, each of which was ruled over by a king and was, in fact, when taken as a whole, a miniature world. We note further that the position of this man in the world, being purely secular, it will be seen that such position is not inconsistent with the office of priest in this order. Then again we note that the principles of the government of King Melchisedec were "righteousness and peace." This was in direct antagonism to the principle that "might is right," that universally obtained among the people and tribal rulers in that miniature world. And again, that this man is the first in history to teach and exemplify the principle of "right against might" in the government of men; and that he did this under direct appointment of God, and at a time when the reverse principle held universal sway.

Let us now, as best we can, consider this extraordinary order of priesthood. We are told in the record concerning it, that it existed always, and will so continue, being "without beginning of days or end of years;" that it takes precedence in rank above all others; that it is the priesthood of "the most high God," and that no one can occupy the position of priest in this order except by direct appointment of God. These are extraordinary facts, and, we think, significant and instructive. In the family order of priesthood, a man became a priest by virtue of his being the head of a family; in the Levitical order, by virtue of being of the tribe of Levi, and in the Melchisedec order, by direct appointment of God. In the order of Levi, the duty of the priest was "to minister for men in things pertaining to God, in offering sacrifices, etc.," a purely religious or sacred function; in the Melchisedec order, to minister for God in things pertaining to men, and the special duties or work to be done are not designated, as is the case in the Levitical order. Neither is the class of men named from among whom a priest might be taken, but the selection of each individual priest is made by God himself.

Taking, then, the selection of Melchisedec as indicative of the nature and purpose of this order of priesthood, we are justified, we think, in concluding that the priesthood known as "the order of Melchisedec," is a special order, independent of all others, and designed to inaugurate or execute some certain special purpose of God; that to this end he selects from among men one especially qualified for the work to be done, regardless of class, and perhaps of conditions. Thus, in the time of Melchisedec, the time had come when the principle of the rule of life, governmental and social, that might is right, and that universally prevailed at that time, should be changed, and that to this end, God selected this man and king to inaugurate this work; that he established a government among these tribal rulers, based on the principles of "righteousness and peace," and placed this man over it to inaugurate the reform. As the ages moved on, and the "things" which, in the beginning had been created, were being developed, other men were chosen to officiate in this order of priesthood for special work, and so the great work of constructing the universe out of the "things that had been made," was carried forward until "the fullness of time" had come when the great work of God must be completed, and Jesus of Nazareth was "chosen of God" a priest in the order of Melchisedec to inaugurate and finish the work which was given him to do, i. e., to devise and execute a plan for the redemption of man from the dominion of sin, and save him from its consequences. This work he accomplished. "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do;" and for this, he was made "high priest forever," in the order of the priesthood of "God most high," and crowned with glory and honor, at his own right hand, from whence he is carrying forward the great work.

A Prayer.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

I care not for the power to see
My way complete;
I would not know what storms shall o'er
My frail life beat;
I would but see what dangers cross
My present way;
I would but know what trials tempt
Each passing day!
I would not ask for strength to bear
The woes of years,
To strive against the conflicts sore,
The aches and tears;
I ask but strength still to endure,
With Thee my stay,
The conflicts, trying heart and soul,
Each passing day!

CAN "GO" NOW

Was Formerly Robbed of her Energy by Coffee.

The wife of a Virginia clergyman tells her coffee story thus: "One year ago I was a wreck, only able to be up a part of the time and dragging myself around the house.

"My skin looked like a dead hickory leaf, no appetite, weight 112 pounds, no energy, and I suffered most of the time with most dreadful headaches or nervous chills or spasms, and could not bear the least excitement.

"At one time my left hand was drawn to my shoulder, and for nine days could not be moved away, and I had often laid for six or eight weeks under the care of our best physicians. I had been like this for six years, and it seemed a cure could not be effected, and I could get only temporary relief. My case was pronounced nervousness, but that was as far as we could get.

"All this time I had been a slave to coffee, thought I could not live without drinking three to five cups a day, although my husband used to beg me to give it up and give Postum a trial. But I always put him off with, 'O, I don't think I'll like it, it will do me no good.'

"He was so persistent I finally decided to try Postum, although I thought the very idea of a good coffee made from cereals was absurd.

"At first I did not like it so very well, but soon found it was not boiled long enough to make it good; after a few days the terrible headaches disappeared and I felt so full of energy I was astonished. I grew to love Postum and have used it continually since then, and words can never express the good it has done me.

"I never know what it is to have a headache, have not had a nervous attack for eleven months, now weigh 142 1-2, my complexion is clear and my friends say I never looked so well. I do not suffer a day's sickness and can do all my housework. Just think, that for six years I spent more than half my time in bed, never able to keep up more than a few days at a time, and all that suffering came from coffee.

"My restored health seems to me almost miraculous, but I know there is nothing miraculous about it, just common sense from giving up coffee and giving Postum a fair trial, and I don't hesitate to tell my friends all about it.

"I have a baby girl two years old who for the past year has used Postum in her bottle instead of milk. She is a large, healthy child, and if we give her milk she will hand it back and cry for Postum. My husband also has been greatly benefited by Postum, and nowadays we never have coffee in our house, but you will always find plenty of Postum in the pantry." News From Many Fields

Florida.

J. P. Rowilson, of Macon, Ga., has taken up the Tampa work, commencing the first Sunday in December. As Brother and Sister Rowilson passed through Jacksonville they were given a reception by the First Church. Tampa is a needy and important place, and Brother Rowilson has a hard work before him. Both the Church Extension and A. C. M. S., are helping in that work.

F. J. Longdon, Jr., and wife recently returned to DeLand. They went to Pittsburg some months ago on account of Sister Longdon's health, and for some time both were very ill in a hospital there. We welcome them back to Florida, and it is expected that Brother Longdon will again take up the state work in the eastern section.

T. A. Cox, of Princeton, Ind., is expected the first of the year to look after the western and central section.

J. C. McReynolds, of Asheville, N. C., commenced with the Daytona church the middle of September, and the work there shows progress.

Eustis has secured a minister, but we have not learned his name.

With these new and capable men in Florida, we feel that we are prepared to press forward as we never have before, and we hope that they may remain permanently and that we may be able to add many more. There is a great future for our people in Florida, but the work now is very difficult.

Jacksonville, Fla.

Indian Territory.

Many of our churches in the territory are taking on new life, in fact in all of our churches where we have regular preaching there is unusual activity.

The church at Vinita is in a good meeting with home forces. Brother Randolph Cook is the pastor. This congregation has done great work the last 15 months.

The churches at Purcell, with Bro. C. E. Chambers as pastor, at Pryor Creek, Bro. F. H. Groom as pastor, Wagoner, Bro. J. B. Askew pastor, South McAlester, I. N. Teel pastor, Sapulpa, H. A. Moore pastor, Holdenville, Bro. J. L. Crain pastor, Hartshorn and Haleyville with W. O. Breeden pastor, Chickasha with Brother Boon, late of Texas, pastor, Ardmore, J. C. Read pastor, Checotah and Atoka, Bro. J. C. Howel pastor. Brother Crain divides his time between the church at Holdenville and Ada. All these churches are having frequent additions and increased life.

Bro. W. T. McConnell, of Holdenville, our banker preacher, is about giving up his business and going back into the ministry. He is one of our best men, and loves the cause of the Master better than he does the wealth of the world.

Lately we have added to the ministry in the Indian Territory, Bro. E. S. Allhands. He has taken the work at Tishomingo and Roff, both good towns, and should do a good work.

An organization has just been made at Poteau of 28. This congregation was very fortunate in that it had a house all ready to go into, built and furnished. It was the gift, mostly of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. McKenna. Brother McKenna is of another fellowship, but a good man, and gladly joined his wife in this splendid gift to the church. Sister McKenna had long been a member of the congregation at Ft. Smith, Ark.

In the east part of the Indian Territory, we have a great many congregations, but few of them have any sympathy with our organized work in the church. But we are glad to say that as individuals and as churches they are being won to the thought of a better way and life. Some day we hope to see it entirely worked out. Last year we were able to see the number of pastors in the Indian Territory raised from three to twenty-one. We can not hope to see the proportionate growth this year we did the last, but we are expecting a great growth. Many places are asking for organizations and preachers, but without any prospect of maintaining them we feel that it is not wise to open so many new fields. But as fast as we can we will enter these new places. Now is the time. One dollar now will do more than five in three years from now. Now is the time to take this country for Christ.

G. T. BLACK.

I have resigned my work here and after the first of the new year will be open to engagements as an evangelist or pastor. Since I came here a year ago, we have built up a very strong church, and I have learned to love many here whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life. We have had 64 additions by baptism and fourteen by letter and statement. Seated the church with new pews and raised the church debt to $300, and collected the minister's salary and have had fellowship with all our missionary enterprises. We had never had a pastor for all his time before I came here. We have had two additions at the morning services for the following three Sundays past, and one by baptism last night at prayer-meeting.

The Indian Territory has no corresponding secretary now and the board is seeking the services of one to fill that vacancy. G. T. Black, former corresponding secretary, offered his resignation at the last meeting of the Territorial Board, and it was accepted after some deliberations. Brother Black has done some good work here and many will regret that he will be lost to our work, if he decides to leave the Indian Territory. Our board will meet at Muskogee, Thursday, Dec. 30, to engage a corresponding secretary. I. H. Teel, of South McAlester, should be written in regard to the matter. The work pays a salary of $1,200 a year.

The meeting of the Ministerial Association, of the Indian Territory, was a flattering success. We were glad to have Brother Munro, corresponding secretary of Oklahoma, with us. J. B. Boen, of Oklahoma City, Okla., was with us also.

Illinois.

Harristown, just west of Decatur, in Mason county, is one of the best churches of the state. It is comparatively a country community of honest, intelligent, industrious people. Perhaps no place has so generally patronized Eureka College nor been more blest by it. It was the writer's first pastorate for five years after leaving college. Some others who have served the church are G. M. Goode, J. H. Gilliland and J. P. McKnight. The first generation of church members are all gone, but their successors are worthy sons of noble sires. The daughters raised in this favored spot are such women as Mrs. R. A. Gilcrest, wife of the able teacher and minister. Mrs. J. P. Darst, wife of the treasurer of the Illinois State Missionary Board for many years, and Mrs. I. N. McCash, Des Moines, Ia., and others. The church has, as a rule, saved its children to the cause of Christ and made them strong, useful, Christian people. Bro. W. H. Harding is just beginning, very acceptably, what we hope may prove a long and profitable pastorate.

Niantic, seven miles further west, is another splendid church. It has recently remodeled its house of worship, making it modern, convenient and beautiful. This church also is a helper with us in the gospel of Christian education. Prof. R. A. Gilcrest, their able and acceptable minister, is in sympathy with all the great enterprises of the church.

Illipolis, still nearer Springfield, has a strong membership of excellent people. Bro. A. M. Hote is their enterprising pastor, with whom there seems to be perfect concord and happy co-operation. All departments of the church seem to be prospering. Our great Sunday-school evangelist, K. P. Taylor, recently held an institute for the church, during which there were some fifteen additions. If your Sunday-school interests are a little weak, call Brother Taylor to help you.

Taylorville is another strong church, much stronger than it knows. It has been without a minister for some time, but is happy in anticipation of the coming of Bro. A. Moore, of Missouri, the first of the year.

This is the home of Sister Cordelia Hoover, who has just completed a beautiful parsonage for the church and some repairs on the church, all at the cost of near $5,000. Such a noble service is doubtless greatly appreciated by the church and will be honored of God. This is not the only good thing that she is doing and proposes to do to advance the interests of the kingdom of God. May the Lord bless her offerings and make them fruitful to many souls and return rich blessings to her and her household.

Blue Mound has another noble band of Christians. Our strong, active, genial H. J. Hostettler ministers for them. They have in mind and are making their plans to build a much needed house of worship next summer. This will require large liberality, but only about one house is built by each generation, so by concentrating their life-time offering to this end, they will be able to leave a delightful church home for their children and a worthy monument to themselves.

By the way, in closing, is not larger liberality to the various claims of the religion of Christ the great need of our churches? It is so easy to say, "No." We build fine houses, buy more land, etc., but how little do we plan to promote the kingdom of God. A college that has stood for righteousness and Christian education for 50 years, which has trained an army of royal men and women for the Lord's service, and which desires to enlarge its great work, should meet a happy and liberal response from everyone whom the Lord has blest with means. Many do, for which we are grateful. May the Lord bless them and multiply their number.

Kentucky.

A Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to all readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Joseph Severance has declined the call to Middlesboro, and will remain with the church at Newton.

M. D. Clubb, for several years past, financial secretary of the College of the Bible, with headquarters at Midway, left with his family Dec. 18, for Watsonville, Calif., where he recently accepted a call to the church at that place. We regret exceedingly to see him leave "old Kaintuck." May God richly bless him in his new field.

Fourteen students from the College of the Bible will spend the Christmas holidays in evangelistic work in eastern Kentucky, where they did such excellent work during last summer.

We are glad to hear that the First Church at Covington, where Geo. A. Miller has done such valiant service for the past ten years, has refused to consider his resignation. We cannot afford to lose such men from our state. Brother Miller expects to leave soon for a trip of several months in the Holy Land.

Kentucky loses one of her best preachers in the removal of J. J. Haley from Cynthiana to Richmond, Va., where he begins work with the Seventh Street Church, the first of next year. We congratulate our Virginia brethren upon being able to secure his services.

While we regret to see Brother Haley leave Kentucky, we rejoice to know that his place at Cynthiana has been filled by such a man as W. E. Ellis, of Nashville. We are glad to welcome Brother Ellis back to Kentucky.

We have had 24 additions here at Midway at our regular services within the past month, 22 by confession and baptism, and two by letter.

Foreign mission rallies will be held in the following Kentucky churches next month, viz.: Mayfield, Jan. 20; Louisville, First Church, Jan. 21; and Lexington, Jan. 22.

W. M. Baker has resigned at Glasgow to accept a call to Meridian, Miss. We regret to lose him from our forces in Kentucky. He has done a splendid work at Glasgow.

Milo Atkinson, of Petersburg, has declined a flattering call to another state and will remain at Petersburg the coming year. He will give half time to the church at Bullittsville. He recently closed a good meeting with home forces at Petersburg with five additions and also a twelve days' meeting at Bellview, Boone Co., with 13 additions.

Harvey B. Smith has resigned at Sulphur and New Castle to accept a call to Princeton, where he is already at work.

A. T. Felix will divide his time equally next year at Bardstown and Springfield.

Ernest W. Elliott, of Eminence, has returned from Athens, Ala., where he recently held a splendid meeting.

L. B. Haskins has accepted a call to Erlanger, where he will begin his work Jan. 1.

Indiana Notes.

About three years ago the Central Church, Terre Haute, under the leadership of L. E. Sellers, pastor, planted a Sunday-school mission in the northeastern part of the city, on Maple Avenue. In a few months the nucleus of a church was formed. Last spring John M. Cross came and preached in a hall, resulting in 68 additions to the number already belonging. Work on a new building was begun at once, and last Lord's day, the 13th, the writer had the pleasure of participating in the dedication. The day was extremely cold, but the services were marked by the greatest interest. During the day $1,100 was raised, which provides for all obligations, together with furnishing the house. To L. E. Sellers and the Central Church are due the initial steps in establishing the Third Christian Church of Terre Haute; and to John M. Cross and the faithful band on Maple Avenue is due the credit of holding the meetings, the second of which has just closed, and building the house. Last Lord's day was a great day for the Disciples of Terre Haute.

Many of our churches are still working on the November offering. Many are promising an early completion and remittance of the offering. Brethren, it is needed. Calls for six months of evangelistic work have come in by the mail to-day. One of them is from Petersburg, a county-seat, with two railroads, and rapidly gaining, in which we have no church. Don't let any church in the state fail to send something.

The Sunday-schools will, many of them, observe Rally Day in connection with Christmas. That will be good. But don't mix the state money from the churches and the home money from the Sunday-schools. The first is sent to W. E. M. Hackleman, Indianapolis, and the latter to Bro. Benj. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati. But be sure and send it. That is the main thing. Every cent, and a great deal more, is needed.

Texas.

From the statement made by W. A. Baldwin, corresponding secretary of the state of Nebraska, in CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Dec. 3, we learn that the states of Kansas, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska have a population aggregating 8,000,000, and that in these states the Disciples number, in round numbers, 300,000, having 2,700 churches with 1,500 preachers, and that these four states, through their state secretaries and respective mission boards, did state mission work last year aggregating as follows:

Missionaries employed, 88; additions through these missionaries, 4,320; baptisms through these missionaries, 2,523; churches organized, 28; money raised for state missions, $22,600.

Now for the encouragement of Texas Disciples, let us compare the work done through the Texas Mission Board for the same time:

All Stuffed Up

That's the condition of many sufferers from catarrh, especially in the morning. Great difficulty is experienced in clearing the head and throat.

No wonder catarrh causes headache, impairs the taste, smell and hearing, pollutes the breath, deranges the stomach and affects the appetite.

To cure catarrh, treatment must be constitutional—alterative and tonic.

"I was afflicted with catarrh. I took medicines of different kinds, giving each a fair trial; but gradually grew worse until I could hardly hear, taste or smell. I then concluded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after taking five bottles I was cured and have not had any return of the disease since." EUGENE FORBES, Lebanon, Kan.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Cures catarrh—it soothes and strengthens the mucous membrane and builds up the whole system.

Texas has a population of 3,000,000, and the Disciples number, in round numbers, 90,000, having 700 churches with 450 preachers. Missionaries employed, 36; additions through these missionaries, 4,059; baptisms through these missionaries, 1,898; churches organized through these missionaries, 35; money raised for state missions, $20,902.10.

Again, let it be taken into consideration that out of the 90,000 members in the state of Texas, not over half of them are in substantial sympathy with co-operative mission work, and that fully half of the 700 churches are very bitterly opposed to co-operative work under the auspices of a state mission board, and we could then partially figure the results if all were in perfect harmony as regards the methods of mission work.

But the above comparison not only shows the enthusiasm and the liberality of the Disciples aiding in state mission work, but it clearly shows Texas to be the ripest mission field in America, and that no section of country can produce better results and pay larger dividends in proportion to the amount invested. This comparison is not made to show that Texas has better evangelists, and more efficient, than those of the four states named (for I presume such is not the case), but to show the fertility of the soil being cultivated by Texas evangelists under our state mission board.

If we had, in proportion to the population of the four states named, as many churches and as many preachers—all in substantial sympathy with our state work, as doubtless they are with their state work—Texas would stand in the lead within less than fifteen years; and considering the greatness of the territory with its great resources and great immigration, and the liberality and enthusiasm of the Disciples, together with the efficiency of our mission board and the executive ability of our corresponding secretary, we are hopeful of overcoming all opposition and pushing to the front in the near future. Washington State News.

The Central Church of Spokane dedicated their magnificent new church on December 6. Twelve thousand dollars in cash and pledges was raised at that time. The membership have given liberally and worked loyally with their pastor, B. E. Utz, and as a result they are now enjoying the finest church house of any of our churches in the northwest.

The Dean Avenue Church, Spokane, is prospering under the able ministry of J. W. Allen, brother of Dr. J. M. Allen, who has been prominently connected with the churches of Spokane for many years. Dr. Allen still lives in Spokane and does evangelistic and missionary work.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, of the Evangelistic Board of the Presbyterian Church, is making a tour of the coast in the interest of that work. He is stirring the Presbyterian churches by clear presentation of the first part of the great commission. He is a very pleasing speaker and uses the art of illustration most effectively. While he appears the scholar that he is, yet his manner is modest and his language simple and hence direct. He urges that the church must be evangelistic, or fail to fill the requirement of our Lord, and that the word of God must be the basis of all preaching. If Dr. Chapman is as clear and forceful in presenting the latter part of the commission in preaching to sinners as he is in presenting the first part of it to the church, he must prove a power in winning souls.

J. M. Morris, state evangelist has been conducting a successful series of meetings at Chehalis.

The University Place Church, Seattle, is being supplied by J. T. Eshelman, of Tacoma, until they secure a pastor.

The First Church, Tacoma, has made good progress during the year, having cleared all its indebtedness, more than doubled its offerings to missions over last year, and had nearly a hundred additions. The church voted unanimously to retain the services of the present pastor at a substantial increase in salary. Such expressions of confidence and appreciation are encouraging to the busy and hard-working pastor, and yet there are churches that never think of increasing the salary of their minister, even though the work is growing rapidly. As one of our leading business men expressed it, "This but enables our pastor to do more good."

I cannot close without expressing my pleasure in the Christmas number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Every number is good, but that is very good. May you have a happy and prosperous year.

MORTON L. ROSE.

New England.

Dr. J. H. Hardin, New England evangelist, held a three weeks' meeting recently in Springfield. There were seven additions, four men and three women, all of high standing and influence in the city. The spiritual life of the brethren was quickened and the church greatly edified. Large audiences were the rule, and one evening the attendance was so large, many had to be turned away.

Brother Hardin suited our Springfield people. His sermons were full of Christian thought. He preached the gospel in all its simplicity, and made a most favorable impression. One of the interesting and helpful features of the meetings was his series of lectures on the pioneers, which he delivered on Lord's day afternoon. These lectures brought prominently before the people the position of the Disciples of Christ, and added much to the effectiveness of the meetings.

After Jan. 1, our evangelist will go to Portland, Maine, the metropolis of the Pine Tree State, and with the aid of a few earnest Disciples of that city, endeavor to plant a new church. We also hope, in the coming year, to enter New Hampshire, where there is not one church of our people, and organize a church in one of its large cities.

The desire for Christian union has permeated all the denominations in New England, and with the proper aid from the American Christian Missionary Society, there would not be much difficulty in doubling our forces in the next few years. What New England needs is not merely the good wishes of our great brotherhood, but cash to enable us to enter the many fields which are ripe for the harvest.

The Boston church is still pastorless, but a call has been extended to one of our able eastern preachers, and it is hoped that he will accept.

There is not another Bible-school in New England that has grown as rapidly as the one in Brockton, Mass. The brethren are now busily engaged in completing an upper room of their church building to accommodate the increased numbers.

THE PREACHING OF JOHN THE BAPTIST.
Matthew 3:1-12.

Memory verses 4 to 6.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matthew 3:2.

The Records.

John the Baptist had a double office. He was, first, a preacher of repentance, and second, a witness to the coming Messiah. All four of the Gospels record his mission. The Synoptic Gospels emphasize chiefly his work as a preacher of righteousness. John's Gospel emphasizes his work as a witness to Jesus. Luke gives the fullest narrative of John the Baptist's career; Matthew covers the same ground as Luke, but less fully; Mark's narrative is very brief; John tells chiefly of the events after the baptism of Jesus.

Parentage and Birth of John.

John the Baptist was of priestly parentage on both sides, a fact which is the more remarkable, because he himself became not a priest, but a prophet. The annunciation of his birth (Luke 1:5-25) was attended by remarkable events which foretold a remarkable career. His birth (Luke 1:57-64) was accompanied by other marvels. The song of his father, Zachariah, (Luke 1:68-79) in which, being filled with the Holy Spirit, he declared the meaning of the child's birth and of his future mission, is one of the most beautiful passages in the whole Bible. John grew up through boyhood strong in body and spirit. He was an ascetic. Following the rule of the Nazarites, as directed by the angel, (Luke 1:15), he abstained from strong drink and lived in the wilderness apart from men.

The Beginning of John's Ministry.

The date of John's appearance as a preacher and a prophet is given elaborately by reference to contemporary events (Luke 3:1, 2); the time indicated was A. D. 25, 26. Matthew's narrative, omitting all the previous events, begins (Matthew 3:1) with John's appearance in the hills of Judea preaching repentance. The words with which this chapter begins, "And in those days—" cannot be taken in close connection with what precedes. In speaking of John's message, Luke says that, "the word of God came unto John," and the fourth Gospel says that "there came a man sent from God, whose name was John." The mission of the forerunner, whether it is considered primarily as a call to repentance or a testimony to the coming Messiah, was a work to which he was divinely called, and his message was one which God had given him. Though John had been raised in the desert, with comparatively little contact with society, yet he knew the essential facts about men. He knew the sinfulness of his age, and the tendency to substitute a perfunctory ceremonialism for righteousness and purity of heart. He was not the first of the wilderness prophets. In the old days God had called men from the deserts to rebuke the sins of the cities. It was so in the case of Amos. The work of the prophet differed from that of the priest in that the validity of his message was ever held to depend upon its own inherent force, upon its power of compelling attention, and upon the accompanying evidence of divine approval, while the priest claimed validity for his actions, because he stood in a certain line of priestly succession and was clothed with a certain official dignity.

The Message of Repentance.

It was an old prophetic message, this cry, "Repent ye," but the motive to which John appealed was a new one. The old prophets had said in substance, Repent ye, for the time of punishment is at hand. John said, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." While John did not fail to show that the coming of the kingdom would bring calamity to the wicked, his first thought, evidently, was of the necessity of preparing for the new kingdom of righteousness which was to be immediately set up. His interest was rather in the work of those who should repent, than of the doom of those who should not.

For a prophet to preach righteousness was not essentially a new thing, but the voice of the prophets had been dumb these many centuries, and under the unbroken sway of the priesthood, Judaism had degenerated into a formal and lifeless thing. Certain sacrifices were to be performed and certain feasts observed. If these obligations were punctiliously carried out, then the nation would have such a claim upon Jehovah that He could not desert it. Moreover, it was conceived that the honor of Jehovah was so closely identified with Israel, just as His presence was identified with the Temple, that He could not, for His own sake, allow them to suffer seriously or permanently. It was always the task of the prophets to show the people that however intimate might be Jehovah's relation to the nation, it was still conditioned upon their continued obedience to his commands, and that the most important of these commands related to right living.

And when the prophets began to deliver this message of repentance, it was customary for the people to reply in their hearts, if not aloud, "Are we not Abraham's children, and therefore heirs to an unconditional promise of God's blessing? God cannot afford to destroy us, for He would then be left without a people." It was in reply to such a thought, that John said, "Think not to say within yourselves, we have Abraham for our father, for I say unto you that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham."

John preached baptism as a symbol of repentance. Apparently it was a familiar rite, for it does not appear that much explanation of it was needed. For a Jew, the son of Abraham, to receive the baptism of repentance, meant that he was no longer resting upon his supposed privileges as a Jew, but, recognizing his own personal sins, was trying to prepare himself for the new kingdom of righteousness by becoming righteous.

The Coming One Foretold.

Closely connected with John's call to repentance, and as the very motive of it, was his announcement of the new kingdom and the new King (Matthew 3:11, 12; Luke 3:4, 6, 15-17). That there was some popular expectation of the Messiah, is evidenced from the fact that John was called upon to explicitly disavow any claim to that office. He was only a forerunner, as all of the prophets had in some sense been, but in a much more definite and explicit way than they had been. In earlier days, Messianic prophecy had chiefly taken the direction of the announcement of the principles which were to govern the new kingdom. The predictions concerning the Messiah, who was to set up that kingdom, had been neither very numerous nor very definite. There had been no reason why they should be. But now that the time was at hand, the prophet can openly and explicitly announce the Messiah, of whom he is the forerunner.

A Kingdom of Righteousness.

The earlier prophecies had buoyed up the hopes of the nation in hours of darkness, and now, at the time when John appeared, the expectation of the Messiah was keen and general (Luke 3:15). But the hope was rather for a political deliverer. John's preaching of righteousness as a preparation for the new kingdom, was an indication that it was a spiritual and not a political regime which was to be established. Over and over again Jesus had to insist upon this point, but at the very outset John laid down the true principle, that the test of righteousness was to be applied: "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." The admonitions which follow this statement (Luke 3:11-14) show that, whether considered as an independent prophet or as the forerunner of the Messiah, John was pre-eminently a preacher of practical righteousness.

STRAIGHT PATHS FOR THE NEW YEAR.
—Heb. 12:13-16.

This twelfth chapter of Hebrews begins with a stirring admonition; read the first verse. We are surrounded by a great cloud of witnesses; let us lay aside every weight, and the sin that so easily besets, and let us run with patience the race set before us. This section continues the exhortation, changing the form. "Make straight paths for your feet," and it would be hard to find a motto more suitable for the New Year.

"Make level the path of thy feet," says the writer of Proverbs (4:26). "Let thine eyes look right on;" do not be gazing to right and left. Do not look for temptations and obstructions. Be Straightforward! What a simple figure in that word, and yet it is as sharp and clear as the finest etching. Straightforward is a good keyword for the year. Let there be no wavering, no swerving, no zig-zagging. Perhaps it ought to be said that one's course is likely to deviate more or less from the straight line, try he never so hard. Hence the high purpose of rectitude should be all the firmer.

1. Have a definite aim in regard to conduct. Do not drift. Do not be the sport of circumstance. Decide how you should bear yourself toward others, and then maintain that attitude. Be explicit. Be clear. No one who can read God's word has any excuse for indefiniteness and uncertainty. Said a great painter,—"Know what to do, and then do it!"—a rule of action and a law of success as applicable to the sublime art of living as to the secondary art of making pictures. The Bible may not furnish specific rules for guidance in all the details of life, but it will throw the pure light of revelation upon every problem. Take advantage of the emotions that stir within you at this season to conceive a definite plan, and look hopefully forward to its consummation. It takes time to give perspective, and a year is short enough. Better if your purpose runs forward three or five or ten years.

2. Keep the goal steadfastly in view. The first experience of the New Year will doubtless be one of failure; and the second, failure; and the third, failure. And all that simply proves how much you need the discipline of walking in straight paths. Bring yourself back into the path. Grow more determined with each rebuff. "Let courage rise with danger." The old sailors steered by the light of the stars, and they availed themselves eagerly of the first rift in the clouds to ascertain their latitude. You will be assailed from all sides. You will be tempted even to question the wisdom of your firm purpose. But do not be temptable or interruptible. Do not tempt the tempter with opportunity.

"Let thine eyelids look straight before thee." Never mind what others are doing, what progress they are making, what wonders they are working. Forward! with all the energy you can summon, your eyes fixed on the prize of your high calling. The vision will inspire you, and draw you on as if by some weird magic.

3. Some details of the way. Paul tells us, in Galatians 2:11-14, how Peter and others good and great, failed on one occasion to make straight paths. They ate with the Gentiles, until some came who disapproved of such liberality, and then they "drew back" and separated themselves. This was not walking uprightly, "according to the truth of the gospel;" it was dissimulation, against which disciples are warned. If a given course is right, it does not become wrong by a change of associates; if wrong, no change of surroundings or latitude can make it right.

We must "follow after peace with all men;" and holiness. That is, we must be right in our social relations, and right in our own hearts. And while exercising a judicious self-care, we must not forget a measure of care for others, "lest there be any man that falleth short of the grace of God."

PRAYER.

Enable us to consecrate the year in its freshness to thee, O God. May each new day mark a fresh beginning. Guide our feet into ways of righteousness and peace; may we follow in the radiant footsteps of our great Shepherd, till we reach the shelter of the upper fold. Amen.

THE TEST OF REPENTANCE.

—Luke 3:8-14.

The test of repentance is reformation. To express sorrow for sin, and keep on sinning, means either insincerity or weakness. In either case it is not acceptable repentance.

A great deal of what passes for repentance is not really sorrow for sin, but only sorrow for some of the unpleasant effects of sin. Sin always brings its own punishment, sooner or later. Sometimes it comes very promptly and in a form easily recognized. Such punishment is a warning against sin, but one may heed the warning and still not be really penitent. It is one thing to be sorry for the sin itself. It is another thing to be merely sorry that you were caught.

Because so much so-called repentance is sorrow for being caught in sin, people go on trying to sin without getting caught. Sometimes they succeed—for a while; sometimes not at all. But even if one were shrewd enough to avoid all the present evil consequences of sin, the great evil would still remain—estrangement from God. It is that which makes sin terrible. That is the great reason why one should repent of it and put it away.

God created man in His own image and after His own likeness. Sin is the marring of that image, the distortion of that likeness. Man's greatest glory is his likeness to God. His greatest shame and greatest possible calamity is the loss of the divine image. How great, then, should be our horror of sin. Whatever may be its immediate effects upon our outward circumstances—and even these are often disastrous—the awfulness of sin can never be adequately conceived until we realize how it shuts us away from God and defaces His image in our hearts; and we can never adequately repent of our sins until we realize that to be separated from God and to be unlike Him are the greatest calamities that can befall us.

So, then, true repentance requires hatred of sin itself, and not simply of its present unpleasant effects; and the test of it is the putting away of secret and "safe" sins as well as those which seem likely to bring immediate punishment.

But it is hard to cast out sin and stop with that. Nature abhors a vacuum. The most effective way to cast out sin is to crowd it out with other interests and activities. So this also becomes a test of repentance. When one has repented of his sins, let him, without delay, begin to fill his life full of good deeds. These will keep out the sins that have been driven out, and will afford to the world a more convincing evidence of repentance than mere negative virtue could.

Nature's Greatest Cure For Men and Women

Swamp-Root is the Most Perfect Healer and Natural Aid to the Kidneys, Liver and Bladder Ever Discovered.

Swamp-Root Saved My Life.A Farmer's Strong Testimonial

I received promptly the sample bottle of your great kidney remedy, Swamp-Root.

I had an awful pain in my back, over the kidneys, and had to urinate from four to seven times a night often with smarting and burning. Brick dust would settle in the urine. I lost twenty pounds in two weeks, and thought I would soon die. I took the first dose of your Swamp-Root in the evening at bed time, and was very much surprised; I had to urinate but once that night, and the second night I did not get up until morning. I have used three bottles of Swamp-Root, and to-day am as well as ever.

I am a farmer, and am working every day, and weigh 190 pounds, the same that I weighed before I was taken sick.

Gratefully yours,

Sec. F. A. & I. U. 504.

April 9th, 1903.

T. S. APKER,
Marsh Hill, Pa.

There comes a time to both men and women when sickness and poor health bring anxiety and trouble hard to bear; disappointment seems to follow every effort of physicians in our behalf, and remedies we try have little or no effect. In many such cases serious mistakes are made in doctoring, and not knowing what the disease is or what makes us sick. Kind nature warns us by certain symptoms, which are unmistakable evidence of danger, such as too frequent desire to urinate, scanty supply, scalding irritation, pain or dull ache in the back—they tell us in silence that our kidneys need doctoring. If neglected now, the disease advances until the face looks pale or sallow, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, feet swell, and sometimes the heart acts badly.

There is comfort in knowing that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, fulfills every wish in quickly relieving such troubles. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. In taking this wonderful new discovery, Swamp-Root, you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that has ever been discovered.

Swamp-Root a Blessing to Women.

My kidneys and bladder gave me great trouble for over two months and I suffered untold misery.

MRS. E. AUSTIN.

I became weak, emaciated and very much run down. I had great difficulty in retaining my urine, and was obliged to pass water very often night and day. After I had used a sample bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, sent me on my request, I experienced relief and I immediately bought of my druggist two large bottles and continued taking it regularly. I am pleased to say that Swamp-Root cured me entirely. I can now stand on my feet all day without having any bad symptoms whatever. Swamp-Root has proved a blessing to me.

Gratefully yours,

MRS. E. AUSTIN,
19 Nassau St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

To Prove What SWAMP-ROOT, the Great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy Will do for YOU, Every Reader of the Christian-Evangelist May Have a Sample Bottle FREE by Mail.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—If you are sick or "feel badly" write at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, and a book telling all about it, and containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured. In writing to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Our Budget

—Exit 1903. But not without regret that more has not been accomplished.

—Welcome 1904. May it prove to be the best year thus far in the history of the world.

—In closing this volume of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which is its fortieth anniversary, we extend greetings to our fellow editors everywhere and bid them God-speed. We know their burdens, trials and temptations, and they have our sympathy and our prayers.

—We would also send New Year's greetings to our readers—a growing company, we are glad to say—wishing them both a happy and prosperous year, especially as relates to their spiritual welfare. May it be a year in which we shall struggle mightily to conquer the evil within us, and a year of triumph through the divine strength which we may claim in every such struggle.

—Time is said to be an iconoclast, destroying many things; but he is also a builder and reconstructor, and that which he builds is more enduring than that which he destroys. "The things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are unseen are eternal." Time, at least, gives the opportunity for all the constructive work of life.

"At the whirling loom of time unawed,
I weave the living mantle of God."

—If one asks what is to become of the great structures of earth, and the works of art which employ the thought and skill and labor of men, the poet answers:

"The cloud-capped tower, the gorgeous palace,

The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherits, shall dissolve,
And, like the baseless fabric of a vision,
Leave not a rack behind."

—W. Bayard Craig writes under date of Dec. 21: "We are settled in our home and are getting a good start in the work at the Central. Good audiences, good interest and harmony."

—Word has been received from E. N. Pardee and wife of their safe arrival on the Island of Porto Rico. Brother Pardee reports a vast amount of work to be done.

—We call the attention of our Missouri readers to the appeal of the committee on our Students' Aid Fund, in this state, which we published last week. Let those of us who subscribed a specific sum each year for five years, send in the first installment to J. P. Pinkerton, 311 Century Building, Kansas City, Mo. And let those who have not pledged, but who wish a hand in this good work, send in their pledges to the same address.

—We publish another installment, in this issue, of our symposium on "Religion in the Home." We are not through with the subject yet. It is of too vital importance to drop until there is a wider agitation resulting in some practical measures looking to definite results. It should be clear to anyone who thinks upon this question that our future, as a religious movement, is to be vitally affected by the solution we give to this problem of religious worship and instruction in the homes of our people. Let preachers make this the subject of a sermon or two. Will not all our papers join us in stirring up thought and action upon this subject?

—A minister recently addressed a company of Christian men, pressing home on them the supreme need of sacrifice. With emphatic gestures of a hand, on one finger of which a splendid diamond flashed, he enforced his eloquent appeal for self-denial. It was impressive.—The Congregationalist and Christian World.

This was not the same preacher, then, of whom we have heard, who, having made a strong statement on the folly of spending money for mere display, while the heathen were perishing for lack of the gospel, was about to enforce it with a gesture of the right hand, on one finger of which flashed a diamond, when he suddenly dropped it and substituted the left hand! This was more suggestive than impressive.

—What we do in cultivating faith, hope and love, in building up character in ourselves and others, in promoting the reign of righteousness and of truth among men, in alleviating human pain and sorrow, in cementing the bonds of human brotherhood; in a word, in causing the will of God to be done here on earth as it is in heaven,—all that abides; it shares in God's nature and partakes of His eternity.

—An appeal has gone out to our Christian Endeavorers in behalf of our Porto Rican mission work under the American Christian Missionary Society. A number of societies have responded with a pledge, and some have sent cash. Many societies have not answered the appeal. Will not the corresponding secretaries of all such societies bring the matter to the attention of their members and secure definite action at an early date?

—Word has been received at the home office that a number of our Sunday-schools will observe Boys' and Girls' Rally Day in connection with their Christmas entertainments. We are glad to note this fact.

—There has been a good gain in Rally Day receipts, but there are still many schools on the books at the home office with no offering to their credit. Is your school in this list? Send all offerings from Boys' and Girls' Rally Day to Benjamin L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

—Send all offerings for Porto Rico to the corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, Benjamin L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

—"I enjoyed your answer to the Interior's 'Divisions where Unity is Preached.' A little farther back you strike, it seems to me, the keynote for our future success. We are a restoration movement, or any other thing you may please to call us that is good, and the restoration of worship in the home will go a long way towards a restoration of respect for parents, and these will largely solve the problem of a lukewarm church.—S. B. Ross."

—Last week the Foreign Society received $500 on the Annuity Plan from W. S. Dickinson to go toward the Bible College in India. He has been a member of the executive committee of this society since its organization, and has been a liberal contributor to its work for the past twenty-eight years.

—A direct gift of $500 was received by the Foreign Society last week from a generous friend. Many like him should follow this good example.

—We call attention to the announcement (published elsewhere in this issue) of a new edition of John G. M. Luttenberger's little book, "A Christian or a Church Member—Which?" It should be read and pondered by those who think (or act as if they thought) that the whole duty of man is to get into the church.

—We learn from a card just received from Brother George W. Buckner, pastor Christian Church, Macomb, Ill., that our beloved brother, J. C. Reynolds, has been very low, even at the point of death, as it was thought, but that he is now so much improved that he is able to be out. We are sure that his many friends will rejoice with us in his recovery and in the prayer that his valuable life may yet be spared to us many years.

—We have before us the Christian Lesson Commentary on the International Bible Studies for 1904. The author, the Rev. W. W. Dowling, is a master workman, and his elucidations of the lessons are clear, graphic, suggestive and complete. With a few simple words he brings the full thought of the writer to the surface, and most impressively sets forth the practical bearings of the text. For years, through the courtesy of the author, we have been able to avail ourselves of this valuable help, and on some lines we have found it superior to all other similar publications. The work consists of over 400 pages, is handsomely bound, printed in clear type, copiously illustrated, has most excellent maps and diagrams, and is in all ways a most helpful publication. Our teachers will be delighted with it. Order from the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo. Price, $1.—Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, O.

—The church at Seymour, Ia., will begin a revival campaign Jan. 3 with home forces. S. B. Ross is the pastor.

—I. H. Fuller, of Lenox, Ia., will hold a short meeting during the winter with H. F. Ritz, at Denver, Ill.

—George Darsie, of Frankfort, Ky., is preaching a series of Sunday night sermons on "Some Noted Kentucky Pioneers"—meaning the pioneers of our reformatory movement.

—A. M. Harvuot, founder of the School of Pastoral Helpers, writes us that negotiations are pending regarding the transfer of the school to Drake University or Hiram College.

—The Calhoun Street Church, Baltimore, Md., of which Peter Ainslie is pastor, gave a reception on Dec. 30 to the forty-five new members who have united with the church during the past year.

—Bro. E. A. Gilliland has just closed a meeting for Bro. J. A. Barnett at Oreana, Ill., with twelve additions, eleven by confession and baptism. Brother Barnett is just graduating at Eureka, and goes to Pekin, Ill., the first of the year as pastor.

—We have received from Mr. George Mor-ton, General Passenger and Ticket Agent of the M. K. & T. Ry. Co., a beautifully illustrated pamphlet entitled, "The Story of San Antonio," which speaks well for the artistic taste and enterprise of this railroad company, and which will, no doubt, be highly prized by the citizens of San Antonio as well as by a large number of pilgrims who resort thither in the winter season.

—The West Side Christian Church at Springfield, Ill., has just closed a two weeks' series of decision meetings, preaching being done by the pastor, J. E. Lynn, and singing led by V. E. Ridenour, of Topeka, Kan. There were 40 accessions during the meeting and an excellent interest. The church is planning to celebrate its second anniversary during the first week in January. The membership is now 388. They have what a recent visitor of wide experience says is one of the best organized Sunday-schools in the brotherhood.

—The Christian Church, of Shreve, Ohio, gave Brother L. W. Spayd, a royal welcome on December 13, on his return from South Africa. Brother Spayd spoke to a large audience that was very responsive to his address. It is said that there were many tear-stained faces while he related his experiences in Africa. The church presented him with a purse of $63. He is now open for engagement to hold meetings. Brother E. C. Harris, who reports the above says, "We are getting the people ready for a great meeting in January. Brother George Darsie, Jr., of Massillon, will do the preaching. May we have the earnest prayers of our brotherhood for its success."

—J. H. Allen, pastor of the Christian Church of Bunceton, Mo., and president of the Ministerial Alliance of that place, reports that at a recent session of the Missouri Synod, that body took a decided stand against dancing and card playing. The Alliance of Bunceton wishes us to make mention of that fact to show what our Presbyterian brethren are thinking and doing on that question in the hope that it may have a restraining influence over other Christians inclined to indulge in such forms of amusement.

—Our readers will be glad to know that arrangements have been made with Brother B. B. Tyler, of Denver, by which he is to be our regular correspondent from the west, furnishing us letters representing that wide region not less often than each alternate week. With two such veteran letter-writers as B. B. Tyler and F. D. Power, one representing the west and the other the east, our readers, during the year to come, are likely to be kept in touch with the chief things of interest in these two sections of the country. To these must be added our scholarly and racy correspondent from London, W. W. Durban. No paper in the brotherhood can boast of three as celebrated correspondents as these, and they are seconded by a large number of others, who, if they write less stately, write scarcely less interestingly from their various fields.

—O. E. Hamilton and H. L. Wilkinson will be in a meeting at Corydon, Iowa, in January.

—Corresponding secretary, T. A. Abbott, recently visited Dexter (Mo.) Christian College, and preached at the same time for the Dexter Church of which President Buxton is pastor. Brother Buxton is doing an excellent work in a needy field, and deserves the assistance of the brotherhood of the state.

—E. L. Powell, pastor of the Fourth and Walnut Street Church, Louisville, Ky., not only goes to the theater regularly, but is inducing a large number of the people of that city to do the same, and that on Sunday evening—when he preaches to immense audiences in one of the theaters of the city.

—We hope all who are interested in the work of Christian Endeavor read the report of the committee on Christian Endeavor in our last issue and the ringing appeal of our state superintendent of Christian Endeavor. Keep up the increase campaign, and increase the number of new societies, and let us go to Carrollton in force.

—Great good news comes to us from Joplin concerning plans which Brother Turner and his co-laborers have introduced for the development of the large number of young converts recently brought into the church. The auditorium is overflowed even at the mid-week prayer-meeting. Brother Turner will report particulars later. Brother Harlow has already been engaged for another meeting next fall.

—We have received from the Widows' and Orphans' Home, of Louisville, Ky., a neat pamphlet containing an address entitled, "The Princess and the Waif," by Geo. Darsie, of Frankfort. The address is a strong appeal for helpless orphans, and is well calculated to stimulate interest in the benevolent feature of our work, which has, in late years, made such progress. The pamphlet contains a beautiful cut of our Widows' and Orphans' Home in Louisville, which is doing a good work in behalf of the helpless widows and orphans of that state.

—Our venerable, but still very active brother, C. P. Evans, of Arapahoe, Neb., referring to some recent articles in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST touching aged ministers, sends us the following facts: "I was baptized Sept. 29, 1841. Consequently I have been a member of the church 59 years. I commenced exercising my gifts in public 55 years ago this winter, but was not ordained for several years after, but was ordained 48 years ago this winter. I have preached in nine different states, but most of my work has been in Iowa, Missouri and Nebraska."

—Dr. W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., has one on the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He received a letter recently, which he forwarded to this office, addressed to "W. T. Moore, M. D., LL. D., Preacher, Editor and Educator, Bible College of the University of Missouri," and asking him if he could assist the inquirer as to the identity and location of a paper called the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, a copy of which she had once seen, and for which she desired to subscribe! She thought perhaps Dr. Moore might be the editor of the paper. This shows that fame travels in a circuitous way but seldom fails to reach its destination.

—Howard T. Cree, pastor of the Central Christian Church, this city, and his wife, spent the Christmas holidays in visiting their parents and friends in Kentucky. Before leaving, the Central Christian Church increased his salary $500 per annum, and in this way wished him a "Merry Christmas." In his absence, last Lord's day, the Central and Mt. Cabanne churches had union services morning and evening, meeting in the morning at Mt. Cabanne, and in the evening at the Central. Bro. F. G. Tyrrell spoke at both these services to large and interested congregations. It is hoped that the new building will be sufficiently advanced for the united church to occupy it early next summer.

—In Sioux City, Ia., a city of 50,000 population, and a strategic center for the northwest, we have a small congregation numbering 115 members. They have purchased one of the best sites in the city for $6,000, on which they

"The truth,

the truth"

owe $4,000, which the Church Extension Board will loan them, when a sufficient amount has been raised to erect the building. We have received a circular giving a cut of the new proposed church building, which will cost $8,000, and they must rely on the brethren elsewhere to furnish $5,000 of this amount. It gives assurance of the ultimate success of this enterprise to know that so wise and capable a man as W. T. Hilton is pastor of the church and the leader in this great undertaking. It gives us pleasure to commend this work to the brethren generally as a missionary movement of great importance to a wide section of unoccupied territory. Help it.

—We are holding in our hands the Christian Lesson Commentary for 1904. It is a beautiful book, bound in buff cloth and marked with black letters, and is copiously illustrated throughout. It contains the lessons for the whole of 1904, and we notice that the first six months are given to the study of the life of Christ, in the four Gospels, while the last six months are occupied by the study of the history of Israel, taking up that history with the division of the kingdom, and ending with the captivity of the ten tribes. Brother Dowling has given his time and thought so long to this work, that he has become an expert, and knows what the average teacher needs to help him convey the thought of the lesson to the pupil. He has also culled the best things from the best Bible scholars and teachers, so that his work is eclectic in character, but fused into unity by his own personality. It is a great thing to have the lessons for the year together in one volume, that you may have a general survey of the whole field of study for the year and always know where you are. We hope our Bible-school workers and teachers will not fail to provide themselves with a copy of this valuable Lesson Commentary which not only holds its place at the head of such works, but increases its usefulness and its circulation year by year. Price $1. Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis.

—The editor had the pleasure of witnessing a Christmas program by the children of the Christian Orphans' Home on Aubert Avenue in this city on last Sunday afternoon. Over 100 of the children gathered in their little chapel, or school-room, marching in two by two in a long procession, with the youngest in front, and with the visitors, quite filled the room in which the exercises were held. There were songs, dialogues, recitations, and among them an original Christmas poem by one of the girls. It was delightful to hear the children sing, and to look into their happy faces. They had been requested to make a special study of the second chapter of Luke, and Brother John Burns, who is a sort of chaplain for the institution, had requested us to be present and question them on this chapter. We found them remarkably familiar with the whole story and prompt to answer all questions relating to the great event of Christ's birth. Remarks were also made by Sister Gibson and Brother George L. Snively, the general secretary. It was a delightful occasion. It does one's heart good to make a visit to the Home and see and hear the children. Miss Williamson, the matron, calls it "the flower-garden of the church," and she seems pre-eminently fitted to cultivate these human flowers, and she delights in the work. It is gratifying to know how rapidly this great work of benevolence is growing in the hearts of the brotherhood.

—In a letter from R. H. Fife, pastor of the Hyde Park Christian Church, Kansas City, he writes that the church is moving on splendidly since the dedication. He says, "Our pledges are coming in beautifully, and we hope to close our Church Extension loan on Monday. We are having some valuable additions to our church, and it seems that our future is very bright." He speaks of the evidences of kindness and appreciation that he and his family have received from the church, and adds, "I am sure that we will not have to die in order to enjoy heaven; such a life as this is heaven itself. Praise His holy name!" What a blessed thing it is to live and labor in such a spirit! Writing on Christmas day, he wishes the editor was with him to share in an eighteen pound Christmas turkey—a prize which his daughter Bessie gained over forty other high school scholars in preparing the best original story for the Christmas number of their paper. We congratulate Miss Bessie on her success, and the family on their privilege of sharing the benefits thereof.

—President Hill M. Bell of Drake University, encloses an editorial from the Des Moines Daily Capital, giving an account of a most gracious gift from Mrs. David Skinner, of Spencer, Iowa, a woman totally blind, who has made arrangements whereby her whole property, amounting to $10,000 is to pass into the hands of the trustees of Drake University. The only reservation she makes is that she have just enough from the property to supply her wants during the remaining years of her life. The Daily Capital remarks truly that, "There are people in the world to whom the light of day is even as the darkness, and yet they are marvels of contentment. They have learned the true philosophy which teaches that when the heart and soul have become attuned to infinite harmonies, life is the more worth living." In addition to this notable gift, which ought to be an inspiration to many others, President Bell writes: "You will rejoice, I am sure, with us not only in receiving this gift, but also in the fact that Mrs. Matilda Dodd, of Jefferson, has made a gift of $25,000 to endow the president's chair. This makes a total in gifts and pledges to Drake University during the past year of nearly $200,000." We do indeed rejoice with Drake in its good fortune, and trust these gifts are only the harbingers of larger ones in the year to come.

Correspondence

St. Louis Letter.

Since resigning the Southern California pen to Brother Smither and others, I have been too busy to write anything. But I do not forget that many brethren outside of the World's Exposition city are interested to know what is being done here. Hence, seated upon a new tripod, I beg to make my bow again.

Our work in St. Louis was never more encouraging than at the present moment. We have a host of good and faithful men in the pulpits here: Bro. John L. Brandt at the First; Bro. Howard T. Cree at the Central; Bro. Frank G. Tyrrell at Mt. Cabanne; Bro. E. T. McFarland at the Fourth; Bros. Pittman and Mayhall at the Second; Bro. G. E. Ireland at Carondelet; Bro. G. A. Hoffmann at Maplewood; Bro. S. B. Moore at Hammett Place; Bro. F. J. Nichols, West End; Brother Fillmore in East St. Louis; Brother Bennett at Tuxedo, and last and not least, the writer at Compton Heights.

Besides these we have Brethren J. H. Garrison, O. A. Bartholomew, W. E. Garrison, Redd, Hopkins, Carter, Burns, and a host of others to see that we do our work well.

Our Monday morning preachers' meetings are well attended and interesting. We hope to take up many practical questions during the coming year.

Our work and workers are recognized in the city. Bro. John L. Brandt is president of the Ministerial Alliance, which is composed of all the Protestant ministers of the city. One of the elders of the Compton Heights Church, Bro. H. H. Hodgdon, is president of the Endeavor Union of the city. A number of others of our people are in responsible positions in Christian work in the city.

We hope to be able to tell something about all of our churches here in the near future. We will begin with the one we know most about, and report the others as we become better acquainted.

Compton Heights has 425 members. A Sunday-school of about 450 enrolled with an attendance ranging from 275 to 335. We have two mission schools under our care. The Seventh street mission has an attendance of about 100. The Pestalozzi has an attendance of about 120. The enrollment in the two schools is about 250, thus giving us about 700 pupils to look after. The Pestalozzi mission is conducted by our Endeavor Society. We have one of the best Endeavor societies in the state.

Our new church is located on the corner of St. Vincent and California Avenues. The Compton Heights and Park Avenue cars, which run from down town past the Union Station, pass within one block of the church. The Fourth Street cars, which run from Fourth Street down town, pass within three blocks of the church. We hope our friends everywhere will make a note of these directions so they can attend some of our services when in the city. Of course they will all be here some time next year.

The preparations for the great Exposition are moving rapidly forward. It seems quite evident that St. Louis will have the greatest exposition that has ever been presented to the public.

The preparations of our own brethren for the next National Convention are correspondingly as great as the preparations for the great Fair. Committees are already at work, and nothing will be left undone to make this the greatest convention ever held by our people. Preparations are also being made for our exhibit on the Exposition grounds. We shall have a unique place where our brethren from all over the world can meet one another, and where the general public will be able to see something of our work.

The greatest problem before Missouri just now is to know what to do with the political machine and the criminal classes. (We came near saying and the other criminal classes.) If something is not done soon, a man coming

A Book Worth Reading

ARE you interested in good literature?
Are you anxious to make life worth living?

Are you anxious to gain a better knowledge of the Bible, and do you wish to know the secrets to a healthy, happy and successful Christian life?

Then Read (Third Edition)

A Christian or a Church-Member—Which?

By JNO. G. M. LUTTENBERGER, D. O., who has carefully studied this subject from a moral, physical and spiritual standpoint.

The book contains twenty-one interesting subjects, all of which are of vital importance.

Such subjects as "Concentration," "Why Prayers Are Not Answered," "Cause of Denominationalism," "How To Succeed," "What Is Your Life?" "Knowledge Is Power," "Facts About Useless Extravagance," "Secrets To a Happy Life," "Purification in Spirit, Soul and Body" (beautifully illustrated), "The Power of the Church of Christ," "Scriptural Organization," "Rules To Promote Health, Happiness and Long Life," "The Unpardonable Sin," etc., are themes that every one should know, because of their temporal and eternal value.

"Rules To Promote Health, Happiness and Long Life," is worth ten times the price of the book.

"The subject is vital. The treatment is attractive and original."—ASHLEY S. JOHNSON, LL. D.

"I wish to commend it heartily to lovers of the Lord everywhere."—GEO. F. HALL, Ph. D.

"Your book on preaching and living as you have outlined in your book will help to save this dark world."—J. V. UFDIKE, General Evangelist.

"In brief space many varieties of thought for the good of man, body, soul and spirit, whether Christian, church-member, sinner, sectarian or scientist, may be found in this unique book."—E. R. EZZELL.

"All who read it will feel that it has been a most profitable investment in the wealth of character which it adds to those who carefully peruse its pages."—W. R. JINNETT.

Foreign Missionary Rallies.

Each year, before the time for the March offering, foreign missionary rallies are held in many parts of the country. The aim of these services is to generate interest and enthusiasm. This is done by imparting information. At these rallies no pledges are called for, no offerings are taken. The rallies are held at some central point. Efforts are made to draw the local people in large numbers. The churches within a reasonable distance are invited. The preachers and leading workers are urged to attend. Those in charge seek to make the program as helpful as possible. A missionary rally is like a section of a National Convention. The addresses are of quite as high an order. The rallies this year will be conducted by the president of the society. It is expected that G. L. Wharton, of India, and W. P. Bentley, of China, will be present and speak. The local men will participate in the services. No speech will exceed fifteen minutes in length. Most of them will not exceed ten. The songs will be bright and inspiring. The services will be interspersed with brief and pointed prayers. The rallies arranged for, and the dates, are as follows:

Chicago, Jackson Boulevard Church, Jan. 4.
Bloomington, Ill., First Church, Jan. 5.
Springfield, Ill., Central, Jan. 6.
Jacksonville, Ill., Jan. 7.
Pittsfield, Ill., Jan. 8.

Back to Japan.

We left Topeka, Sept., 5, on our way back to the "Land of the Rising Sun," our second homeland. The churches in Topeka were good to us. Our first stop was at Newton, where I spoke Lord's day morning. An offering was taken for our Sendai Chapel. For the evening we parted company, Mrs. Madden speaking in the Congregational Church at Partridge and I in the Christian Church in Hutchinson. Monday morning we visited one of the large salt plants and in the afternoon the church tendered us a reception. All were very cordial. Traveling all night, we reached Colorado Springs early Tuesday morning. Here Mrs. Madden and the boys remained while I visited some of the Colorado churches. Visited Dr. Tyler in Denver and spoke in the Central Church prayer-meeting night. Dr. Craig had just come back to this church. Met here Miss Kellar, who was about to return to her work in China. Thursday night was spent with the church in Colorado Springs. Brother Brown was hospitality itself. He loaded us all in his carriage and took us through the Garden of the Gods. We also visited Manitou and Williams' Canyon. Mrs. Madden spoke to a large audience in Colorado Springs Sunday night. All were very appreciative. Friday night spoke to a small but kind audience at the Central Church in Pueblo. Saturday, Brother Darsie, of that famous family, minister of the Broadway Church, a classmate in old Bethany, of the renowned class of '95, took me into the country to a mission church at Vineland. There is about as much difference between Christians and heathens in Japan as there is between irrigated and unirrigated fields in Colorado. On Lord's day morning it was my pleasure to speak to the Broadway Church, while Brother Darsie spoke to the Central people, as they had no minister at the time. The evening was spent with the La Junta brethren. My family joined me here and early Tuesday morning we started on our long journey across the great American desert, which still remains in fact, if it has been taken off the maps in the geographies. We broke the journey at Las Vegas, changed cars at The Needles and reached Los Angeles without accident. Was with the East Side Church, where Brother Burr ministers, Friday night, and Lord's day morning spoke in the First Church. All were happy that Brother Smither was to return soon. We visited Long Beach for a brief while and viewed the old Pacific on whose broad bosom we were soon to float for nearly three weeks.

During the week before sailing I visited our churches in Los Gatos, Palo Alto, Sacramento, Red Bluff, Petaluma and Oakland. Good interest was manifested and evidences of growth were on every hand. In some of these churches I was the first one of our missionaries to speak for them.

The churches in Greater San Francisco united in giving all our outgoing missionaries a reception in the Twelfth Street Church Monday evening. Here we met Dr. Rijnhart and Dr. and Mrs. Shelton bound for Tibet. Miss Alma Favors, of the West Side Church, who goes to China, was presented and received a hearty reception. How glad we are to have a representative from California on the foreign field. Quite a number of brethren were at the pier to see us off as the good ship China slowly started at 1:30 P. M., Sept. 29.

We had only been on board a few minutes until we found that Dr. G. W. Sweeny and wife were among the passengers. The first Sunday out Brother Sweeny preached a good sermon. In due season we arrived at Honolulu, where we spent one night. The reputation of this church for genuine hospitality was fully sustained. We were all taken care of nicely. We spent the night with Pastor Muckley, with whose brothers I spent some time in Bethany College.

A meeting had been arranged at the church. I spoke briefly and Dr. Rijnhart gave her lecture to the edification of all. The church here could do mission work for many nations if they had some help. Miss Armbruster, for Osaka, Japan, joined our ship here. We met Mr. and Mrs. Fukas, with whom we worked in Tukushima, seven years ago, also met Mr. Ota, who is now doing good missionary work among the Japanese in Honolulu. Leaving Honolulu we had 32 missionaries and nine missionary children. All of us were seasick a little, except Dr. Shelton, who being from Kansas, was immune. Dr. Rijnhart lectured one night to those in the ship. We were met at Yokohama by Miss Johnson, our senior missionary in Japan, and Brother Cunningham. We all went to Brother Cunningham's home in Tokyo and met nearly all of our missionaries there. Found all well and busily and happily engaged in the work of saving Japan. Spoke twice on Sunday at Yotsuya, where Miss Miller has done independent work successfully for many years. Brother Cunningham now has charge of the evangelistic work. Spending four days in Tokyo, we came on to Sendai, where at present writing we are located in the Thomson Memorial Home, waiting for stove and chairs. After enjoying the fellowships in America, it is good to get back to the work in Japan. The brethren here are very dear to us.

While the air is full of rumors of war between Japan and Russia, the work of evangelization goes on with greater success than ever. Brethren, great wide doors are swinging open before us. Help us to enter them! For the sake of Jesus' kingdom in Japan.

Michigan.

The Michigan Christian Missionary Society is making a record this year that should be an inspiration to every Michigan Disciple. A new day has dawned for the Church of Christ in Michigan—a day of larger things for Christ. The congregation or isolated Disciple that has no fellowship in this splendid work through the medium of a cash contribution, will have reason to hang his head in shame.

H. W. Edwards and wife are doing a good work at Kalkaska. A new parsonage has been built through their untiring efforts, and the church is improving in spirituality and activity. Brother Edwards preaches every Lord's day afternoon at Excelsior, where the work is very encouraging. The seventh district convention was entertained by the Kalkaska Church, Dec. 17, 20. The seventh district is wide awake and aggressive. Bro. Frank Taylor is president, and Sister Hattie Cornell is secretary. There are twenty-four churches in the district, and most of them are very weak. There is no more promising mission field in the world than in northern Michigan.

T. W. Bellingham, of Findlay, Ohio, has located with the church at Bangor, and the work at that place prospers.

W. H. Kindred will assist D. Munro in a meeting at St. John's, beginning Jan. 3.

J. F. Green has located with the church at Mt. Pleasant. The outlook there is very encouraging.

The writer closed a twenty-four days' meeting at Bailey, Dec. 11, where G. W. Daines ministers. There were 29 added to the church: 21 by baptism, four reclaimed and four from the Baptists. Brother Daines is held in high esteem by the church, and we believe this is the beginning of greater things for the Bailey Church.

DRAKE'S PALMETTO WINE.

Mr. R. N. Monroe, 131 Andrews St., Rockford, Ill., writes: "For the cure of Chronic Constipation I give to Drake's Palmetto Wine unstinted praise. In my case of seven years standing it has proved excellently effective, producing a natural condition of the bowels and giving a vigorous tone to the urinary organs. Increased ambition, energy, and the power to enjoy life more, follow in the wake of Drake's Palmetto Wine." The Drake Formula Company, Drake Building, Chicago, Ill., will send a trial bottle free to any reader of this. Send them a request by letter or postal card and receive a free trial bottle by returned mail. A trial bottle often cures completely. Dollar size bottles of Drake's Palmetto Wine are sold by druggist for 75 cents.

FORGET YOU EVER HAD IT.

Catarrh, the Most Odious of All Diseases Stamped Out, Root and Branch.

Catarrh is the most foul and offensive disease that afflicts the human race. Any one with social ambitions had better renounce them if he has a bad case of catarrh, for his presence, if tolerated at all, will be endured under protest. The foul and sickening breath, the watery eyes, the hawking and spitting and fetid discharge at the nose make the unfortunate sufferer the most avoided of human beings.

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are the hope and relief of catarrh victims all over the world. They go direct to the root of the disease and thoroughly eradicate it from the human system. They cleanse and purify the blood of all catarrhal poisons and under their influence all impurities are carried off. The blood becomes pure, the eye brightens, the head is cleared, the breath becomes sweet, the lost sense of smell is restored, the discharges cease and the sufferer again feels that he has something to live for. He is again a man among men and can meet his fellow-beings with satisfaction and pleasure.

The following letter from a St. Louis lawyer is only one of thousands received praising the merits and curative powers of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets. Read what he says:

"I suffered from catarrh for 15 years. It would be worse at certain seasons than others, but never failed to annoy me and cause me more or less misery during that period. About a year ago I got so bad that I thought of abandoning my practice. I was a nuisance to myself and all who came near me. My condition was very humiliating and especially so in the court room. I had tried, I thought, every known remedy: all kinds of balms, ointments, inhalers, sprays, etc., till I thought I had completed the list. I was finally told of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets by a friend who took pity on me and, as a drowning man will catch at a straw, I got some and began taking them. I began to improve from the first day and I kept up the good work you may rest assured. In six weeks I was as free from catarrh as the day I was born, but to make assurance doubly sure, I continued the treatment for six weeks longer.

"I have had no trace of catarrh in my system since. I am entirely free from the odious disease and feel like a new man. I write this letter unsolicited for the benefit of fellow-sufferers and you may give it as widespread publicity as you wish."

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50cts. a box.

Important to Kansans.

I wish to announce to the Kansas brotherhood, as well as to all the readers and exchanges of the Kansas Messenger, that this paper will now be published from Chetopa, Kan., by Robert Simons, publisher and manager. All notes and news, as well as advertising matter and subscription money, should be sent to Brother Simons at Chetopa. This change is in accordance with the recommendation passed at our last state convention.

Our state board requests all our state workers, especially the evangelists and heads of the various departments, to diligently advertise the Kansas Messenger as they travel over the state, secure subscriptions for it and in every way possible bring the paper before our Kansas brotherhood. We also urge all the preachers, as well as all the church workers, to interest themselves in this campaign for a more generous and liberal support of our state paper.

The Messenger will be enlarged to eight pages, and the subscription price will be fifty cents per year. W. S. LOWE, Supt. K. C. M. S.

[We hope the Kansas brotherhood will heed this call and give hearty support to their state paper. We hope also that they will remember the still greater need of keeping in touch with the Disciples of Christ everywhere through our national papers. Kansas Disciples can secure both the Kansas Messenger and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for less than the cost of most denominational papers.—EDITOR.]

Our Western Letter.

An article in the Boston Transcript, not long ago, threw some persons in Denver, for a time, into a state of violent mental agitation. The Transcript more than intimated that Denver is in a bad way financially. The impression left on the mind of the credulous reader by the article in the Boston paper was that Denver is almost utterly destitute of a solid moral foundation. The recent election rascalities were cited as evidence of the exceedingly low moral tone of the town. The Transcript concluded that, upon the whole, there ought not to have been built a city where Denver now stands. It is not a good place for a city. It can never become a place of importance.

Pueblo is in a good location for a city, and if ever a large city is to exist in Colorado, Pueblo will be the place. Certain denizens of Denver were covered all over with a cold perspiration after reading what the Transcript said. The Chamber of Commerce held a meeting and passed resolutions. It was unanimously resolved that the representations in the Boston paper were absolutely and unqualifiedly false—false in whole and in part, in general and in particular. The Chamber offered to pay the expenses of a reporter, the man to be selected and commissioned by the Transcript, from Boston to Denver and return, whose business it shall be to investigate conditions in Denver and make a veracious report to the readers of the Transcript and the world at large.

All of which is evidence that Denver is yet young. Mature persons and places do not become excited over small matters, and what the Boston paper said about our beautiful and prosperous city was a very small matter.

Denver is all right! The Transcript is in error. Some person imposed upon this too credulous and probably inexperienced editor.

Denver is a substantial fact. It is a sure enough city. It has a population of 160,000. It is beautiful for situation. It was never in as good a condition, financially, as at the present time. Its population is increasing rapidly. Better men and women than the men and women of Denver cannot be found on the face of the earth. There are bad men here. There are wicked women. There are consummate scoundrels. But there are men and women in Denver, the equals of the best in, even Boston—and, remember, I am partial to Boston!

The building permits in Denver the last season exceeded those of any other city of its size in the United States. The deposits in our banks are far in advance of deposits at any other period in the history of the place.

Denver is a fine summer resort. There is none better. More than 60,000 persons came to see us last summer; 10,000 concluded to remain in Colorado. But the climate in winter is equal to that of summer. It is a good place all the year round. The mercury, it is true, sometimes drops to zero; in fact there are days when it is below zero; but the sun shines, the air is pure and clear, so that one does not realize the fact of the cold as in places of greater humidity.

Our schools are equal to the best in the country. The people are proud, and well they may be of their public schools. There are first-class private schools in Denver, also. Then there is the University of Denver with, this year, about 1,500 students—and the University is free from debt.

The postal business indicates a good degree of vitality. Uncle Sam is doing a fine business for a place of 160,000 people. The 22nd day of December, 1903, for instance, Uncle Samuel carried out of Denver 1,150 sacks of mail. There were 82 registered pouches; there were 3,000 pieces of registered mail; the sale of stamps for the day aggregated $3,527, and 800 money orders were issued. How is that for one day's business in the post office of a dead town?

Our municipal administration is not perfect. There are rascalities in connection with our elections. There are ballot-box stuffers. Election thieves have their habitat in Denver. There are those who entertain suspicions as to the spotless purity of some of our judges.

But these things exist in other cities. Denver is bad in this regard. So also is St. Louis, Chicago, San Francisco, New York. The municipal millennium has not been inaugurated even in Boston!

The weak point in the administration of affairs in the United States is in the government of our cities. We may as well confess that we are not past grand masters in the art of governing cities. Here is the greatest peril to our free institutions. We must learn how to govern our cities. This is the matter of supreme importance before the American people to day.

There have been recent labor troubles in Colorado, too.

But where in this broad land are not these troubles found? Colorado is settling her troubles of this character in a way that means peace and business prosperity for years to come.

Has the thought ever entered your mind that the conflict between labor and capital is, practically, at an end? This is a fact. The strife now is between organized and unorganized labor. There are, speaking roughly, and in general terms, in the United States, 2,000,000 of wage-earners organized; there are 8,000,000 of wage-earners unorganized. The organized workingmen, under the leadership of conscienceless demagogues, are making war on the workingmen who do not belong to labor organizations. The question now, so far as the workingman is concerned, is this: HAVE THE 8,000,000 WORKINGMEN WHO ARE NOT ORGANIZED, A RIGHT TO ENTER THE MARKET PLACES AND DISPOSE OF THEIR LABOR AS THEY PLEASE? There can be no reasonable doubt as to the final issue.

The churches are laying foundations. There is, generally, a feeling of fraternity among those who believe in Christ to the saving of the soul. The trend is decidedly in the direction of unity and union on the apostolic foundation. The agreements are magnified. The matters about which there are differences of opinion are relegated to the background, and as a result are being forgotten.

A. A. Arthur Bobs Up Again.

Since my expose of this fellow in the papers, he has traveled through Missouri and was last seen in Armourdale, Kansas City, Kan. He traveled this time under the name of A. B. Carpenter. Claimed to have just returned from Wisconsin, where he was looking after a valuable estate, a portion of which he expected to inherit. He showed a letter of recommendation with the name of C. H. Hilton, Blackwell, Okla., signed to it. Brother Hilton informs me that he gave no such letter to A. A. Arthur or A. B. Carpenter. On the strength of this letter Carpenter(?) borrowed ten dollars of one of our brethren in Chillicothe, Mo. Let all beware of this fellow Arthur. Here is his description again: Sixty-five years old, white hair, beard and mustache; about six feet tall, slightly stooped, weighs nearly two hundred pounds, blue eyes, husky voice.

Yours for a pure ministry,
Topeka, Kan. W. S. LOWE.

Dedication at Spokane, Wash.

Lord's day, Dec. 6, was the goal that for five long years the loyal Disciples of the Central Christian Church had held in view. The occasion was the dedication of their beautiful new church. Brethren and pastors from the rural districts came down to see how it was done, and a vast crowd filled the lower floor and gallery on tiptoe of expectation. Beautiful music and an inspiring sermon prepared the way for the supreme effort, and when Brother Myers challenged the people—the women—dear hearts, were the first to recover their breath and met him fairly with $2,000, and from then on to the close, it was as fine an exhibition of consecrated gift-bearing as one is often privileged to witness. Over $11,000, was raised at the morning service and when the throng filled the great auditorium in the evening, the full $12,000 was quickly raised, and then simply and solemnly the beautiful temple was given over to the glory of God and service of humanity.

The completion of this $40,000 structure in this chief city of the Inland Empire easily marks an epoch in the annals of the Disciples of Christ in all these parts. The building itself is an ornament to any city. A massive granite foundation surmounted by a Romanesque style of architecture in pressed brick in the form of a Greek cross with three magnificent rose windows and many more in allegorical figures are at once a striking feature of the building. A splendid light basement throughout, with the usual Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor, dining and kitchen departments. An especial feature is to be made of the reading-room—the forerunner of an institutional work planned. The auditorium is, with few, if any exceptions, the largest in our brotherhood—the points of the cross being 96 feet. The floor is properly bowled and every seat will command the pulpit and organ loft, which occupies the west rectangle from which circles in either direction a spacious, graceful gallery which is reached by easy flights from the towers at either entrance as well as from the pulpit. The pews are not yet in place, their shipment being delayed, but when properly seated it is believed that from 1,600 to 1,800 may be comfortably cared for. The baptistry is at the right of the singers, back of the pulpit platform, and is reached from a large cloak-room at the side. Altogether it provides a great plant for the carrying on and development of our work in this far northern metropolis.

The faith, purpose and consecration of this small and comparatively poor people deserves highest commendation for their great enterprise for the Lord, while the leader and pastor, B. E. Utz, is simply a marvel of industry, patience, thrift, endurance and long-sighted vision. He has been with this people nearly seven years; he conceived and believed when others laughed and shook their heads. He bears his honors most modestly and the homage and love of the people most humbly. His helpmeet has been his constant source of help and encouragement, and Sister

Utz is equally beloved and honored with him.

The Whitman county co-operation held its sessions the week following the dedication, and its delegates were the guests of the Spokane brethren. Little business was done, but fellowship and preaching services were held morning, afternoon and evening. Sermons were preached by the following brethren, Adams, Beaudreau, Davidson, Messick, Sanders, Pine, Jones, Flinn, Harris, while the writer was commissioned by the pastor to preach the evening sermons for the week. There were two additions by letter. It was a season of delightful fellowship and gracious hospitality. The reports of the brethren were hopeful and encouraging. Several are looking forward toward meetings next month.

We are enjoying our western home and work, and anticipate a pleasant fellowship in this college city.

Dedication at Steubenville, O.

The LaBelle-View Christian Mission Chapel, Steubenville, O., was formally opened on Dec. 6, with J. G. Slayter, a former pastor, now of Akron, O., as master of ceremonies. The lot was a gift from the La Belle-View Land Company of this city, and the chapel was built by the Bible-school of the Christian Church at a cost of $3,100. At the opening services the amount of indebtedness was raised, with the exception of about $400. Dec. 13 a Bible-school was organized with a total attendance of 104. This work has been inaugurated through the untiring efforts and wise management of our pastor, H. H. Moninger and wife, and faithful co-laborers. Brother Moninger will hold a series of meetings in the chapel, beginning the first Sunday in January, and the second week a protracted meeting will begin in the First Church, on Fourth Street, with Bro. Percy Leach, of Iowa, as evangelist.

Dedication at Woburn, Ill.

Bond county, Ill., seems to be congenial soil for the planting of churches where the gospel of Jesus Christ can be preached in its primitive simplicity and purity. The church at Woburn has built a new house of worship, which is "neat, comfortable and commodious." On Lord's day, Dec. 20, we preached the opening sermon and dedicated the house, which was completed with the exception of seats. In addition to money for providing for the indebtedness, we raised enough to pay for seating the house. The seats will be put in before many weeks have elapsed. We were greatly pleased with our visit at Woburn. There is a noble band of brethren at this place, and they are making great sacrifices for the church.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

I have been selling "Non-Alcoholic-Flavoring-Powders" for the past six months, and have made $815.00. Every family buys three or four boxes. The flavoring-powders are better in every respect than the liquid extracts, and are lovely to sell. I do not have to canvass. People send to me for the powders. Any intelligent person can do as well as I, and average $30.00 per week. I get my flavoring-powders from the California Fruit & Chemical Company, St. Louis, Mo. Write them, and they will start you in business.

ROUND OUT THE YEAR

By figuring a little on the future.

If you are looking for opportunity or investment try the Southwest.

All over the Southwest, cities and towns are growing up, expanding, requiring more, demanding more; peopled by eager, pushing, wideawake citizens who see the virtue of encouraging enterprises of every kind, the needfulness of getting more and better facilities, and more hands to develop the country.

Briefly, the condition is this: The Southwest is really in need of nothing save people. More men are wanted. In the Southwest are vast areas of unimproved land—land not yielding the crops of which it is capable. The same thing, in a different way, is true of the towns. Few lines of business are adequately represented. There are openings of all sort—for mills and manufacturing plants, for small stores of all kinds, for banks, newspapers and lumber yards. Mechanics and professional men, both are in demand.

Tell us what you want, how much you have to invest, and we'll help you with information about a good opening.

Harrison, O., Dec. 24, 1903.

CALIFORNIA.—Berkeley, Dec. 18.—Evangelists Galliher and Carroll closed their three weeks' meeting with us at Alexander Valley, Cal., Sunday, Dec. 13. The meeting resulted in ten additions: four by letter and statement, and six by confession and baptism. I preach for them here two Sundays each month.—J. E. HOOD.

Vacaville, Dec. 21.—I have just entered upon the second year of my second pastorate at this place. The church has paid out during the year, for all purposes, over $1,600. There have been 40 additions to the church. The Sunday school has doubled its enrollment and trebled its attendance, and the prospects are brighter than they were a year ago.—J. E. DENTON, pastor.

Santa Rosa, Dec. 16.—Closed a splendid meeting in Lakeport, where Levi McCash is the efficient pastor, with 37 accessions: 32 confessions, one from the Baptists and four by statement. Others soon. The church and community were greatly helped.—ROBERT L. McHATTON.

ILLINOIS.—Windsor, Dec. 21.—Six additions yesterday at regular service: two confessions, four by commendation. Church extended unanimous call for fourth year for part time. I have accepted the work at Hindsboro for one-half time the coming year. Work in good condition.—A. H. HARRELL.

Lanark, Dec. 22.—Evangelist Thos. J. Shuey, of Rock Island, closed a five weeks' meeting here Sunday evening. There were 15 persons who obeyed the gospel. This is a good result in this difficult field, surrounded as we are by Satan and sectarianism. Brother Shuey is a most forceful and eloquent speaker.—B. L. WRAY, pastor.

Bloomington, Dec. 21.—Meeting at Roanoke resulted in the addition of 15 members: seven by baptism, two reclaimed, three from the denominations and three by letter. A baptistry was put in and the interior of the house greatly improved. Two baptisms elsewhere not previously reported.—J. O. WALTOR AND WIFE, evangelists.

New Bedford, Dec. 22.—Our meeting here closed last Sunday night with 30 additions: two by letter, one from the Methodists, three from the Baptists and 24 by baptism. Evangelist J. A. Bennett did the preaching.—J. F. SMITH, pastor.

Atlanta, Dec. 21.—Our annual revival closed last night. It was a success in every way. A good hearing given to the straightforward message of the gospel. No feelings hurt, and many careless ones made to think. Thirty-three added to the church, 20 of which were baptisms. It took 20 minutes to raise the total expense of the meeting, which was $174. We take pleasure in saying that Mr. Monser is one of the most fearless, capable and successful personal workers we ever knew. The state board has wisely chosen him to open several important new fields in northern Illinois, beginning with Polo in January. He will establish churches in Polo, De Kalb, Rock Falls, Savannah, and perhaps other cities. He hopes to spend July and August in Aurora. A brother here makes a gift of $25 toward a work in the last named place. The brethren in this state will watch the results in these fields with great interest. That churches will be organized is a settled fact.—S. S. LAPPIN.

Camp Point, Dec. 21.—Bro. J. M. Lowe, of Galesburg, recently closed a nearly four weeks' meeting at Pleasant View, a pioneer mother church near Camp Point, Ill., and the home church of his boyhood. The visible results were eight confessions, two transfers of membership, one from the United Brethren, one from the Methodists, one from the Baptists, all baptized believers. In the same pulpit, by telling the same story and with the same effect, Brother Lowe assisted the children of his old-time Sunday-school classmates and associates in obeying the same Jesus and buried them with him in baptism in the same baptistry in which the administrator himself had been baptized 17 years since. Brother Lowe makes a strong plea for the old story. With much tenderness and sympathy for the sinner, yet a bold, unflinching assailant of sin, he at once wins the hearts of all. He speaks with double force. The force of mature thought, well wrought out, clothed in well selected words, spoken with a zeal and earnestness born of love and a pure life.—J. E. MEATHERINGHAM.

Toledo, Dec. 21.—Our meeting here is moving along very encouragingly. Nine added to date, eight of them yesterday. This church has been pastorless for over a year, and hence is very much run down. We want a pastor for them; who will take it? We may as well report also the Sandoval meeting that I closed Nov. 29. The meeting lasted 29 days and was well attended all the time. The immediate results were 20 added to the membership as follows: 15 by primary obedience, one from the Baptists, one from the Methodists, two reclaimed. Of those baptized two were Methodists, one Catholic, one a Lutheran, one a Swedenborgian, one a Congregationalist, or raised so. The church was much helped. At the last service the unanimous vote of the brethren was that the church was in the best condition for aggressive work it had been in since the house was built, 14 years ago. Much of the credit is due to the faithful services of their pastor, Bro. R. Burt Doan. He is a true yoke fellow.—F. L. DAVIS, evangelist.

Elliotstown.—Our seventh district evangelist, Bro. R. Leland Brown, just closed a successful meeting here with 35 additions: 21 baptisms, five from denominations, seven by statement and two reclaimed. The general impression is that Brother Brown is thoroughly acquainted with the Bible and well knows how to present it. The church is well pleased and much encouraged.—FRANK SHANE, pastor.

INDIANA.—New Albany, Dec. 21.—One confession yesterday, and one baptism Wednesday night at Park Church.—WM. A. WARD.

Hammond, Dec. 21.—Two confessions at Hammond yesterday. Rally Day and Christmas programs combined Christmas eve. Good offering in store. Church mortgage to be burned same eve.—C. J. SHARP.

Knightstown, Dec. 23.—Two more additions at regular services here Sunday. A father and mother in middle life made the good confession, never having been a member of any church.—ALLEN T. SHAW, pastor.

Madison, Dec. 21.—Two young men added yesterday at regular services, one confession and one by statement. We close our work here next Lord's day, and begin with the H Street Church, Washington, D. C., January 1. Bro. S. W. Traum has been chosen as our successor.—J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

LaFayette.—The first Lord's day in December was a great day in the history of the First Christian Church of this city. On this day at the morning service we observed our second anniversary since we began our work in this city. At this time we had reports from every department of the work, showing a very encouraging and inspiring growth in every department. Four additions by letter during the day. In the two years there have been 124 additions to the congregation just at regular work. We closed the year with every dollar of the current expenses provided for, and four dollars in the treasury. But that in which

CURES DEAFNESS AND CATARRH.

ONLY ONE REMEDY IS CERTAIN, AND THAT IS "ACTINA."

Deafness is the direct result, in 95 out of every hundred cases, of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The effect of catarrh is to fill up and clog the air passages with deposits, these in a short time stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Deafness ensues, and the hearing cannot be restored until these deposits are removed. It is impossible to reach the inner ear by probing or spraying, and that is the reason why the greatest aurists and physicians find their skill baffled. But science has discovered a way to reach these heretofore inaccessible portions of the head. This discovery has been named "Actina." It is a vapor current which, passing through the Eustachian tubes, attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhal deposits, so that they pass away, and at the same time loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, so that they immediately respond to the slightest sound vibration. Ringing noises in the head are also caused by catarrh, and are the premonitory signs of deafness. "Actina" never fails to cure this distressing affliction; we have known cases of years' standing to be cured in three weeks. "Actina" is also a certain specific for asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headaches, all of which are either directly or indirectly caused by catarrh. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case; we give advice free, and positive proof of cures. Prof. Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease also sent free. Address New York & London Electric Ass'n, Dept. 203D, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

we most delight is the spiritual growth and fellowship in the congregation. Our congregation is united as possibly never before. About two months ago they extended me a unanimous call to continue indefinitely as their pastor. Those who have been long associated with this work say they believe it is in better condition now than ever before. At the evening service we observed Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, and an interesting program was rendered, at which time the seating capacity of our large auditorium was taxed to about its limit. We wish our friends and acquaintances to know and rejoice with us in that the Lord has so richly blessed the work in this city. May we prove worthy of continued and even greater blessings in the future.—C. H. TROUT, pastor.

IOWA.—Maxwell, Dec. 22.—Our meeting at Grimes, Ia., closed with 42 additions: 23 baptisms, remainder statement and letter. The church is in a condition to do great work in the future. W. H. Scott led us in our efforts to accomplish great things because of his great confidence in God. We rejoice in our harvest, and only pray that the truth may be sustained.—G. E. ROBERTS, pastor.

Mason City.—Work in good condition here; two baptisms yesterday. We hold a meeting in January with home forces. This is a great church. A more consecrated band I have not known.—W. W. BURKS.

Sac City, Dec. 14.—There were two additions here last night. The work is progressing nicely.—E. N. TUCKER, pastor.

Bedford, Dec. 23.—Our meeting closed Lord's day with 80 additions. Hamilton and Wilkinson were with us four and a half weeks. They are a great team. Much good has been accomplished. Bible truths were set forth forcibly and fearlessly. Great interest and large audiences through the entire meeting.—LEE FURGESSON, pastor.

KANSAS.—Winfield, Dec. 21.—Our new work in Winfield begins very delightfully with three additions, by restoration. I think I have never entered a field so ready for the harvest as this. We are planning for things during 1904.—ALBERT NICHOLS.

Topeka, Dec. 23.—Just closed a good meeting at Plainville, Kan. This was our second meeting with A. R. Poe and wife, and we found them most excellent people to work with. Stockton, the first meeting point, and Plainville have each had one half time preaching. They will now have full time, and

SCOTT & BOWNE, 409 Pearl Street, New York.

Brother Poe will give all his time to Plainville. Plans were drawn up during the meeting and the latter place will enlarge its church building to seating capacity of over 400.—CLARENCE A. HILL AND WIFE, evangelists.

Wellington, Dec. 22.—One addition here Sunday by baptism. We begin a meeting for M. Lee Sorey at Arkansas City Jan. 4.—H. M. BARNETT.

Topeka, Dec. 20.—I have just returned from Springfield, Ill., where I assisted J. E. Lynn at the West Side Christian Church. Brother Lynn has done a great work there; we had 36 additions in 17 days. After the holidays I go to Augusta, Kan., to assist W. E. Harland.—V. E. RIDENOUR.

Wichita, Dec. 21.—Three added since last report—two by confession and baptism, one by letter.—W. T. McLAIN.

Norwich, Dec. 20.—Closed a meeting with my home church, Conway Springs, Dec. 7, with 37 additions, 22 baptisms, making 108 to this church since last March. Began here Dec. 8. Twelve additions to date. Bro. L. B. Myers is their minister. He is one of our great preachers.—J. T. BAYS.

South Haven, Dec. 22.—Our meeting at Hunnewell, with Mrs. Clara H. Hazelrigg, evangelist, closed Sunday night. It was a great victory over sin. The entire community was wondrously stirred and 69 added to the church. Forty-two came by confession and baptism, and 27 from the denominations and other sources.—J. M. MORRIS, pastor.

MISSOURI.—Grant City, Dec. 11.—Two added by letter and one baptism here yesterday.—J. A. MCKENZIE.

Shelbyville, Dec. 21.—Two additions yesterday and one not previously reported.—CLARENCE E. WAGNER.

Independence, Dec. 20.—We had a good service this morning. I presented the claims of our "aged ministers" and the congregation responded with an offering of $100. There were two additions by letter.—L. J. MARSHALL.

Carrollton, Dec. 21.—Yesterday was a good day with us. Seven added, two by confession, two from Baptists and three by letter. Sixty took part in endeavor, and the Juniors are flourishing as never before.—E. H. KELLAR.

Norborne, Dec. 21.—Baptized six at Bogard yesterday and received one by letter. Called for another year.—C. C. TAYLOR.

Cartersville, Dec. 22.—We are in a good meeting here. Thirteen to date and house crowded. C. H. Altheide, of Bloomfield, Iowa, is my singer, and a good one. Bro. E. M. Barney, of Webb City, has just closed a meeting with 51 additions.—D. W. CAMPBELL, evangelist.

Mountain Grove, Dec. 22.—Our meeting closed at Liberty Ridge, Neb., Dec. 16. Seventeen additions, fourteen confessions, two by letter, one reclaimed. The meeting closed too soon. It should have continued until Dec 21. The elders thought the people had been warned enough. Liberty Church has some excellent people. Brother Jackson, their efficient pastor, is held in highest esteem, and is doing excellent work.—E. W. YOCUM.

Milan, Dec. 22.—Last Sunday, Dec. 20, the writer closed his work with the Christian Church here. We shall also close our work at Green City next Lord's day, Dec. 27. We have labored with the church here for four years, and one year with the church at Green City. During the past four years 318 members have been added as follows: Milan, 94; Green City, 50; elsewhere in Sullivan Co., 57; and 129 in the adjacent counties. At Milan an old indebtedness of $144 against the church was discharged, and $1,350 expended on building. At Green City an indebtedness of $105 against the church was liquidated, and $125 spent on building and for church furniture. These two churches desire to employ an able man for 1904. Correspondents should address Dr. McGee, Green City, Mo., and Jno. W. Bingham, Milan, Mo. We go from this field to Marceline, Mo., where we are to begin the first Lord's day in January, 1904.—ALFRED MUNYON.

Marvville, Dec. 26.—Meeting continues here with 48 accessions up to date. Bro. Sprague, my musical director, has been disappointed in his arrangements for January, and can be had for a meeting in that month. Write him here.—R. A. OMER, evangelist.

Moberly, Dec. 26.—Central Church has re-organized and is getting in shape for some aggressive work. One baptism last Sunday. I am very much encouraged by the outlook. Brother Berry, of East Side, will remain indefinitely. The two churches will co-operate in week of prayer.—JAMES M. CRUTCHER.

MONTANA.—Hamilton, Dec. 22.—Our meeting of 19 days closed last Sunday night with 17 additions, 14 by baptism. Bro. F. M. Minnick, of Anaconda, did the preaching for us, and his plain, scriptural teaching will keep on bearing fruit.—R. M. DUNGAN.

NEW YORK.—Buffalo, Dec. 22.—Two more (husband and wife) have recently responded to the gospel invitation and will join us in extending the kingdom of peace. The college students are at home enjoying the holiday festivities.—B. S. FERRALL.

OHIO.—Newark, Dec. 21.—Four added last night; three confessions and one by statement. This makes 11 since last report.—H. NEWTON MILLER.

Bellaire, Dec. 21.—Our short meeting with Prof. J. Walter Wilson, as singer, closed with 18 added. This makes about 350 added to this church since I came, September, 1902. Rally Day offering for home missions was $140—double that of last year.—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

New Philadelphia, Dec. 22.—W. S. Goode, minister of Central Christian Church, Youngstown, O., has closed a two weeks' meeting with the New Philadelphia Church. Brother Goode's plain, practical sermons tell of the very heart and life of the gospel, and the church was built up in the most holy faith. There were 13 additions; nine baptisms, four otherwise.—C. B. REYNOLDS, minister.

Collinwood, Dec. 21.—Bible-school contest closed yesterday with the "Blues" slightly in the lead. Largest attendance reached of a Lord's day, 338. Totals for the three months are as follows: "Reds," attendance, 1,613; collections, $62.11. "Blues," attendance, 1,642; collections, $63.88. The pastor's Bible-class now numbers 114. The average attendance of the school before the contest began was but little over 100. Both church and school have been greatly benefited. One addition by letter since last report.—D. R. KING.

Fayette, Dec. 20.—Our meeting of 22 days with evangelists Shearer and Harrold closed to-night with 38 confessions; two by statement, two reclaimed, and one by letter, 43 in all. It has been the best series of meetings held for many a year in this church. They were conducted in such a way that not only were additions gained, but men and women have a higher respect for the church and Christianity than ever before. Brother Shearer's methods are certainly the cleanest and best of any evangelist I have ever worked with. He has made it a study, and that not without its results. He has a worthy helper in Brother Harrold, his singer.—W. S. COOK.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.—Norman, Dec. 21.—We had a great day yesterday. Raised $206 to clear back indebtedness. Had already raised $100 by a $1 crusade. This leaves the work in fine shape for my successor. We have had 186 additions in twenty-seven months. This has been a constant growth. I baptized three young ladies last Saturday afternoon, and one young man last night. I will begin at Cleburne, Texas, on the first Lord's day in January.—J. G. CREASON.

Newkirk, Dec. 17.—In a short meeting at Ceres, Okla., I did the singing. Bro. C. H. White, pastor of the Perry Church, did the preaching. Thirteen accessions, church organized, and the brethren at Ceres much encouraged with the outlook. Brother White is indeed a true yoke-fellow and a powerful gospel preacher.—F. D. WHARTON.

Newkirk, Dec. 24.—Last Lord's day we had seven accessions; five were by primary obedience and two from the denominations. The Ladies' Aid Society has just presented Mrs. Wharton with a very valuable dress, and the congregation presented Mrs. Wharton's husband with a fine overcoat, as Christmas presents. I go next week to assist Bro. C. H. White in a meeting at Perry, Okla. Wishing the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a happy New Year and continued success.—F. D. WHARTON.

OREGON.—Portland, Dec. 21.—State Evangelist J. B. Holmes, of Eugene, closed a meeting of three weeks and three days on the 15th inst. which resulted in eleven baptisms and five by letter and statement, one of these from the Methodists. Besides this, the church debt, which has hung over this congregation through all its history, was raised; $1,926 was raised to meet a debt of $1,615. Brother Holmes closed his meeting with a stereopticon lecture, which was greatly enjoyed. This has been the best meeting in the history of this church.—ALBYN ESSON, minister.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Reading, Dec. 21.—The Trustee Board of the First Christian Church of this place, has decided to put eight new leaded glass windows in the main auditorium of its church property. After this is done, steps will be taken to have the pipe organ removed from the gallery to the chancel and a new baptistry and pulpit built. Yesterday was C. W. B. M. day, and in the evening Mrs. Weaver had charge of the regular service and made an address on the women's work. After this part of the service, the writer baptized Mr. and Mrs. Harry Fager and Mr. Thomas B. Lake. The Bible-school will render its Christmas exercises next Lord's day evening.—H. G. WEAVER.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLANDS.—Montague, Dec. 21.—On Dec. 13 we preached our first anniversary sermon in the Montague Church. In that sermon it was shown that Sunday congregations had been large, mid-week prayer-meeting well attended, Sunday-school increased in number and interest, salary paid in full, current expenses met, $93 given for foreign missions, besides home missions and other local benevolent and philanthropic expenditures, 19 additions at Montague, 10 at Murray Harbor, and four at Charlottetown, during a recent meeting. We begin a new year with bright hopes and great expectations. We shall attempt great things for God, and expect great things from God.—W. R. MOTLEY, minister.

TEXAS.—Houston, Dec. 25.—I have just closed a little meeting in Norton, Kan. There was no preparation, the pastor being new to the field. There are some lovely people there, but were all tired out, having just completed a "Mother Goose" carnival, which had consumed their time and strength. A minister told me that I was the eighth man to hold a meeting since he has been there, and only one succeeded, and that was in a union meeting. I remained but two weeks and a day. There were but six accessions, but two of these, who were by statement, were Bro. H. D. Funk and wife, who are excellent singers and should be kept in the evangelistic field. They are not only rare singers, but are consecrated Christians. Let some evangelist write them at once. Brother Funk is a fine cornetist. A L. Drummond is the popular pastor.—E. W. BRICKERT, evangelist.

WASHINGTON.—Dayton, Dec. 21.—Our meeting at this place, which has been in progress 21 days, still continues. Up to last night we had had just 66 accessions. Our new house of worship, the largest in the city, has not been sufficient, at some meetings, to hold all the people. Brother Stephens and wife are giving the best of satisfaction in the part they are taking in the meeting.—H. T. MORRISON, pastor.

Chehalis, Dec. 21.—State Evangelist J. M. Morris began a meeting here Nov. 19, continuing to last night, Dec. 20, with 21 additions, doubling the membership. A lot has been purchased and a building will soon be erected. Brother Morris is a strong, plain, practical speaker. His next meeting will be at Centralia, Wash. We go to the assistance of A. C. Vail, pastor, North Yakama, Wash., beginning Jan. 3.—GEO. A. WEBB AND WIFE, singing evangelists.

NEW YEAR'S MESSAGES.

A New Year's Message.

"The morning cometh!" cried the watchman of Mount Seir when asked, "What of the night?" We turn from the old year as from the night to fix our gaze upon the new as upon the opening of the day with its accompaniment of sunshine and toil, of vanishing darkness and growing light. The pessimist will be always asking, "What of the night?" and owl-like, hoot in dolorous tones at the blazing noonday. But we are of the day, and as we stand at the opening of 1904, big with glorious possibilities, may not triumphant faith cry, "The morning cometh!"

G. F. ASSITER.

New Year's Optimism.

Personally I have long held the conviction that an earnest, conscientious, hard-working man should fully expect that his highest and best aspirations and ideals would be largely realized as the years went by. Perhaps they will not come to him in just the way he had hoped. But he will eventually possess them. Every year increases my faith in this general principle. If true of the individual, why may it not be true of a body of people, such as the church? And if true of one church, why not of a great body, such as our people? Why not then enter upon 1904 with high ideals and hopes, and God will bless us.

The Best of All.

The year 1904 will be the best of all. Righteousness and goodness and sense and abilities of every sort are gathering momentum and power all the while. Each year is the heir of all the past. The year 1904 will be the rightful heir of all the centuries of years gone by. It will be, therefore, a better and more glorious year than any of its predecessors.

Each year is the best in the world's history. It is the best because it is the last. Every succeeding year of the world's history will grow richer, because we will carry into it the accumulated wisdom and goodness and brightness of all previous years. 1904 is going to be the best of all, and I am going to have some part in making it such!

J. N. JESSUP.

A New Year's Greeting.

Anno Domini 1904 draws apace. How fast the years come and go! The chariots of heaven drive hard. But shall man repine? The Church of God, awake to the call of duty, with stentorian voice says, No. Let us hush the requiem of the dying year and catch the bugle-blast of "Forward march!" It sounds from the skies above. It echoes from the hills afar. God's hosts must not be idle. This is our day. This is our busy day, lest to-morrow we suffer. It is written somewhere: "Wisdom is knowing what to do next. Virtue is doing it." With the wisdom of Solomon, the virtue of David, and the "follow me" of the unconquered Christ, may we rush into the conflict. Victory over self, victory over sin, victory over error, victory over every foe. This is our necessity. "Soldiers of Christ, arise and put your armor on."

A. W. KOKENDOFFER.

Mexico, Mo.

It is now four full years since I have been able to engage in any form of active service. But through these years of silence and of suffering, my interest in the redemptive work of God and its agencies has deepened. I have experienced a growing apprehension of the greatness and the glory of the ultimate purpose of God. My hope enlarges. The dramatic movement of creation, the sweep of the main currents of history through the centuries, the noblest instincts and aspirations of the race—all unite to confirm the brightest predictions of revelation. There is increasing light. There is a more general perception of the immanence of God. There is a better understanding of the meaning and majesty of the mission of Christ. There is a growing recognition of the possibilities in every human soul of personal fellowship with God, and we are coming to see that the very essence of salvation consists in getting right with him. All righteousness springs from this, all spiritual growth and all divine glory. My face is steadfastly set toward a broadening and brightening future.

Missouri Mission Notes.

The more we study the work of state missions the larger its importance and necessity appears. Not only so, but the economy with which the work is carried on, the cost in actual money and the results from the outlay are such as must commend themselves to every thoughtful business man. This train of thought has been suggested by a letter from a regular contributor, not only to our state work, but to every other great interest amongst us. Some one had been talking to him about the great cost of all this mission work. This charge has been answered again and again, but still there are individuals and even so-called religious papers, who go on, parrot-like, repeating the same old falsehoods. Let us see.

The churches of Missouri sent last year to the treasury of our board $7,370. With this to spend, we had 11,113 days' work, over 7,000 sermons, 38 congregations organized and 4,120 souls added to the Lord. We challenge comparison with any other enterprise on earth. In results obtained from the money invested, there is nothing like it. Or take another line. Six years ago we employed a man for southwest Missouri, Jos. Gaylor. We have paid him $1,200 for the six years' work. In that time he has organized 25 congregations, has built 15 church houses at an average cost of $2,000; raised $10,000 to employ pastors, and won 1,200 souls for the Lord. Will you think about that, each soul brought to Jesus by this man of God has cost our work just one dollar? But during that time he has raised $30,000 for church building, and $10,000 for other purposes, making $40,000 all told. Then he has organized 25 congregations that are to-day workshops of God for the salvation of souls and the building up of the saints.

Can the record be duplicated by any other business in the world? How much more would one want for the money expended than that we have set forth? Surely the man who murmurs at the "cost" of such things is either woefully ignorant, or else he wilfully misrepresents the facts in the case. These, however, thank God, are exceptional cases, just one here and there; the great majority of our people are happy in the results coming to them from the money they give. Many have been the congratulations that have come to us over last year's work, for which we are exceedingly thankful.

We had determined to make this present year the very best in every way, and plans were laid accordingly. True, the money for any enlargement was not in sight, in fact we had less money to begin the year with than at any time for a number of years. But we had great faith in a mighty brotherhood of men and women of God, we planned by faith, not by sight. A peculiar chain of unfortunate circumstances, however, has kept the receipts down far below actual needs, and you know what that means.

We still have faith in the brethren; it has not been removed, nor even shaken, but we must turn some of it into cold cash; no, cash warm with the heart's love of a devoted and loyal people, if the work is to be done. It is only in this way that the work can go on.

We want to make this special plea to all our churches who, for any reason, have not taken the offering since Oct. 1. Will you not select some Sunday in January, 1904, and keep state missions prominently before the people until then and raise the biggest offering that you can? If you can't do it in January, then some other time; remember, an offering should be taken in every church before June 1, 1904.

Praying for your most earnest co-operation in this glorious work, I am as ever,

T. A. ABBOTT.

The Psychology of Child Development. By Irving King. Introduction by John Dewey. (The University of Chicago Press. $1 net.)

Mr. King's study of the child mind and its process of development cannot fail to be of interest and profit to anyone who is willing to dispense with the usual anecdotes of juvenile precocity and to find the significant phases of childhood in the things that are normal rather than in those that are abnormal. Mr. King departs widely from the old-style child-study, which assumed that the human mind, whether infantile, adolescent or adult, was made up of a lot of separate and distinct faculties, and busied itself with finding the order in which these faculties appeared in the child and with noting analogies between the child mind and the adult mind. The assumption of this method was that the child differed from the adult only quantitatively, not qualitatively. It looked upon the child as a little man and therefore interpreted the child's mental processes always in terms of adult experience. The point of view adopted in Mr. King's book is one which has been most ably expounded by Prof. John Dewey, who writes the introduction. It looks upon the child's consciousness as a whole, a vague and hazy whole at first. The various elements, which in the adult mind are apparently so distinct that they have been called separate "faculties," are gradually differentiated out of this complex child consciousness in which they were implicit. The whole point of the study is to interpret these developing processes in terms of child life, to find what they mean to the child, rather than to trace their analogies to the adult processes. The practical application is found in the study of the child's growth during school years and of the interest in various kinds of books and games. The book is technical in its method and vocabulary, presupposes some acquaintance with modern psychology, and deserves to be studied rather than casually read.

A Century of Expansion. By Willis Fletcher Johnson, A. M., L. H. D. (The Macmillan Co. $1.50 net.)

"From Washington at Great Meadows to Dewey in Manila Bay, the span, in both time and space, is enormous, but it is a span of unbroken links of cause and effect, coherent, logical and inevitable." This is the author's thesis. The proof of it is given in a recital of the leading facts of American history, so far as they are related to territorial expansion and the effects of that growth upon the government and life of the nation, from the time when the British colonies along the Atlantic began to expand westward across the Alleghenies at the expense of the French dominion, down to the acquisition of Porto Rico and the Philippines and the decision of the Supreme Court that the constitution does not extend to annexed territory. The narrative portions are clear, compact and, we believe, correct. But the book is not essentially a narrative history. It is a philosophy of the history of expansion. As indicated in the above quotation, the sequence of cause and effect is the matter which receives chief emphasis. Needless to state, the author is an ardent expansionist. The doctrines for which he argues have so recently been political issues that it is not easy to avoid partisan bias in the discussion, but he has succeeded in the attempt as well as anyone could be expected to at the present time.

The Red Poocher. By Seumas MacManus. (Funk & Wagnalls Co. pp. 130. $.75)

A "poocher" is a poacher. That point being made clear, the reader will at once divine that the story relates to the exploits of a game-thief in stealing game from a private preserve. But the reader is not likely to anticipate the clever and original devices by which this accomplished rascal managed to "shoot over" a certain Irish estate four times almost in annual succession, in spite of every precaution to catch him. There are some somber phases of Irish life and these have been exploited in recent literature, but this little book is bubbling over with fun and Irish humor. Tomas Dubh, the gamekeeper, who tells the stories, is himself a character worthy of any man's acquaintance.

A Short History of Christianity. By John Horsch. (Pub. by the author, 107 University St., Cleveland, O. $1 net.)

This book has for the unlearned reader the merit of simplicity of diction and of presupposing nothing in the way of acquaintance with either secular or religious history. The author's claim to give "the history of practical Christian piety rather than of the professedly Christian organizations and movements" finds its chief justification, if at all, in the hortatory and homiletic style of the narrative. The history is inadequate, confused and unsatisfactory.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles, and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate, people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

The Quiet Hour

The years, the years, how swift they fly!
Our work will soon be done.
Then comes the rest for which we sigh—
Life's crown in conflict won.

This is a healthy, a practical, a working faith. First, that a man's business is to do the will of God. Second, that God takes upon Himself the care of that man. Third, and therefore, that a man ought never to be afraid of anything.—George MacDonald.

Be strong!
We are not here to play, to dream, to drift.
We have hard work to do, and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle; face it. 'Tis God's gift.

Be strong!
It matters not how deep intrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day, how long,
Faint not, fight on! To-morrow comes the song!
—Malbie D. Babcock.

We do not praise God enough, either in the sanctuary or in our homes. The apostle's injunction is, "In everything give thanks!" Some have had a year of trials and bereavements; they need to be cheered up. Others are perplexed by mysterious providences; they need to be reminded that behind the clouds still reigns and shines the Infinite Love. If the year has brought to some full barns and large bank deposits, it is a good time to exhort to large consecration of "tithes for God's store house." Why should not every pulpit ring a loud peal of gratitude on one day in every year, and every sanctuary resound with a strong and full chorus of happy voices? Nor should any prosperous family sit down to a feast of fat turkeys unless they have made some poor man's house warm and his table to smoke with bounties.—Theodore L. Cuyler, D.D.

"Every one that asketh receiveth." Take care that you ask enough, and that the gift is granted. Some do not realize how God speaks immediately to the heart of the man who quietly prays, and trusts in His love. Sometimes (permit a personal word) I have gone into the presence of God perturbed and anxious about something put in my charge; I have knelt, and have prayed that He would take the helm back, because I was not fit to hold it. Somehow, the effect of the prayer was to quiet me down, and I have come out stronger to take up my work again, and do it with whatever power has been granted unto me, knowing that the dynamic of all spiritual success was not in me but in God.

We kneel—how weak! We rise—how full of power!

Why therefore should we do ourselves this wrong,

Or others—that we are not always strong,
That ever we are overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with Thee?
—R. J. Campbell.

O Lord of the rolling years, who upon Thy eternal throne beholdest the generations of men come and go, so teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. Help us to live and labor for and to love the things that are eternal, so that we may share Thy endless life, through Him who is the way, the truth and the life. Amen!

Family Circle

My Christmas Chat Renewed.

[DEDICATED TO PERRY C. AND J. BRECKEN-RIDGE ELLIS.]

By J. W. Ellis.

Grown men, my sons. 'Tis no vain pride
I hold this Christmas talk—
Strong for the right, God by your side,
With whom you strive to walk.

No longer boys! How years have fled
On eagle wings, indeed!
Yet kindly skies bend o'er our head,
And bless us in our need.

You stand no more by wall or door,
As once to show how tall
You'd grown—so I did long before.
The years have changed it all!

Your childish prattle by my knee
Made father's heart rejoice,
And angels' eyes grew bright to see,
I doubt not, two such boys!

I told you long of Santa Claus,
His reindeer-harnessed sled—
Until by mother's wholesome laws
You found reluctant bed.

Four little stockings on the tree
Were sure their wealth to gain;
Four loving hands were there to see
They were not hung in vain.

And when the early morn grew red,
Kissed open childish eyes,
How eagerly you sprang from bed!
How joyous soon your cries!

We verified, in infancy
Heaven lay for us so near,
Sweet messages for you and me
Were whispered in the ear.

[Heaven need not be now far away;
We make the distance less
By faith and prayer, if, day by day,
We seek God's righteousness.]

A father's and a mother's love
Forget your strong manhood—
And follow you where'er you rove
With deep solicitude.

What though our locks are streaked with gray?
Life has for all sweet charm,
For ever blest and strong are they
Who lean on God's right arm.

'Fraid Cat.

"'Fraid cat! 'fraid cat!" cried Burn Roberts, in a sing song voice.

"Well, maybe I am," muttered Billy; but he stubbed sturdily along and refused even to glance at the yellow and golden russets which hung so temptingly over farmer Appleby's wall.

"You're 'fraid of his dog Bulger," declared Burn, tagging on behind him. "I tell you Bulger's gone. Somebody's got him away from old Appleby."

"I don't care," Billy said. "I'm not going to take his apples."

"You're 'fraid."

"Maybe I am," and Billy still kicked the round pebbles before him: "but I'm not afraid of Bulger."

"What is it, then?" demanded Burn. "Old Appleby never'd catch us. He's lame."

"I'm 'fraid 'cause it's mean, that's why. I'm 'fraid my mother'd hear of it if I should do such a thing."

"Pooh! she'll never know it," Burn said.

"Well, I'd know it, and I'd remember it and be ashamed to look her in the face. She hates a thief."

"Hold on!" cried Burn, in some wrath. "Who's a thief? 'Tisn't stealing to take a few apples. They hang over the road, anyway."

"But this isn't a public road; it's Appleby's lane. The land belongs to him. You can't tell me; I guess my father wasn't a lawyer for nothing; and I want to be one myself, some day. I'd be beginning fine if I broke the laws myself, wouldn't I?"

"Well, you are the funniest boy!" Burn declared, and just then they came in sight of the old Appleby house—not the one the farmer was living in then, but the homestead where his grandfather had lived, its walls brown from the weather, and its broken roof green with moss.

"Let's hurry by," Burn said, in a low tone. It was late in the afternoon and the shadows were long. Dark hemlocks sheltered the old house on two sides, and made the place seem very weird and gloomy. "They say it's haunted," Burn continued.

"How you talk!" exclaimed Billy. But his eyes grew round. The boy doesn't live upon whose imagination a ghost story will not make an impression.

"It's a fact. Our hired man was past here last night, and he says he heard an awful racket. He says he thought the ghosts were holdin' a convention, and they were howlin' and snarlin' like half a dozen dogs an' as many cats, in a fight."

"You say Bulger's lost?" queried Billy, stopping by the sagging gate.

"Humph! what's Bulger got to do with the ghosts?—nless they scared him so he cleared out. They say he pulled his chain loose, night before last, and ran away. Appleby was round our place hunting for him. Sh! what's that?"

He clung to Billy's arm. There was some sort of a racket in the tumbledown building, and then a mournful howl issued from within. Burn was ready to run.

"Hold on!" exclaimed his friend. "Let's see what it is."

"I don't care what it is," Burn said. "Well, I do. Wait till I look 'round."

"I dunno; it's gettin' late," Burn said, wistfully. "I've got to do the chores yet, Billy."

"I'll not be a minute."

Billy entered the yard and approached the open doorway of the old house. Burn didn't care to remain alone, nor did he wish to enter with his friend, and he pranced back and forth from the gate to the door several times before he finally followed Billy. He made up his mind at last that it was better to have company, even inside the haunted house, than to stand alone outside with the lengthening shadows of the hemlocks mantling everything about him.

Billy was at the head of the cellar stairs. "It's down yonder," he whispered to Burn.

"Well—let it stay there!" chattered his friend. But Billy went downstairs and Burn, rather than be left behind, followed him. But when another mournful howl came out of the dark depths of the old cellar, he almost ran away. Terror itself was all that kept him. He couldn't run.

"Wha—what is it?" he whispered.

Billy had been shocked, too, by the nearness of the sound, but he stopped only long enough to enable his eyes to see a little better in the dark. Then he pushed on, and the next sound the frightened Burn heard was the delighted barking of a dog and the laughter of Billy.

"It's old Bulger!" called Billy from the darkness. "Good old dog! did he get caught here? There! that'll do, old fellow; don't eat me quite up."

The next instant Farmer Appleby's big watch-dog dashed against Burn, toppled him over in his delight, licked his face, and rushed upstairs.

Billy came out of the darkness and helped Burn up, laughing. "The poor fellow had got his chain caught under a cask there. He had chased a woodchuck, or something of the kind, in here, and then couldn't get free. He'd dug a hole pretty nearly big enough to bury himself in. No wonder he howled."

But Burn didn't say anything until they got outside. Then he breathed a sigh. "I take it all back about your being a 'fraid cat," he said.—Sabbath-School Visitor.

A Modern Hero.

Among the many queer stories told in regard to Emperor William of Germany, is the following which Christian men women may study with profit. It demonstrates the nobility there is in being true to convictions of duty even amid tremendously embarrassing circumstances.

The story is that, in a fit of impatience, because the speed of his yacht was slowed in entering a certain harbor, he came in conflict with the pilot, an old Norwegian named Nordhuus, who knew the dangerous character of the channel, and that faster speed would mean a wreck. The emperor tried to take charge, and rang the bell for full speed.

Nordhuus placed himself in the way, and, leaning over the wheel, called down the tube to the engine-room, "Half speed. Never mind the bell!" "You countermand my orders!" cried the emperor, giving the bell another jerk.

"Disregard the bell!" called Nordhuus through the tube, unmoved.

The emperor glared at the pilot a moment, and then drawing himself up stiffly, said majestically, "Go below, and report yourself under arrest!"

"Leave the bridge!" responded Nordhuus, grimly, grasping the wheel more firmly. "This ship is in my charge, and I'll have no interference with my orders from king or seaman!"

The officers of the deck hurried silently aft, wishing well to the pilot. Nordhuus had the law as well as common sense on his side, and stood at his post, unshaken by threats, unheed-

After Taking.

Little Archie Richards, at the close of the Christmas dinner, sat at the table with his face suffused with tears. His mother was greatly troubled. With a sweet smile and with gentle intonation she put one arm around her little baby boy and asked:

"What is it mamma's little darling wants?"

But "mamma's little darling" continued to cry.

Mamma made another effort to find out the trouble.

"Does mamma's baby want some more cake?" she asked.

"No'm," said the child, while the tears continued to flow.

"Does he want some more pie?" she further inquired.

"No'm," he further replied.

"Well," said the mother, making a last effort to reach his case, "tell mamma what baby wants."

The little boy managed somehow to say between sobs, "I want some of this out I've got in."—Lippincott's.

The Old Farm.

The old farmhouse I see again;
In its low, dark eaves the twittering wren
It nested long ago;
And I breathe once more the south wind's balm
And sit and watch in the twilight's calm,
The bat flit to and fro.

The white cows lie at the pasture bars,
And the dairy, cool, with its tins and jars,
Is stored with curds and cream;
There's somebody putting the things to right,
And through the windows I see a light
From the tallow candle gleam.

The garden is rich with its old-time bloom,
And I catch, in fancy, the faint perfume
Of blossoms dank with dew;
And over it all is the starlit dome,
And round about it the peace of home—
How it all comes back to view!

The night wind stirs in elm and oak,
And up from the mill pond comes the croak
Of the bullfrog's rich bassoon;
And I catch the gleam, as over the brink
There peeps with tremulous, shivering blink
The rim of the crescent moon.

It all comes back from the dusk of time,
With the mournful cadence and swell of rhyme
That is half remembered still—
Like a measure from some forgotten strain,
That hauntingly comes and flees again,
And under a dusky twilight sky
It, mingling, floats with the plaintive cry
Of the desolate whippoorwill.

Service for Christ.

By Robt. C. Chope.

Come, let us loyal be
To Christ, who died for thee:
His praises sing.
Sing forth his wondrous love,
Who came to earth, to prove
His power, to those who choose Christ as their King.

Then shall we know and see
In Him sweet liberty,
In Christ our King.
In praise to God we'll sing,
And loud our voices ring,
And our hearts homage bring,
Our lives to Him.

Thus may we each one find,
Loyal in heart and mind,
For service strong;
May we for union stand
Throughout our glorified land,
One great united band
The song prolong.

So may our service meet
Praise at the mercy-seat,
The praise of Him;
He whom our hearts adore,
He who has gone before,
To heaven's bright peaceful shore,
Shout praise to Him.

Thus may Baraca's band
For loyal service stand
In liberty;
In union may we meet
At our Redeemer's feet,
And find our service sweet
With charity.

A Muscular Christian.

In "A Preacher's Story of His Work," which the Outlook Company is to publish soon, Dr. Rainsford tells some good stories of his experiences when he first took up his work on the East Side in New York. The life was a strenuous one, and muscular Christianity seemed to be the prime essential for success. He says in telling of one of his experiences:

"I remember one man in particular—a big, strong fellow. He came in and sat down in the Sunday-school (by this time I had some of the very best teachers I could find working there, and I always put the best workers I had there) and began to talk in a way that a man should not talk to a lady. He was a little drunk. I saw the lady's face flush; I walked over, and told him to get out. He would not move. I said:

"We are here to help you people; we are paid nothing for it; now, you are enough of a man to respect a lady; why do you sit here and make it impossible for her to teach those boys?"

"He swore at me and would not get out.

"You don't want me to call a policeman, do you? Go out quietly."

"He jumped to his feet, and I saw I was in for a row. He was as big a man as I am. I did not call a policeman, but I hit him harder than I ever hit a man in my life, and knocked him down. Then I stood over him and said:

"Have you had enough?"

"He said, 'Yes.'"

"All right," I answered; "now get out." And he went.

"About three weeks after that we got into a scrimmage outside the Sunday-school room with some toughs, and, to my horror, I saw, elbowing his way through the crowd, this same burly fellow, and I began to feel that, between him and the others, I would be killed, when, to my astonishment, he walked up to the ringleader and said:

"The Doctor and me can clean out this saloon; you get out."

Luck Comes to the Bell-Boy.

"Luck," said a man who believes in it, "comes to different people in different ways. I know a man who is now about as well fixed as most men would want to be, whose luck came to him in helping a man on with an overcoat.

"He was a bell-boy then in a hotel; and one day a big man, who was big and prosperous financially as well as physically, and who had just got his overcoat out of the coat-room, turned to him and said:

"Here, boy, help me on with this coat," at the same time tossing the big coat over to him and turning away. The boy didn't begin to be big enough to do it, and asking him to was just the big man's little joke, for he was a good-natured man; but the next minute the big man felt the coat going upon his shoulders all right. Turning round, he saw the youngster stepping down from a chair which had been standing near and which he had grabbed onto the minute the man turned his back.

"This tickled the big man very much, and he took the small boy into his office, and practically the boy's fortune was made from that minute, for he had the stuff in him to make good, as well as the brains to meet his luck half way when it came."—American Boy.

Humor of a Strike.

Two strikers were picketing the entrance of an alley during the strike at the factory of the Kellogg Switchboard and Supply Company in Chicago last May. A non-union man came out of the factory and started across the street. One of the strikers picked up a brick. As he looked at it an expression of disgust came over his face and he threw it down.

"Why didn't you throw it at that scab?" asked the other striker.

"Because it is a non-union brick."—The World's Work.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

To-day or to-morrow is Christmas—or yesterday—it all depends on when you receive this paper. Anyway, I am sure Christmas is in your hearts, and that's more important, after all, than having it on the calendar. And this Christmas is the very best one that has ever come to the Advance Society, for I can tell you definitely that enough money has been raised to assure us the rest will come in; so we are now adopting our orphan, Little Joe. We haven't the $50 necessary, but we have so near it, that I believe when people read this, they will bring it up to the mark. Some may say, "Don't be sure about that—it's mighty uncertain, this thing of raising money; pretty near as risky as raising peanuts in northern Missouri." Well, we're not dealing in peanuts. If I hadn't had faith in you at the first, I wouldn't have urged this orphan scheme, which, you will remember, was suggested by one of your own number; I shall always be proud of that. I should like to have thought of it myself, but I'm still more pleased that the plan came from the children. And I believe this is a work that will please Jesus, who of course remembers when he was a little child, homeless and driven from his native country. Though, as a little baby, he knew nothing of the manger in which he lay, while other princes dwelt in palaces, his mother must often have told him about it. And so he feels as we cannot for the helpless and homeless, and I do not believe he will let our enterprise fail. When I think of this little boy being adopted by you children, and possibly raised to be a good, therefore a useful man, my heart is thrilled. I'd like to take you all by the hand to-day, or still better, hide behind a corner, and when you come in sight cry, "Christmas gift!" So if you are happy to-day, be more so because we are going to take care of Little Joe; and if you're not happy, get happy as quick as you can, for I know somebody will send enough to make up the last cent. In the meantime, here is a Christmas Honor List: Evelyn Hord, Grayson, Mo. (2nd quarter); Edna Shriver, Nebo, Ill. (3rd); Mary Haymaker, Wichita, Kan.; Nettie Garmer, Kansas City, Mo.; Olive Leavitt, Frankfort, S. D. (7th); Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga, Tenn. (11th); Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo. (20th); Ruth Sampsel (5th), and Mrs. A. D. Sampsel (3rd), Warrensburg, Mo.; May Speece, Bucklin, Mo. (5th); Manie Bayless, Mulkeytown, Ill. (3rd); Carl Per Lee, Grand Rapids, Mich. (4th); Mary Rice, Harrisonville, Mo. (2nd and 3rd); Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo.; Jean Chambers, Richwood, Ky. (6th); Lois Percy, Thomas, Okla. (5th); Evo Hawkins (3rd) and Vina Hawkins (4th), Ozark, Ark.; Susie Canby Searce, Plattsburg, Mo. (5th.)

And now, let's talk. In the first place, I'm ashamed to say I've lost the scrap of paper on which I noted down how much orphan money I reported last week. I can't tell till the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST comes out. Of course by the time you read this, that paper will have been out a week. I hope you've kept it; I know it reports about $36. Anyway I have every cent of it, and the people's names who gave it, in a big blank-book; ever so much bigger than the list of names. To the amount I reported—whatever it is—add $5, which comes from three sisters up in Thorp, Wash., who do not wish their names given. They want to know if Felix is lost. They say, "An old gold cat came to our place as hungry as if it had come all the way from Missouri." That is certainly a good description of Felix, who is usually as hungry as he is old gold; but we could no more lose him than the noses on our faces. Out at Oak Grove school-house, about three miles from here, there was no janitor last year, and the larger girls took turn about sweeping out the room, for which they were paid a few cents; and the smaller girls had a society which raised a little money. Emma Simpson Bland and Susie Searce, two of our members, attend the school. Well, they decided to give all this money, which is quite one dollar and a half, to our orphan. So Emma Simpson brought it in Saturday, with another dollar from her grandmother. And from England comes a money order for 4s. 8d.—now, when you learned your table of "20 shillings make a pound," did you ever dream it would be of use to us? But you see it is—that makes $1.14 in our money. So there you have $8.64 to add to last week's report, whatever it was, which makes about $15. That's why I say I am sure we'll succeed. Next week I'll tell you exactly how much we have; I hope it will reach the $50 mark. Wonder who'll give the penny that makes the sum a round fifty?

I'd like to find a good home for Little Joe, where kind people would take care of him for $50 a year. At present he must stay in the Orphans' Home at St. Louis, where there are over 100 other orphans. But our sending the money helps them to take care of some other child, so you see the good we are doing is very great, even if Joe must stay in the orphanage. I wrote down to the matron to find out something about our Av. S. orphan, and she had eight of the orphan children write to me. In all their letters about the same thing was said, yet each had something different; I give them here, leaving out the facts that are repeated. But I wish I had more room for these letters—two pages of this paper, at least. Yes, I wish I owned the whole CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Dora Ray: "Little Joe is a very bright little fellow; light hair. His meals are at seven, twelve and half-past five. He goes to bed about seven; sleeps with his chum, Chase Brown. He has very correct language—the visitors all take notice of him. All the children love Little Joe. He has a little engine a gentleman gave him. So many children played with it, they tore it all to pieces. He has two wheels yet. He plays horse, driving two boys with a rope. He plays outdoors every day unless too cold, then goes in the boys' playroom in the basement. He and Chase have a fire department; he is most always down there, playing with the engine. He is three feet six inches tall; small feet; a small nose, almost a pug." Another orphan, giving no name, writes: "Little Joe is about five; he has dark brown eyes. He sleeps in the nursery-dormitory with Chase. He is neat and has manners everywhere and at the table. He dresses himself." Mabel Tobias (age thirteen): "Joe is a cute little fellow. He has a large head, and in his large brown eyes you can just see the mischief. He keeps himself very neat; has a pretty expression. He has fun riding the nursery tricycle. It will be a year before he can go to school. He chums with Chase Brown and likes Nellie Meservy very well; and is kind-hearted to help those smaller than himself, and isn't bad very often. He said to-day, 'Is dey any Kissmas toys here? Mit Bell, who is dat ole Tantie Taused, anyway?'" Minnie Altom: "Little Joe is a bright little fellow. He is smart; he loves Nellie Meservy and Miss Letha Belle, our teacher. He and Chase Brown play together most all the time. He takes a nap in the afternoon when nurse thinks best. He is a great favorite among the orphans."

Next week I will print the other letters about Little Joe, and I will tell you what the matron said about him. Now, I have done one thing in your name which I hope you will like. I have sent the matron a dime of our Av. S. orphan fund, asking her to buy our orphan a Christmas present—such as she thinks he will enjoy. I don't mean something useful, I mean something to give fun. I am sure we can spare that much. If our fund lacks a dime of the $50, I'll give the dime myself. And I wrote a letter to be read to him Christmas morning. The letter is this:

"Dear Joe: One day when you were talking to Miss Sue, you said you had no papa, or mamma, or anything. I write this letter to tell you hundreds, yes, thousands, of children love you. They call themselves the Advance Society. Some of them live 'way off; some have no papas or mammas, either. But they are sending money to buy you whatever you need. Some of us pray for you every night, asking God to be a friend to Little Joe, as He will always be, if you are good. We are afraid Santa Claus does not know you very well, so we are sending you a Christmas present. MR. BRECK."

Good Words from Our Friends.

We are delighted to say that subscriptions to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are pouring in on us rapidly and have a large number of strong commendations, as the following will show. Let the friends of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST do their utmost to aid us now in adding 10,000 new names to our list. What a blessing this would be to the homes it would enter! It would require but little effort on your part; so let us hear, please.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST grows better and better. F. W. NORTON.

I think the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a fine paper—the best in the brotherhood. BAXTER WATERS.

I think it is one of the greatest papers published, and will not think of doing without it. T. J. SHUEY.

I like to read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and feel a loss when it does not come to me. A. J. YOUNGBLOOD.

I have been taking the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for thirty-seven or thirty-eight years, and it grows better each year. W. L. KEMMER.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST grows stronger and brighter and more powerful for good in the Master's work while the years are going by. G. D. SELLERS.

I have been taking the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for a good many years. I have several volumes of them, and I prize them very highly. Wish I had more of them. J. R. CRANK.

I think the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is improving of late. Hold it up to its present position, and there will be nothing to hinder the success of the paper in the future. D. R. DUNGAN.

"The dear old 'EVANGELIST' is a source of great pleasure to me. I look forward to its coming with much pleasure, and am disappointed if it is delayed. May God bless you in your great work of love."

May I be allowed to express my deep appreciation of your valuable paper. Could all of our papers manifest the same Christian spirit, they would be able to do better work for the Master. E. JAY TEAGARDEN.

I would like to commend the sweet spirit of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It comes to us week by week, and we grow to see its broad views of vital truths that in the end will make a universal Christian spirit in a universal Christian Church.

MRS. ANNIE HERZOG THOMPSON.

Let me express the pleasure I took in the last number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Being indisposed and confined at home, I gave this issue more than ordinary attention. In the issue of Dec. 10, your paper clearly reaches a high grade of merit. I find it readable, enjoyable, profitable and well worth the while of careful perusal. Among many other good things, I note the especial excellence of the editorial, "The Mystery and Meaning of the Incarnation," and the contribution of N. J. Aylsworth entitled, "The Weakening of Worship." CHAS. P. KANE.

ly deceased, and Hiram Padgett, in organizing a Christian Church at Drakeville, Ia., and these three men were its first elders. He was married twice and had a number of children who survive him. He had been in feeble health for a number of years, but retained the use of his mental faculties in a remarkable degree. He was an elder in the Christian Church for half a century and leaves as the richest legacy to his children, the memory of a faithful and upright life.

A Card.

In the Tokio Christian, W. D. Cunningham states that the foreign society has about $300 which belongs to him. As a matter of fact, the foreign society does not have one penny that belongs to him in its treasury. The facts are these: About a year ago Mr. Cunningham wrote the churches in this country and in Canada, urging them to divide the March offering with him. Some of our best men protested most vigorously against his course, and condemned it in unmeasured terms, on the ground that he had no claim whatever to any part of that offering. In sending their money to the society, a few churches requested that part of it be sent to Mr. Cunningham. They had been led to believe that this would be agreeable to the society. In each case a letter was written to the church, and the facts submitted. The church was informed that the society needed all the money contributed on the first Sunday in March for the support of its own work. It was added that if the church desired it, the money would be promptly returned. On being apprised of the facts, most of the churches instructed the society to use the money in support of its own work. The others requested that the money be returned. In every case this was done.

It should be understood that W. D. Cunningham is not in the employment of the foreign society. He is teaching English in the Japanese school, and is paid by the Japanese government.

This card is published solely in self-defense. A. McLEAN.
